As relevant in this case, the Authority has previously held that an agency's right to determine its internal security practices under 7106(a)(1) of the Statute includes policies and actions which are part of the agency's plan to secure or safeguard its physical property against internal or external risks, to prevent improper or unauthorized disclosure of information or to prevent the disruption of the agency's activities or operations. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 6 (1984) (Union Proposal 2), reversed as to other matters sub nom. FLRA v. OPM, 778 F.2d 844 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

The record in this case indicates that the Agency has a particular need to maintain an honest and reliable workforce. That is, the Customs Service is responsible for the enforcement of customs laws and other related laws against the smuggling of contraband; for the assessment, collection and protection of revenue by levying import duties and taxes; and for the control of carriers, persons and articles entering or departing the United States. The actual establishment of the hotline, for the purpose of reporting criminal conduct is not challenged by the Union. The Authority finds such a hotline constitutes a part of the Agency's internal security plan to maintain the integrity of its operations.

Union Proposals 1 and 2, however, would substantially limit the usefulness of this hotline, by restricting management to the investigation of only criminal allegations from the hotline. To illustrate, pursuit of non-criminal allegations which might lead to revelations of criminal activities by employees is precluded. Moreover, the hotline may not be used as an investigative tool to gather information on employee misconduct that does not involve allegations of criminal activity. Union Proposals 1 and 2 would prevent management from employing every possible means, including the utilization of investigations of non-criminal conduct, to guard against any dishonest or prohibited conduct, whether criminal or not among its employees. Such a limitation is inconsistent with management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. See National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 21 and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, 18 FLRA No. 54 (1985) (the Authority found a proposal nonnegotiable which required that searches be conducted only if authorized by warrant and/or incident to arrest because it would defeat the agency's security plan).

In addition, although the hotline was ostensibly established to enable the Agency to receive information about criminal activity, it is clear that if non-criminal information received on the hotline is investigated, employees may be subject to disciplinary and removal actions. Under the Union's proposals, however, management is specifically prevented from utilizing information acquired through the hotline to initiate investigations into non-criminal matters. Therefore, in these circumstances the Agency is effectively prevented from taking action to discipline or remove employees for improper conduct. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 15 and U.S. Army Armament Munitions and Chemical Command, Rock Island Arsenal, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 6 (1985) (Union Proposal 2) (where a proposal which provided criteria for management's use in determining whether to authorize employee absences was found nonnegotiable as it would prevent the agency from taking disciplinary action against employees on the basis of those absences). Moreover, the proposals' restrictions on the use of discipline also have the effect of preventing management from using discipline as one method to maintain an honest and reliable workforce, that is, to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1). Union Proposals 1 and 2 are therefore inconsistent with management's rights to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) and to take disciplinary actions against employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A).

We turn now to the question of whether the Union's proposals constitute appropriate arrangements within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. Although the Union does not specifically address the adverse impact from management's exercise of its reserved rights under section 7106(a), it is obvious that employees would be subject to disciplinary and adverse actions based on non-criminal information derived from the hotline. The Union's proposed amelioration of this adverse effect would be to totally shield employees from investigation of non-criminal information received through the hotline and any resulting disciplinary action based on such information.

While employees may arguably benefit from a prohibition on investigation of non-criminal matters, on balance, it is outweighed by the negative impact on management's ability to enhance the integrity of Agency operations by investigating improper conduct, criminal or non-criminal, and taking appropriate disciplinary action. It is clearly not in the interest of efficient and effective Government operations to preclude management from utilizing all the information available through the hotline.

Finally, this analysis is not changed by the Union's suggestion, contained in its Reply Brief, that the Agency could designate a separate hotline or another Agency telephone line to receive reports of non-criminal conduct. In the first place, a separate hotline is not a part of the proposals at issue which expressly preclude investigation or the taking of appropriate disciplinary action based on allegations of non-criminal conduct received via the hotline. But, even assuming that this suggestion is an attempt to ameliorate the adverse effects of management's exercise of its rights under 7106(a), it would require that the Agency inform a caller who was reporting employee conduct via the "criminal" hotline that it was necessary to call on another line. The resulting inconvenience to the caller creates the risk that the caller will abandon the attempt to provide the Agency information about employee conduct. Thus, whether the Union's proposals to limit the investigation to reports of criminal matters or the alternative hotlines are considered, the interference with management's rights to determine its internal security practices and take disciplinary and adverse actions is excessive.

B. Union Proposal 3

1. Obligation to Bargain

Contrary to the Agency's claim, there does not appear to be a conflict between Article 3, Section 13 of the National Agreement and Union Proposal 3. That is, a review of the language of Article 3, Section 13 of the National Agreement reveals that the provision requires that an employee be notified as soon as practicable of a written complaint received by management. This provision is clearly different from Union Proposal 3 which would only require that the Union receive a summary of allegations that management obtains through the hotline without identification of the employees concerned. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, Council 147 and Social Security Administration, 17 FLRA 908 (1985) where the Authority determined that the language of a national agreement precluded negotiation of local proposals.

To the extent there are factual issues in dispute between the parties as to the intended application of Article 3, Section 13 in the circumstances of this case, such issues should be resolved in other appropriate proceedings. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984).

2. Management's Right to Determine Its Internal Security Practices

Under Union Proposal 3 the Agency retains the discretion to determine the timing of the release and the nature of the information that will be disclosed as well as the right to take any action necessary to protect confidential information or sources. Because the Agency has not established that Union Proposal 3 interferes with its right to conduct its investigative functions, which is part of its internal security practices, the proposal is within the duty to bargain. Compare National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 9 FLRA 983, 987 (1982) (provision requiring employees to be notified as soon as practicable of written non-criminal complaints concerning that employee found within the duty to bargain) with National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1300 and General Services Administration, 18 FLRA No. 97 (1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1541 (D.C. Cir. Aug. 27, 1985) (proposal prescribing conditions for regular progress reports on on-going investigations concerning employees held nonnegotiable).

3. Inconsistent With the Privacy Act

Although the Agency contends that Union Proposal 3 may violate the Privacy Act, it has failed to point out any part of the proposal which is inconsistent with that statute. It is noted that the plain language of the proposal requires "a summarization of each of the allegations" obtained through the hotline rather than disclosure of the identity of employees involved. Also, as the Union states, the Agency will prepare the summaries and is therefore able to control the content. In these circumstances, the Authority is unable to conclude that there is a violation of the Privacy Act.

V. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that Union Proposals 1 and 2, which would limit the Agency to the investigation of criminal allegations received on the telephone hotline, would excessively interfere with management's right under section 7106(a)(1) to determine its internal security practices and with its right under 7106(a)(2)(B) to discipline and remove employees. Regarding Union Proposal 3, the Authority finds that the Agency has failed to substantiate its contentions that it has no duty to bargain on the proposal, that the proposal violates the Privacy Act or that it interferes with the Agency's right to determine its internal security practices. Thus, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 3, which would require that the Agency furnish the Union with a summary of non-criminal allegations received over the hotline, is within the duty to bargain.*/

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review, insofar as it relates to Union Proposals 1 and 2, be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union Proposal 3.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the General Counsel and the Charging Party filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order, except as modified herein.

Contrary to the General Counsel's assertion, the Authority does not read the Judge's Decision as requiring a finding of intent as an element in establishing a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The Authority has previously held that in deciding whether agency management violates section 7116(a)(1) by removing union documents from a bulletin board, it must be determined whether the conduct would reasonably tend to discourage union activity and support. See U.S. Department of Justice, Federal Prison System, Federal Correctional Institution, Milan, Michigan, 17 FLRA 1023, 1036 (1985). With respect to the Judge's finding of a violation of the Statute in this case based on the Respondent's conduct in prohibiting the Charging Party from posting union literature, the Authority notes the Judge's finding of a past practice whereby the Respondent allowed employees to post notices of all kinds in the teachers' lounge. By comparison, in Federal Election Commission, 20 FLRA No. 3 (1985), the Authority found that management did not violate the Statute by prohibiting the posting of notices since there was no negotiated agreement or past practice authorizing such postings. Finally, as to the Judge's finding of a violation based on the Respondent's interference with the Charging Party's right to gather information to support his charge of an unfair labor practice, the Authority notes that the protected right to file a charge encompasses the right to gather information in support of the charge. See Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, Federal Correctional Institution, Butner, North Carolina, 18 FLRA No. 100 (1985), in which the Authority found that protected activity under section 7102 of the Statute encompasses an employee's right to conduct an investigation on his own time to support a grievance, or in contemplation of filing a grievance.

ORDER*/

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Mediterranean Region, Naples American High School, Naples, Italy, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq., (herein referred to as the Statute).

Upon unfair labor practice charges filed by William Schussel (herein called the Charging Party or Mr. Schussel) on October 25, 1983 and December 7, 1983 against the Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Mediterranean Region Naples American High School, (Naples, Italy) (herein referred to as Respondent DODDS-M or Naples High School), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region I, issued a Consolidated Complaint and Notice of Hearing on February 27, 1984. The Consolidated Complaint alleged that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) by maintaining an overly broad policy regarding the posting of literature in the teachers lounge; and, by prohibiting an employee from gathering information or evidence to support an unfair labor practice charge which had been filed with the Authority.[1]

Respondent's Answer denied the commission of any unfair labor practice.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted in Naples, Italy at which time Respondent and the General Counsel were represented by Counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. All parties filed briefs which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

The record is undisputed that the Overseas Federation of Teachers, (hereinafter called OFT), at all times material herein, was the exclusive representative of all nonsupervisory professional school-level personnel, with certain statutory exclusions not relevant to this matter, employed by DODDS-M at the Naples High School. It is also clear from the record that the Overseas Educational Association (herein referred to as OEA) did not have "equivalent status" with the OFT within DODDS-M or the Naples High School, at any time material herein.

The Naples High School began using its present facility in 1982. As with many schools it provides a teachers' lounge or smoking room containing tables, chairs, lockers and couches to be used by its teachers. Teachers, administrators and administrative staff enter the lounge through the teachers' work room which is connected to the lounge by a short corridor. The lounge is located approximately ten to fifteen feet from the administrative offices. Although school administrators at one time used the teachers' lounge they discontinued use of the lounge and lockers during the 1983-84 school year. The situation now is that administrators such as the vice-prinicipal visit the lounge on both official school and unofficial business. The record therefore, revealed the presence by administrators in other than an official capacity in the teachers lounge and Respondent does not seriously dispute such use by its administrators. Accordingly, it is found that administrators dropped into the lounge often enough to become familiar with its condition and its use.

Since the hearing was held at the school the parties had an opportunity to view or inspect the lounge during the hearing. The inspection revealed approximately forty-eight lockers lining the wall opposite the entrance to the lounge and in plain view of anyone entering. The room also contained six other lockers and a bulletin board. It is uncontraverted that during 1983, a number of teachers posted cartoons, postcards, decals, clippings, messages and other materials, mostly having to do with the school on the outside of their lockers. One teacher, Ms. Jayne Osgood testified that this posting of materials was not unusual and that from time to time during the 1982-83 school year she had attached cut-outs and humorous ads to the outside of her locker and that she had done the same during the fall of 1983, which began a new school year. Ms. Osgood's locker is situated about in the middle of the bank of lockers directly opposite the entrance. Further, Ms. Osgood testified that she was not told by school administrators to remove any of the items from her locker during 1982-83. The practice of posting messages on the outside of lockers was even engaged in by the school administrative staff. This practice continued even after the lockers were painted in late 1983. Even thereafter a teacher posted a sign-up sheet for a drama show on the outside of her locker.[2] The lockers themselves, although painted in late 1983, still bear the marks of having paper or tape attached to their exterior. It is clear, that the posting of materials on the outside of these lockers was at one time a customary practice at Naples High School.

Respondent contends that prior to the 1983-84 school year the Naples High School administration had a policy concerning neatness in the school's facilities, to include the teachers' locker room. This policy according to Respondent included a prohibition against posting of materials on teachers mailboxes/lockers. The physical evidence and testimony reveals that the observance of this policy had been "a little lax." Respondent contends however, that with a new school principal assuming the chief administrator's postion for 1983-84 school year the neatness policy, including the prohibition against posting of materials on teacher's mailboxes and lockers, was reaffirmed and publicized both orally and in writing during the 1983-84 school year.[3] However, when asking Mr. Schussel to remove his materials, the neatness policy, as we later see, was never mentioned to him.

[2] This posting prompted a memorandum from Mr. Migliaccio to the teacher involved and is Respondent's only evidence bearing on its "neatness" policy as set forth above. Despite that warning note the evidence shows that sign-up sheets for drama performances, etc., are still posted in the lounge.

[3] Respondent in support of its neatness position submitted into evidence a faculty bulletin dated November 10, 1982 from Mr. Migliaccio which reminded everyone that "[a]announcements, posters and similar items must not be tacked, stapled or taped to any walls", but makes no mention of lockers or bulletin boards.

During the early part of September 1983 the OFT local representative Ms. Colette Grillo met with Assistant Principal Migliaccio and informed him of OEA material posted on the mailboxes/lockers. Ms. Grillo also informed Mr. Migliaccio that if the administration did not take action to have the material removed, she would file an unfair labor practice charge with the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

Based on the above-cited physical evidence and record testimony indicating a lax or non-existent neatness policy, at least with respect to the teachers lounge, it is found that no such neatness policy existed or if it existed it was never enforced prior to the 1983-84 school year. Respondent therefore, had no established policy prohibiting posting materials on lockers. In short, it appears that Respondent simply was not concerned with the teachers' use of their lockers until Mr. Schussel's display of OEA material aroused the ire of local union representative, Colette Grillo.

In August 1983, Mr. Schussel, an Industrial Arts teacher employed at the school since 1982-83, attached a clipboard to the outside of his locker by means of a sheet metal tab. The clipboard was easily removable. In addition to the clipboard, Schussel placed an OEA insignia decal, which had an adhesive backing and could be removed without damaging the locker's finish, on his locker. Mr. Schussel's locker is one of those facing the entrance to the lounge. Schussel placed several memoranda and bulletins on the clipboard published by OEA allegedly describing OEA's efforts and accomplishments in collective bargaining with DODDS. Mr. Schussel according to record testimony was formerly an OEA Area Director in the Pacific Region before his employment in Naples. During 1983-84, Schussel remained a member of OEA and an officer in OEA.

Around September 19, 1983, Vice-Prinicipal Migliaccio ordered Mr. Schussel to remove the clipboard. When the clipboard was not removed on the following day, Mr. Migliaccio informed Mr. Schussel that unless he removed "all the OEA material from government property by the end of the school day," disciplinary action would be taken against him. Migliaccio also directed another teacher Jesse Gonzalez, who was present in the locker room, to remove an OEA insignia decal which Gonzalez had attached to his locker, or to similarly be disciplined. Mr. Schussel inquired whether he could put the same items on the teachers' lounge bulletin board used by teachers for ads and messages. Migliaccio replied, "no where in this High School may you display anything that belongs to any other organization other than the organization that is represented in this school." Schussel and Gonzalez then complied by removing the clipboard and decals. During this same period of time other teachers continued to display a variety of cartoons, decals and similar materials on their lockers.

The evidence firmly suggests that Migliaccio ordered Schussel to remove the OEA material because the OFT local representative, Ms. Grillo, complained of its posting and threatened to file an unfair labor practice charge, and not because Migliaccio acted on his own initiative after seeing the clipboard. Migliaccio's testimony describes the clipboard as a "danger and a safety hazard," something he "bumped into" before seeing. Mr. Migliaccio made no mention of such a hazard in his directives to Schussel.

School administration was aware of Schussel's use of the clipboard long before September 19, 1983. Schussel's testimony confirms that the clipboard hung on his locker in the spring 1983 and stands uncontradicted.

In late November 1983, the School administration again directed Mr. Schussel in writing, to remove material from his locker. On this occasion, Schussel placed a "Support NTEU" label and miscellaneous non-union items on the clipboard. One week later, in late November or early December, 1983 the administration issued a "Special Faculty Bulletin" prohibiting the "posting of materials of organizations other than the elected and exclusively recognized organization[s]." The intent of this Bulletin admittedly was to prohibit the posting of such material anywhere in the School, including the teachers' lounge. Apparently the bulletin led to confusion among the teachers as to which material could be affixed to lockers. Such confusion is understandable in view of the practice tolerated the previous year. At almost the same time the administration announced in early December 1983 that all lockers would be painted during the Christmas break, and consequently all material had to be removed from the face of the lockers.

Minutes of the December 8, 1983 Joint Labor Management Committee meeting reveal the following:

> Federal rules have for years prohibited any labor organization, other than the exclusively recognized groups, from posting materials except during election campaigns. Management feels that the minutes of this JLMC should once and for all establish clearly for all employees what the policy is regarding the placing of materials on government-owned teacher-assigned messages/mailboxes. And, again, Management expresses it regrets if this has caused a problem for any employee.

After filing the charge in Case No. 1-CA-40036, approximately a month later, in early December 1983, Schussel distributed a questionnaire to the teachers by putting it into their lockers one morning before the start of classes. Mr. Schussel testified that he developed the questionnaire in order to find out whether other teachers were aware of a past practice or policy prohibiting posting material on lockers. The following day, December 1, 1983 Schussel received a letter from Mr. Migliaccio, ordering Schussel to "cease and desist from polling in this school." Schussel admittedly had not informed the school administration of his intent to distribute the questionnaire. In explanation of the letter, Migliaccio testified that Ms. Grillo complained about the "polling" and demanded that the school administration do something about it. Ms. Grillo confirms that she threatened to file an unfair labor practice charge regarding the polling. The reference in Migliaccio's letter to "polling" apparently comes from Article 32[4] of the OFT-DODDS-M collective bargaining agreement. Reliance on that Article seems misplaced since it addresses surveys conducted by "Management" and not, as Migliaccio stated in the letter to Schussel, by "only the OFT representative." The above interpretation indeed is supported by the testimony of union representative Grillo. The cited Article without question is inapplicable to Schussel's distribution of the questionnaire. Migliaccio however, claimed that the School "always" had a policy requiring teachers to submit "formal things" to the administration before distributing them although this was not the reason cited to Schussel for the "policy."

During the hearing, Migliaccio admitted that the questionnaire could have been a sensible device to gather information on the unfair labor practice charge. To Ms. Grillo, the questionnaire "obviously"could have been a method to gather information on the charge. Respondent did not show that Schussel's distribution of the questionnaire through the lockers caused any interference with the School's operation. In fact the evidence tends to establish that the method used by Schussel here was a common practice followed by other teachers and organizations at the School when distributing information.

Discussion and Conclusions

1. Whether a defective charge requires that the complaint be quashed in this matter.

Respondent raises procedural questions which of necessity must be considered prior to addressing the substantive issues in this matter. Respondent contends, in essence, that no valid charge was filed and that under Section 2423.4 of the Authority's rules and regulations since there is no valid charge all that follows is defective.[5]

[4] Article 32 states, in pertinent part:

> Section 1.
> No teacher will be required by Management to respond to any surveys involving personnel policies, practices or working conditions without prior approval of the Union.

[5] 5 C.F.R. Section 2423.4, "Contents of the charge; supporting evidence and documents," states:

> "(a) A charge alleging violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116 shall be submitted on forms prescribed by the Authority and shall contain the following:

The hyper-technical arguments submitted by Respondent to support this contention are wide of the mark. It has long been recognized in administrative matters such as this that a charge is not a pleading. The charge serves merely to initiate an investigation and to determine whether a complaint in a matter should be issued. A charge has consistently been held to be sufficient for the above purposes in administrative proceedings if it informs the alleged violator of the general nature of the violation charged against him to preserve the evidence relating to the matter. Moreover, the Authority has adopted at least in priniciple a rule that where a procedural defect exists concerning the charge, a respondent must be prejudiced by the alleged defect. See Department of the Army, Harry Diamond Laboratories, Adelphi, Maryland, 9 FLRA 575 (1982). Here Respondent made no effort to show prejudice, but relies merely on what it views as a technical defect. I see no reason, based on Respondent's submission, to quash the complaint herein because of a defective charge. To do so, in my view, would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute in this matter.

2. Whether the "equivalent status" rule applies or whether the real issue is one of access to the facility by an individual in nonwork areas during nonwork hours.

Respondent maintains that it had two legitimate reasons for directing Schussel to remove OEA materials from his locker. First, based upon legitimate managerial concerns, no material of any type was to be posted on teachers' mailboxes. And second, to have allowed the use of its facilities for the posting of OEA materials would expose it to valid unfair labor practice charges.

The initial contention of Respondent is not supported by the record. Contrary to Respondent's insistence, the record shows at best a lax neatness policy which it is not clear was ever applied to teachers.

Before moving to the second contention, I must agree with the General Counsel that this case does not concern the principle of "equivalent status" which Respondent assumed would expose it to a valid unfair labor practice charge by the incumbent union. Respondent's reliance on Perry Education Association v. Perry Local Educators Association, U.S. Sup. Ct.,

> "(3) A clear and concise statement of the facts constituting the alleged unfair labor practice charge, a statement of the section(s) and subsection(s) of Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code alleged to have been violated, and the date and place of occurrence of the particular acts;

Case No. 81-896, February 23, 1983, dealing with a public school internal mail system is completely misplaced.6/ There the question involved whether the school district should provide access to communication facilities such as access to teachers mailboxes and the right to use the interschool mail delivery system. The question was whether the access could be provided to the exclusive representative of bargaining unit employees without having to provide equal access to rival unions.7/ Here, Schussel and Gonzalez were not using the mailboxes or lockers of others, but were using their own lockers to disseminate information much in the same way other teachers had done in the past. The thing that distinguishes Perry, as the General Counsel points out in brief, is that neither Schussel nor Gonzalez was acting as a labor organization nor were they seeking to rival the incumbent by their actions. The equivalent status rule was designed to deal with demands of competing labor organizations for equal access by non-employee agents to an agency's premises and for use by those organizations of an agency's services and facilities during organizational campaigns. The rule was not intended to prohibit or restrict employees on their own time from engaging in solicitation or distribution of literature although on the agency's premises. As the Court pointed out in Perry, fn. 11, the courts have frequently invalidated restrictions that prohibit individual employees from distributing union literature during nonwork hours in nonwork areas. This is that type of case. Here Respondent made no showing that its application of the rule to Schussel was necessary to preserve discipline among teachers or that it was justified by any special circumstances, including its so called neatness policy.

The question to be resolved here is not one of "equivalent status" but, whether an agency can prohibit distribution of literature on nonwork time in a nonwork area for the reasons asserted by Respondent. That question has been answered previously by the Authority. See, Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 6 FLRA 159 (1981); Internal Revenue Service, North Atlantic Service Center, Andover, Massachusetts, 7 FLRA 596 (1982). Respondent reasons that it would be subject to a valid unfair labor practice charge if Schussel were allowed to post his decal and clipboard on his locker, a practice established to have been prevalent among many of the teachers at Naples High. A practice that prior to the 1983-84 school year was unrestricted until the incumbent complained that Schussel was posting rival literature on his locker. Interestingly, Respondent never sought to prevent Schussel from carrying a shopping bag with an OEA symbol, a practice, in my view, which was almost identical to the conduct which it threatened to discipline him about here.

6/ Respondent obviously did not read the facts in the Perry case, for even there the PLEA, which was not the exclusive representative of the teachers involved was not prevented from "using the school facilities to communicate with teachers. PLEA may post notices on school bulletin boards; may hold meetings on school property after hours; and may, with the approval of the building principals, make announcements on the public address system . . ." considerable more than which is involved in this matter.

7/ In view of the above rulings it is unnecessary to rule of the General Counsel's Motion to Strike Portions of Respondent's Brief or Respondent's reply to that motion.

The exercise of opportunities to solicit or distribute literature is paramount to the right conferred by section 7102 of the Statute, "to form, join or assist any labor organization. . . ." Surely Respondent realizes that there are ongoing efforts between labor organizations to show that their product is better. In pursuit of these goals they often distribute literature to facilities which are already organized by their competitors. Their competitors no doubt complain about these efforts. Those complaints, alone, however, are no reason to inhibit that distribution. Here Respondent reacted to the complaints by promulgating a broad rule prohibiting all distribution of literature in a nonwork area without regard to whether it was done on nonwork time. Such a broad policy undoubtedly carries an inhibiting effect on others who might in the future wish to exercise section 7102 rights and seek ouster of the bargaining representative. The rule as announced and practiced by Respondent has the effect of freezing out any other union or entrenching the incumbent by infringing on the section 7102 rights of dissident employees. A desirable result for the incumbent, but certainly contrary to an employee right to form, join, or assist any labor organization. In this same vein, the Authority has long recognized that where an agency grants its employees a privileged means of communication, such as a bulletin board for posting a variety of non-work-related personal items and messages, the agency may not prohibit the posting of messages and notices related to unions and collective bargaining. Department of Labor, Office of Workers' Compensation Programs, Branch of Special Claims, 11 FLRA 77 (1983). In that case, the Authority held that the respondent agency unlawfully removed from the employees' bulletin board, commonly used for personal notices, cards, etc., a notice announcing the appointment of union stewards.

I am in agreement with the General Counsel that Respondent's defense is based on its apparent misreading of the "equivalent status" rule and its preoccupation with Schussel's position with OEA. For purposes of this case those preoccupations are fatal since it clearly establishes that the Naples School policy was established only to suppress Schussel's views.

Respondent portrays this case as an attempt to provide OEA or Schussel acting as an agent for OEA, the same or equivalent services and facilities which OFT has obtained in bargaining. The facts as shown by the record are that Respondent has allowed its employees to post items on the exterior of their lockers and also to use a bulletin board in the teachers' lounge without restraints. Schussel, too, as an individual employee or other dissidents have the right to use those facilities without being subject to discriminatory restraints in their use of that opportunity. In view of the evidence and applicable case law it is my conclusion that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by maintaining and enforcing a policy, first announced to Schussel and Gonzales in September, 1983 and later promulgated in the "Special Faculty Bulletin" prohibiting the posting or display, on lockers or on anywhere else in the lounge, or the School for that matter, of OEA and NTEU literature and/or insignia.

Since the record clearly reveals that the actual reason for the policy was Respondent's misapplication of the "eqivalent status" rule, I also reject Respondent's alternate argument that management had legitimate concerns about materials of any type being posted on the teachers' mailboxes and lockers. Indeed this is or may be a legitimate concern but, the record establishes beyond doubt that this reason was pretextual and was not the reason Respondent asserted to Schussel as early as September 1983.

3. Whether an individual has a right to gather information in support of an unfair labor practice charge by reasonable means.

Respondent seemingly sees this matter as a castigatory proceeding for Schussel, who it views as a dissident troublemaker intent on harassing the local school administration. In so doing Respondent ignores fundamental statutory rights afforded individuals. It has already been found that Schussel filed an unfair labor practice charge with regard to Respondent's threatened disciplinary action on his distribution of OEA and NTEU literature. It is my opinion that individuals are entitled to gather information to support charges filed with the Authority at any stage of the proceedings. Furthermore, the gathering of such information is not limited to conventional means. Any theory asserted which would prevent information gathering in support of a charge would certainly be a novel one. The only question here is whether the method used by Schussel was a reasonable one. In view of the fact that both the incumbent representative and administrator Migliaccio, in essence, testified upon seeing Schussel's questionnaire which was distributed to other teachers, that it could be construed as a reasonable means of gathering the necessary information, dispells in my mind any inferences to the contrary. Accordingly, it is found that Schussel employed a traditional means of gathering information in the Naples High School and that his placing questionnaires for teachers to respond to in support of his unfair labor practice charge was certainly a reasonable method of gathering evidence in support of his charge with the Authority.

Respondent raises several reasons why Schussel's distribution of the questionnaire was improper. However, Respondent has not shown how Schussel's distribution of the questionnaire hindered Respondent's use of its property, the teachers' mailboxes. Respondent cites a contract provision which on its face is inapplicable to the circumstances, and a policy of approval which, even if it was substantiated by this record, would reasonably tend to deter an employee from filing unfair labor practice charges and gathering information needed to support its position. In this case Schussel could hardly have devised a more efficient means of gathering information and caused no proven interference with the daily functioning or discipline of the School. Schussel dropped the questionnaire in lockers on his own time and there is no showing that he caused teachers to use work time in responding. Schussel did not compel or pressure teachers to respond to the questionnaire. Indeed, as the questionnaire did not seek names or other identifying information, confidentiality was assured to respondents and non-participants alike. Respondent's description of locker 'drops' as the "School mail distribution system" is no more than semantics.

Respondent's contention that once an unfair labor practice charge is filed, only the Office of the General Counsel may conduct an investigation of the charge lacks merit. This position ignores not only statutory policy but, the practicalities of the situation designed to facilitate the investigation and processing of unfair labor practice charges (for example, Section 7131(c) provides for official time) "consistent with the requirement of an effective and efficient Government," as set forth in Section 7101. The gathering of information by a charging party at any stage of a proceeding, through reasonable means and without engaging in flagrant misconduct seemingly assists all sides in obtaining a speedy resolution of the matter.

Respondent also contends that it was unaware of the unfair labor practice charge at the time it ordered Schussel to "cease and desist" distributing the questionnaire, and therefore cannot be found liable. I do not agree. Schussel distributed the questionnaire about one month after the filing and service of the charge in Case No. 1-CA-40036 giving Respondent ample time to be aware that an unfair labor practice action as being taken against it. It can reasonably be inferred from the facts that that Respondent was aware or should have been aware that an unfair labor practice charge existed. Respondent does not deny service of the charge, but only the particular date alleged. Here the questionnaire was clearly related to the unfair labor practice charge and Schussel's conduct in distributing it was well within the bounds of protected activity. It logically follows that Respondent's directive in these circumstances that he "cease and desist" naturally tended to interfere with Schussel's exercise of statutory rights, and so violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. Thus, Respondent never inquired as to the nature of the questionnaire, but proceeded to admonish Schussel. Such action when there was a valid charge was at its peril.

Accordingly, it is found that Respondent's conduct in directing Schussel to cease and desist distribution of the questionnaire designed to gather information to support an unfair labor practice charge filed with the Authority violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

Having found that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to 5 U.S.C. Section 7118(a)(7) and Section 2423.26 of the Final Rules and Regulations, U.S. Fed. Reg. 3482, 3510 (1980), it is hereby ordered that Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Mediterranean Region, Naples American High School:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Maintaining or enforcing an overly broad and/or discriminatory policy regarding the posting or displaying of literature or insignia of any labor organization on employees' lockers or employees' bulletin boards.

(b) Prohibiting employees from gathering information and evidence to support an unfair labor practice charge filed with the Federal Labor Relations Authority.

(c) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any employee in the exercise of the rights guaranteed by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action designed and found necessary to effectuate the policies of the Statute:

(a) Permit William Schussel, Jesse Gonzalez and other employees to display literature and insignia of any labor organization on employees' lockers and employees' bulletin boards.

(b) Rescind and revoke the Special Faculty Bulletin issued in December 1983 concerning posting of materials of organizations other than the elected and exclusively recognized organization[s].

(c) Rescind and remove from its files the November 30, 1983 letter to William Schussel directing him to remove materials from his locker, and any other memoranda or documentation on the subject of Schussel's posting of union literature and insignia on his locker.

(d) Rescind and revoke its December 6, 1983 letter to William Schussel directing him to cease and desist from distributing a questionnaire for the purpose of gathering information and evidence to support an existing unfair labor practice charge.

(e) Post at its school within the Mediterranean Region copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix." Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for Region 1 after being signed by an authorized representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof, and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Notify the Regional Director for Region I in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, what steps it has taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and raises issues concerning the negotiability of fourteen Union proposals.[1]

II. Union Proposal 1

Article 1, Section 4.

In the interest of the employee's health, the Employer agrees to pay all costs associated with annual eye examinations, physical examinations and all devices associated with job-related better health, such as eye

[1] The Union has withdrawn two proposals from its appeal in this case: Proposal 6, concerning the filing of financial statements by employees' spouses, and Proposal 12, concerning employees' evaluations of their supervisors. Union Reply to Agency Statement of Position at 4. These proposals will not be considered further here.

> glasses, hearing aids, etc. In addition, the Employer agrees to pay on an annual basis, the deductible cost associated with most medical insurance programs.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with law, 5 U.S.C. § 8906, and applicable Government-wide regulation, 5 C.F.R. § 890.501. The Agency also contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(2) because it conflicts with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Finally, the Agency contends that the proposal violates its right to determine its organization under section 7106(a)(1). The Union disputes each of the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Under existing Authority precedent, we find that the proposal is nonnegotiable for reasons other than those alleged by the Agency. In particular, Union Proposal 1 would require the Agency to pay the cost of various medical expenses, including but not limited to medical, eye, and dental examinations which would also be covered by medical insurance provided employees under chapter 89 of title 5 of the United States Code.

Under chapter 89 of title 5 of the U.S. Code, almost all Federal employees are eligible for health insurance, a portion of the cost of which is paid by the Federal Government.[2] The term "employee" as used in chapter 89 is defined in 5 U.S.C. § 8901[3] to include, under 5 U.S.C. § 2105,[4] persons "appointed in the civil service" by "the head of a Government controlled corporation." See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217, 218 (1981) (FDIC is a "Government corporation"). "Government controlled corporation" is defined as a Government corporation which is not a Government owned corporation. 5 U.S.C. § 103(2).[5] Under 31 U.S.C. § 9101, the FDIC is a "mixed-ownership corporation" and not a "wholly owned Government corporation."[6] Therefore, the FDIC is not a Government owned corporation but, in terms of 5 U.S.C. § 103, a "Government controlled corporation." Compare National Treasury Employees Union and Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation, 9 FLRA 692 (1982), aff'd mem. sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 711 F.2d 420 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation is a corporation owned by the Government under 5 U.S.C. § 103 because it is a wholly owned Government corporation under 31 U.S.C. § 9101). Employees of the FDIC are thus "employees" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. § 8901 who are covered by the health insurance provisions of chapter 89. More specifically, they are covered by the limitations in that chapter on Government contributions to the costs of such insurance.

So interpreted, Union Proposal 1 has the same effect as Union Proposal 17 in Fort Bragg Unit of North Carolina Association of Educators, National Education Association and Fort Bragg Dependents Schools, Fort Bragg, North Carolina, 12 FLRA 519, 523-26 (1983), which would have required the agency to provide "employer-paid" medical and dental insurance. In that case, the Authority held that the amount which a Federal Government agency must contribute to the cost of employee health insurance is set forth in 5 U.S.C. § 8906 and, therefore, is a matter which is "specifically provided for by Federal statute" under section 7103(a)(14)(C) so as to be excluded from those "conditions of employment" over which an agency can be required to bargain under the Statute.

For the reasons set forth in Fort Bragg Dependents Schools, Union Proposal 1 in this case, which similarly requires Agency contributions to the costs of employee health insurance, is excluded from the definition of "conditions of employment." Therefore, the proposal is outside the duty to bargain. In view of our decision, we do not need to decide whether the proposal is inconsistent with law, 5 U.S.C. § 8906, whether it violates management's rights under section 7106(a)(1), or whether the Agency has shown that it is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

III. Union Proposal 2

Article 29, Section 30.

> Personnel taking maternity leave will be allowed to take all available leave accrued and then begin a period of up to six months leave without pay.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 2 is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work and because it conflicts with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Federal personnel laws and regulations contain no provision for maternity leave as a separate type of leave. Absence from duty for maternity reasons is a combination of sick leave, annual leave, and leave without pay. See Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S13-2 and 3.

Union Proposal 2 requires the Agency to grant an employee's request for up to six months of leave without pay for maternity reasons after such employee has used all available sick and annual leave. As such, the proposal precludes the Agency from requiring the employee to return to work at any point during the period covered by the request, even if the employee is able to do so and the Agency determines it has need of the employee's services.7/ Union Proposal 2 in this case has the same effect as Union Proposal 4 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2263 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 1606th Air Base Wing (MAC), Kirtland Air Force Base, New Mexico, 15 FLRA 580 (1984). The proposal at issue in that case required that supervisors grant leave in all cases where the need is clearly documented on the request for leave. The Authority held, relying on its decision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), affirmed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982), that the proposal nullified management's ability to determine when assigned work will be performed. The Authority found, therefore, that the proposal directly interfered with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

For the reasons set forth in the Bureau of the Public Debt and Kirtland Air Force Base decisions, Union Proposal 2 directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and is outside the Agency's duty to bargain.[8] In view of our decision, we do not have to decide whether the Agency has shown that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

IV. Union Proposal 3

Article 29, Section 42.

> If the FOS [Field Office Supervisor] is to justify why specific examiners are or are not to write certain jobs to the Regional Office, the FOS is to notify the prospective EIC [Examiner In Charge] concerned.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal does not concern a matter affecting conditions of employment of unit employees because it relates to matters wholly internal to management. The Agency also contends that the proposal violates management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Union disputes the Agency's contentions and argues that the proposal is procedural in nature and negotiable under section 7106(b)(2) and (3).

[8] An agency's determination as to the amount of leave to grant an employee for maternity reasons is subject to applicable law and regulation. See FPM Supplement 990-2, chap. 630, subchap. S13-3 and 6.

B. Analysis

1. Conditions of Employment

Contrary to the Agency's contention, we find that the proposal concerns management's decision to assign or not assign work to employees, which is a matter affecting conditions of employment.

2. Management Rights

Union Proposal 3 requires that an employee be notified by the field office supervisor [FOS] whenever higher level management makes an inquiry regarding the assignment of work to a particular employee. The proposal, therefore, would provide an employee with information as to internal management discussions and deliberations concerning its work assignments.

The Authority has consistently held that the management rights enumerated in section 7106 of the Statute encompass not only the right to act but also the right to discuss and deliberate concerning the relevant factors upon which decisions as to the exercise of those rights will be made.9/ Moreover, the Authority has held that proposals which require union participation in such discussions and deliberations pertaining to the exercise of management's rights are not procedures but are a part of management's substantive decision-making process. They would have the effect of directly interfering in management's statutory right to make the decisions involved. See, for example, Homestead Air Force Base, (union observers at management conferences regarding decisions to contract out work nonnegotiable); VA Medical Center, (union participation on committees which decide, among other things, whether to remove probationary employees nonnegotiable); National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Headquarters, Lowry Technical Training Center (ATC), Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 11 FLRA 565, 566-68 (1983) (Union Proposal 1) (union participation on panel to determine selective factors nonnegotiable).

While the cited cases concern union involvement in internal management discussions and deliberations, and the proposal here concerns access to those deliberations by an employee, the substantive impact on management's decision-making is the same. In both instances, an outside party is interjected into, and acquires knowledge of, management's internal decision-making process. Union Proposal 3 directly interferes with the deliberative process associated with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. In so holding, we note that the Union provides no support for the conclusion, nor is it otherwise apparent, that the proposal constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). See National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), in which the Authority discussed the approach it will take in deciding cases involving section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 3 directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and is outside the Agency's duty to bargain.

V. Union Proposal 4

Article 29, Section 49.

Transferees should have the option of temporarily performing in their new field office prior to making a final decision to move.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal interferes with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The Union contends that the proposal is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2).

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 4 would provide an employee with the option of a temporary reassignment prior to a transfer or permanent reassignment to a different field office. Union Proposal 4 in this case has the same effect as Union Proposal 3 in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1395 and Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Center, Chicago, Illinois, 14 FLRA 408, 411-12 (1984). The proposal at issue in that case provided that employees who were performing unsatisfactorily had the option of reassignment to another position of the same grade. The Authority held, relying on its decision in International Organization of Masters, Mates, and Pilots and Panama Canal Commission, 11 FLRA 115, 119-20 (1983), that by subjecting management's decision concerning reassignment of an employee to the control of that employee's decision to seek reassignment, the proposal directly interfered with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Similarly, Union Proposal 4 provides employees with the right to determine whether or not they will be transferred. The proposal, therefore, directly interferes with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and is not a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2).

For the reasons more fully set forth in the Authority's Panama Canal Commission and Great Lakes Program Center decisions, Union Proposal 4 is outside the Agency's duty to bargain. See also National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, San Francisco, California, 14 FLRA 65, 71-72 (1984).

VI. Union Proposal 5

Article 29, Section 55.

It is agreed to allow travel time on Monday and Friday to include carry over assignments.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is barred from negotiation by the Agency's travel regulations, for which a compelling need exists under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute. The Union disputes the Agency's contention.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Under existing Authority precedent, we find the proposal nonnegotiable for reasons other than those alleged by the Agency. It appears that Union Proposal 5 is intended to permit employees an unlimited amount of travel time to return to their residences on Friday from a temporary assignment which is outside their normal commuting area and, on Monday, to return to that assignment, if it has not been completed. The proposal would grant an unlimited amount of time, normally spent performing work, for purposes of travel.

5 U.S.C. $ 6101(b)(2) requires agencies to schedule, to the maximum extent practicable, time spent in travel status during regularly scheduled duty time.10/ However, the proposal, by granting employees a right to unlimited travel time, would prevent the Agency from requiring employees to travel during nonduty time in those circumstances where it was determined that travel during duty time was not practicable, that is, where other alternatives to accomplishing a work assignment and still scheduling travel during a portion of the workday were not practicable.

> (b)(2) To the maximum extent practicable, the head of an agency shall schedule the time to be spent by an employee in a travel status away from his official duty station within the regularly scheduled workweek of the employee.

See also 5 C.F.R. $ 610.123 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation General Travel Regulations, paragraph 1208(a), which authorizes up to two hours for travel on Friday and Monday in circumstances involving "carry over assignments."

Interpreted in this way, the proposal has the same effect as the proposals at issue in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3424 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, San Francisco, California, 14 FLRA 79 (1984) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA 446 (1983). In those decisions, the Authority held that, by precluding management from requiring employees to work a full workday and to travel on nonduty time where other alternatives were not practicable, the disputed proposals directly interfered with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

For the reasons set forth more fully in the Federal Home Loan Bank Board decisions, Union Proposal 5 directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and is outside the Agency's duty to bargain. In view of our decision, we do not have to decide whether the Agency has shown that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

> Article 29, Section 67.
> When employees commute to and from their residence and are out over 10-hours they will receive $8.00 plus mileage and other expenses.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency's sole contention is that the proposal is barred from negotiation by a provision of its travel regulations for which a compelling need exists. The Union disputes the Agency's contention.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

As a "Government controlled corporation" the FDIC is not subject to statutory and regulatory provisions governing travel on official business for the Government. 5 U.S.C. § 5701. Consequently, Agency policies regarding such travel are established by internal regulations. The internal regulation relied on by the Agency to bar Union Proposal 7 is Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation General Travel Regulations (FDIC GTRs), paragraph 1205(a).[11] The regulation establishes the criteria which the Agency uses to determine whether to compensate employees whose duties on any given day require a commute which is significantly longer than normal. The Agency argues that the proposal, by shortening the time period to an amount close to that which would be required for commuting to and from work, negates the intent of its regulation to compensate employees whose commute, due to unusual circumstances, requires an inordinate amount of time. In support for this regulatory policy, the Agency contends that it is essential for there to be Agency-wide uniformity on this matter so as to provide equitable treatment for its employees.

The compelling need provisions of the Statute are meant to insure that otherwise negotiable bargaining proposals are taken outside the duty to bargain only if the agency involved demonstrates and justifies an overriding need for the policies reflected in the rules or regulations to be uniformly applied throughout the agency. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217, 220 (1981). Therefore, an agency must (1) identify a specific agency-wide regulation; (2) show that there is a conflict between its regulation and the proposal; and (3) demonstrate that its regulation is supported by a compelling need with reference to the Authority's standards set forth in section 2424.11 of its Regulations. See American Federation of Government > a. Commuting. Reimbursement in connection with travel of 24 hours or less, when lodging is not required, will be claimed on the basis of subsistence plus transportation. Subsistence is reimbursable at $8.00 for any day on which official duty requires both of the following:

> (1) Absence from residence exceeding 11 hours
> Transportation includes actual cost of public transportation and/or mileage at the prescribed rate, tolls, and parking costs. [Emphasis in original.]

Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 451, 454 (1980). Generalized and conclusionary reasoning is not enough to support a finding of compelling need. The Authority is not in a position on its own to determine the purposes Agency regulations are designed to achieve or the importance the Agency attaches to those regulations. Unless the Agency provides us with facts and arguments bearing on each of these questions, we cannot judge the validity of the Agency's contentions.[12]

In this case, the Agency has failed to indicate on which of the Authority's compelling need criteria it relies and makes no attempt to demonstrate that the cited regulation meets the requirements of those criteria. The Agency has merely made general statements as to how important its regulation is. The Authority does not have in the record before it, therefore, the facts and arguments which permit it to make a reasoned judgment on the Agency's claims. The Agency has not met its burden and its claim of compelling need cannot be sustained.

The Agency has not shown that Union Proposal 7 is barred by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists and, therefore, the proposal is within the Agency's duty to bargain.[13]

Cir. 1982), affirming National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574 (1981).

[13] Our decision with respect to Union Proposal 7 does not mean that we would not, in different circumstances, find that a compelling need exists for this regulation. Of course, as the Authority has consistently stated, see note 34 infra, our determination that a proposal is negotiable is not a judgment on the merits of that proposal.

> Service, the Employer agrees that all within grade increases will be on an annual basis and the present practice of 2 and 3 year intervals be discontinued.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, Federal Personnel Manual, chapter 531, subchapter 4, paragraph 4-7. The Agency also contends that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis

1. Inconsistent with Government-wide Regulation

Union Proposal 8 would eliminate the waiting period for within-grade increases at steps 5 through 10 of each grade of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation pay schedule. For employees covered by the Federal General Schedule pay system the waiting periods for within-grade increases of steps 5 through 10 of each grade are mandated by law, 5 U.S.C. $ 5335(a)[14] and Government-wide regulation, 5 C.F.R. $ 531.405.[15] The FDIC, however, is a "Government controlled corporation" within the meaning of 5 U.S.C. $ 103(2). See Union Proposal 1 above. Under 5 U.S.C. $ 5331(a)[16] and 5 U.S.C. $ 5102(a)(1)(i),[17] therefore, employees of the FDIC are not covered by the General Schedule pay system and, in particular, are not subject to the statutory and regulatory provisions as to waiting periods for within-grade increases. See National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 207 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 598, 610 (1984) (Member Haughton dissenting), appeal docketed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, No. 84-1286 (D.C. Cir. July 6, 1984) (Decision on Remand, 21 FLRA No. 36 (1986)). Thus, the proposal is not outside the duty to bargain because it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation. The regulation in question does not apply to FDIC employees and the decision of the FDIC to follow the regulatory provisions establishing waiting periods for within-grade increases does not bring its employees within the coverage of those regulations.

2. Compelling Need

Based on the record, it appears that the Agency, in its own internal regulations, has promulgated the same requirements as to waiting periods for a within-grade increase as are set forth in 5 C.F.R. § 531.405.[18] The Agency claims that a "compelling need" exists for this regulation specifically citing only section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.[19] As indicated above, FDIC employees are not subject to statutory and regulatory requirements as to waiting periods for within-grade increases. The Agency's internal regulation, therefore, does not implement a nondiscretionary mandate of law or regulatory authority, as the Agency claims. For this reason, the Agency regulation cannot serve as a bar to negotiation on the disputed proposal under section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

The Agency also contends that a compelling need exists for the cited regulation because it establishes a uniform policy regarding within-grade increases which is essential for fairness and the maintenance of employee morale. However, the Agency does not specifically reference either one of the other compelling need criteria set forth in section 2424.11(a) and (b) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Nor does the Agency advance any specific arguments as to how the cited Agency regulation meets the requirements of those criteria. The Agency has provided none of the facts and arguments which we would need in order to judge the validity of its contentions. See our discussion of Union Proposal 7 in this case. Since the Agency has provided no support for this additional compelling need contention, that contention cannot be sustained, and the cited Agency regulation does not provide a bar to negotiation on Union Proposal 8 herein. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 451 (1980). Compare National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 207 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 598, 610-12 (1984) (Member Haughton dissenting), appeal docketed sub nom. July 6, 1984), (Decision on Remand, 21 FLRA No. 36 (1986)) (the Authority found that the agency had demonstrated that its regulation established uniform pay practices which were essential to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 8 is not inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation. Nor has the Agency shown that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The proposal, therefore, is within the Agency's duty to bargain.

In reaching this conclusion we note that the proposal does not concern the amount of the increase in salary which an employee will receive with each step increase. Rather, the proposal only concerns the timing of an employee's step increase. For this reason, the proposal does not involve issues concerning the negotiability of wages in the Federal sector.

IX. Union Proposal 9

> Article 27, Section 1.
> Management adopt a work schedule which incorporates the principle of flexitime which would provide for a nine hour work day for eight (8) days. The ninth work day would consist of an eight (8) hour work day.
> Article 27, Section 2.
> By providing for a nine-hour work day as set forth in Section 1 of this Article, every other week would consist of a four day work week.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) because it is inconsistent with law. The Agency also contends that the proposal is barred from negotiation by Agency regulations for which a compelling need exists. Finally, the Agency argues that the proposal concerns the methods and means of performing its work and is negotiable only at its election under section 7106(b)(1). The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis

1. Inconsistent with Federal Law

Union Proposal 9 concerns the compressed work schedule known as "5-4-9," that is, a 9-hour, 5-day workweek followed by an approximately 9-hour day, 4-day workweek. During the pendency of the appeal in this case, the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982, Pub. L. 97-221, 96 Stat. 227, took effect.20/ That Act, as indicated both by its terms21/ and by its legislative history,22/ clearly contemplates the negotiation of such compressed work schedules.

20/ The Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982 applies to employees of FDIC. See 5 U.S.C. $ 6121(2) and 5 U.S.C. $ 2105. See also the discussion of Union Proposal 1 above at note 3 and following. As originally enacted into law, the Act provided only temporary authority for the establishment of flexible and compressed work schedules. That authority was to have expired in July 1985. Since that date, Pub. L. 99-196, 99 Stat. 1350 was enacted, which made the authority permanent.

> $ 6127. Compressed schedules; agencies authorized to use
> (a) Notwithstanding section 6101 of this title, each agency may establish programs which use a 4-day workweek or other compressed schedule.

See also 5 U.S.C. $$ 6121(5), 6130.

22/ For the text of S. REP. No. 97-365 see the Appendix.

2. Compelling Need

The Agency contends that its regulation pertaining to hours of work and tours of duty, and a related statement of policy which precludes alternative work schedules such as flexitime, are essential to the accomplishment of the mission or the execution of the functions of the Agency in a manner which is consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient government within the meaning of section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Specifically, the Agency argues that its regulation setting specific limits on hours and tours of duty,[23] which is reinforced by its policy disfavoring alternate work schedules,[24] is essential to the accomplishment of the Agency's bank examining function because it facilitates the access of examiners to member banks during the operating hours of those banks.

However, the Agency has produced no evidence that its employees are unable to have access to bank offices for more than eight hours a day. Moreover, the Agency has not shown that the work of all, or even a significant portion, of unit employees requires that they have such access to banks, or that all their work, or a significant part thereof, must be performed on site in the banks. Even assuming employees have limited access to banks, the Agency has not shown that it would be prevented from accomplishing its mission in an efficient and effective manner if it were unable to require unit employees to work five 8-hour days per workweek, since it has not shown what portion of the unit would be subject to such limited access or what portion of unit employees' work is constituted of on-site examination of bank records. There is thus no basis in the record for concluding that, should the Agency agree to afford unit employees the opportunity to participate in an alternative work schedule such as the "5-4-9," it would have any detrimental effect on the Agency's productivity. We also find that neither the language of the proposal nor the record in the case suggest that the proposal is intended to require that unit employees work a "5-4-9" compressed schedule. Nor is the proposal intended to preclude the Agency from requiring employees to work five 8-hour days when that is necessary to accomplish the Agency's mission, or to give employees the right to refuse to appear for work when ordered to do so. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 14 FLRA 6, 7-8 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441, 447-49 (1981). It must be determined, therefore, that the Agency has not shown that the cited regulations and policy are supported by a compelling need.

[23] FDIC Circular 2100.1 (April 3, 1978) ("FDIC Hours and Tours of Duty"), paragraph 2.B. states, in part, as to Regional Office employees, that "[t]ours of duty for full-time employees will consist of an eight hour work day, exclusive of the lunch period." See also Agency Statement of Position at 22 and Exhibit N.

Under the Federal Employees Flexible and Compressed Work Schedules Act of 1982, 5 U.S.C. § 6131, the Federal Service Impasses Panel (FSIP) has the responsibility of settling impasses with respect to agency claims that proposed alternate work schedules would have an "adverse agency impact." In subsequent negotiations on Union Proposal 9 the Agency may decide not to establish the proposed "5-4-9" compressed schedule because it would have such an adverse impact. We express no opinion as to whether, should the matter be referred to the FSIP, a finding of an "adverse agency impact" would be justified so as to preclude the adoption of Union Proposal 9. We decide only that the Agency has not shown that a compelling need exists for its regulation establishing hours and tours of duty to bar negotiation on the proposal.

3. Management Rights

For the reasons stated in National Marine Fisheries Service, cited above, we hold that the proposal for a compressed work schedule does not concern the methods and means of performing work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1).

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 9 is not inconsistent with Federal law or management's rights under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Nor has the Agency shown that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. The proposal, therefore, is within the Agency's duty to bargain.

X. Union Proposal 10

Article 29, Section 1.

> Each employee be given the option of having the Employer provide leased automobiles for their business use.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates its right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) and its right to determine the methods and means of performing its work under section 7106(b)(1). The Agency also contends that the proposal is barred from negotiation by its internal regulations concerning delegations of authority for which a compelling need exists. The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 10 requires the Agency to lease automobiles for employees to use, primarily for transportation to bank examining assignments. As a necessary part of carrying out its mission to protect the deposits made by the public in member banks, the FDIC undertakes periodic examinations of the financial status of those banks. Many of the banks are outside the commuting area of examiners' duty stations and residences. Frequent travel is thus a necessary aspect of accomplishing examining assignments. The decision regarding transportation to and from such assignments concerns the means to be used to accomplish the Agency's work. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 2 FLRA 255 (1979). Management is not required to bargain over a particular "means" of performing its examining assignments. See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of U.S. Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, 4 FLRA 384 (1980) (Union Proposal I); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration & Naturalization Service Council and U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration & Naturalization Service, 8 FLRA 347, 349-51 (1982) (Union Proposal 2).

Union Proposal 10 concerns a matter which is subject to bargaining at the election of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1). Since the Agency has elected not to bargain, it is not within its duty to bargain under the Statute. In view of our decision, we do not have to decide whether the proposal violates management's right to determine its budget or whether the Agency has shown that the proposal is barred by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

Article 29, Section 2.

> Any and all changes, proposed or otherwise, to the Travel Regulations is [sic] subject to collective bargaining between the Employer and the Union.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with an Agency regulation concerning approval of changes in travel regulations for which a compelling need exists. The Agency also contends that the proposal concerns the technology, methods and means of performing its work, a matter which is negotiable only at its election under section 7106(b)(1). The Union disputes the Agency's contentions, arguing that the proposal requires nothing which is not already provided for under the Statute.

B. Analysis

1. Compelling Need

As a "Government controlled corporation" the FDIC is not subject to the statutory and regulatory provisions governing travel on official business for the Government. 5 U.S.C. § 5701. See also Union Proposal 7 above. Consequently, Agency policies regarding such travel are established by internal Agency regulation. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA 446 (1983) (Union Proposal 1) (where employees covered under Federal Travel Regulations, proposal designating employee's residence as his or her official duty station inconsistent with those Government-wide regulations).

Union Proposal 11 requires that the Agency notify the Union when it decides to change its travel regulations and provide the Union an opportunity to negotiate on the application of those regulations to the bargaining unit. The proposal constitutes a procedure which has the effect of reopening the parties' negotiated agreement to allow for limited bargaining. Nothing in the language of the proposal or the record of this case suggests that the proposal is intended to authorize the exclusive representative at the local level to negotiate over the substance of Agency-wide travel policy.[25]

In requiring the Agency to negotiate on the application of proposed changes in internal travel regulations to bargaining unit employees the proposal requires nothing which is not also required by law. Under section 7117, matters covered by agency regulations are subject to the duty to bargain unless the regulations are supported by a compelling need. Of course, any negotiation on proposed changes in such regulations must concern matters which affect the conditions of employment of unit employees and are otherwise consistent with law and regulation. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of U.S. Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, 11 FLRA 672 (1983) (Union Proposal 5) (proposal to negotiate supplemental agreements at the local level concerning specific matters not inconsistent with law). The record does not indicate that the Union proposed a blanket waiver of the Agency's right to assert a compelling need in connection with any proposed changes in its travel regulations. The Union states, in this regard, that the "appropriate time" to raise questions of compelling need "is during individual negotiations on specific changes." The proposal here would not foreclose the Agency from contesting the negotiability of any Union proposal during future negotiations relating to specific changes in the Agency's travel regulations.

As to the Agency's allegation that a compelling need exists for its regulation regarding the delegation of authority to change the Agency's travel regulations, the proposal, as discussed above, does not authorize the Union to negotiate changes in these travel regulations. Moreover, as stated with respect to Proposal 1, an agency cannot restrict bargaining on an otherwise negotiable matter by refusing to delegate authority over the matter to the level of recognition.

[25] Even absent a contractual reopener such as is proposed here, the Agency would be obligated to notify the Union and provide the Union an opportunity to negotiate as appropriate regarding any proposed mid-contract changes in travel regulations which affect employee working conditions. See Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois and National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23, 5 FLRA 9 (1981).

Further, the Agency's claim that a compelling need exists for uniformity in its travel regulations because such uniformity is "essential" to prevent "administrative chaos" is wholly unsupported in the record. The Agency has provided none of the facts and arguments which we would need in order to judge the validity of its contentions. See our discussion of Union Proposal 7 in this case. Consequently, the Agency has failed to meet its burden of demonstrating that its travel regulations meet any of the criteria set forth in section 2424.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. None of those regulations can, therefore, in the circumstances of this case, bar negotiation of the Union proposal. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 451 (1980). See also American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3488 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, 12 FLRA 532 (1983) (Union Proposal 4).

2. Management Rights

The Agency's allegation that Union Proposal 11 concerns matters pertaining to the "technology, methods, and means" of performing the Agency's work is without any support whatsoever in the record. The Agency has not established that merely providing for a contract reopener as to travel regulations in and of itself has any technological relationship to accomplishing or furthering the Agency's work or involves the methods and means of such work performance. The mere possibility that Union Proposal 5 might concern such matters is not enough to render this proposal nonnegotiable. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of U.S. Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, 11 FLRA 672 (1983) (Union Proposal 5). Thus, there is no basis upon which to conclude that the proposal concerns the technology, methods and means of performing work, which are negotiable only at the election of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1). See Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, supra.

C. Conclusion

The Agency has not shown that Union Proposal 11 is barred from negotiations by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Nor does the proposal concern a matter which is negotiable only at the election of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1). The proposal is therefore within the Agency's duty to bargain.

XII. Union Proposal 13

Article 29, Section 27.

> Regional staffing of teaching assignments at the FDIC training center shall be for a period not to exceed two years in duration to enable those desiring to teach the opportunity to do so.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). The Union claims that the proposal is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) and (3).

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The record in this case is unclear as to whether the proposal involves the assignment of unit employees to teaching positions at the FDIC Training Center or concerns the assignment to employees of teaching duties at the Center. However, regardless of whether the proposal concerns assignment of employees to teaching positions and thus involves management's right to assign employees to positions in the Agency under section 7106(a)(2)(A), or concerns the assignment of teaching duties and thus involves management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B), it in either instance restricts management's determination of the duration of such assignments. The proposal prescribes a maximum length for such assignments of two years. If the proposal concerns the assignment of employees to positions, it has the same effect as Paragraph (3) of Union Provision II in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916 and Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 7 FLRA 292 (1981). In that case, the Authority held that a proposal restricting certain temporary assignments to a maximum of 60 days directly interfered with management's right, under section 7106(a)(2)(A), to assign employees in the agency by restricting management's right to determine the duration of an assignment. On the other hand, if the proposal concerns work assignments, it has the same effect as Union Proposals I and II in National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 6 FLRA 588 (1981). In that case, the Authority held, relying on its decision in International Association of Fire Fighters, Local F-61 and Philadelphia Naval Shipyard, 3 FLRA 437 (1980), that a proposal limiting the duration of assigned training directly interfered with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Therefore, whether Union Proposal 13 concerns assignment to teaching positions or assignment of teaching duties, for the reasons set forth in the Tinker Air Force Base, Federal Aviation Administration, and Philadelphia Naval Shipyard decisions, it directly interferes with the substantive exercise of management's rights under section 7106(a)(2) of the Statute. In so holding, we note that the Union provides no support for its conclusion, nor is any otherwise apparent, that the proposal constitutes an "appropriate arrangement" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3).

Union Proposal 13 directly interferes with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). It is, therefore, outside the Agency's duty to bargain.

XIII. Union Proposal 14

Article 29, Section 33.

> The part-time policy shall be extended to all personnel with a legitimate reason, including education, with no time limit constraints.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends only that a compelling need exists for its regulations concerning part-time employment to bar negotiations on the proposal. The Union disputes the Agency's contention, contending that it does not intend its proposal to require the Agency to grant an employee's request.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Under existing Authority precedent, we find the proposal nonnegotiable for reasons other than those alleged by the Agency. The Agency's part-time policy is to make part-time positions available to employees under limited circumstances.26/ The proposal would extend the policy would apply to any circumstances under which the policy would apply to any employee with a "legitimate reason." The Authority interprets the proposal as preventing the Agency from denying an employee's request if the employee has a legitimate reason. The Agency would not have the authority to put any time limit constraints on its decision to grant an employee's request for part-time status. As a result, the effect of the proposal would be to limit the Agency's ability to require an employee to return to work when it determines there is a need for the employee's services on a full-time basis. The length of time an employee could remain in part-time status would depend on the decision of the employee without consideration of the Agency's need to perform its work. The proposal, therefore, has the same effect as Union Proposal 1 in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 15 and U.S. Army Armament Munitions and Chemical Command, Rock Island Arsenal, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 6 (1985). The proposal in that case required the Agency to grant an employee's request for leave without pay (LWOP) if the employee met the criteria set forth in the proposal. Relying on our decision in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2263 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 160th Air Base Wing (MAC), Kirtland Air Force Base, New Mexico, 15 FLRA 580 (1984), we held the proposal nonnegotiable under section 7106(a)(2)(B) because it would require the agency to grant an employee's request for leave without pay regardless of the need for the employee's services during the period of the request. The proposal in this case, involving requests for part-time status, as opposed to requests for leave without pay, restricts the Agency's ability to determine when assigned work will be performed.

26/ Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Memorandum on Part-Time Employment Policy, EX-02-80 (August 7, 1980). See Agency Statement of Position at Exhibit R.

For the reasons set forth in the Rock Island Arsenal and Kirtland Air Force Base decisions, we find that Union Proposal 14 directly interferes with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) and is outside the Agency's duty to bargain. In view of our decision, we do not have to decide whether the Agency has shown that the proposal would be barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

XIV. Union Proposal 15

Article 29, Section 71.

> Each employee of the bargaining unit will receive eight (8) days (personal days) of official time to use at their discretion.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation. The Agency also argues that the proposal is barred from negotiation by the Agency's leave regulations for which a compelling need exists. The Union disputes the Agency's contentions.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 15 provides for eight (8) days of "official time" to be used for "personal" business which cannot be taken care of while an employee is in a travel status. The proposal is stated in terms of "official time," a phrase employed in the Statute to mean absence from duty without charge to leave or loss of pay for employees performing union representational activities. It is clear from the context and based on Union statements in the record that the proposal concerns "administrative leave," which is a term used to refer generally to absence from duty administratively authorized without charge to leave or loss of pay. The Authority adopts this interpretation for purposes of this decision.

It is well established that, under the Statute, an agency must negotiate with an exclusive representative on matters concerning conditions of employment of unit employees within its discretion to the extent consistent with law and regulation.27/ As to the subject matter of the instant proposal, the Authority has consistently construed those portions of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) concerned with "excused absence" or "administrative leave"28/ as providing that "the head of an agency has discretion to grant administrative leave to employees of the agency in certain situations for brief periods of time."

27/ International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, AFL-CIO, NASA Headquarters Professional Association and National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Headquarters, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA 212, 215 (1982); National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748, 759-62 (1980).

28/ Federal Personnel Manual, chap. 630, subchap. 11-5. FPM Supplement 990-2, chap. 630, subchap. S11-5.

[Underscoring in original; footnote omitted.][29] The first issue in this case is whether the administrative leave provided for in the Union's proposal exceeds the limitations on agency discretion imposed by the provisions of the FPM, so as to be inconsistent therewith. The second issue is whether those provisions of the FPM constitute Government-wide regulations under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

We turn first to the issue of whether eight (8) days of administrative leave for personal business is outside the scope of an agency's permissible discretion under the FPM. The Office of the Comptroller General has considered a variety of situations involving grants of administrative leave and, in determining whether such grants are appropriate, interprets the applicable provisions of the FPM as limiting an agency to authorizing only brief periods of absence from duty. See, for example, 54 Comp. Gen. 706, 708 (1975).

Moreover, the Comptroller General has emphasized that while it is not necessarily a determinative consideration in connection with most circumstances involving a brief absence, a grant of administrative leave for an extended period of time is not appropriate unless it is in furtherance of an agency function.[30] See, for example, 61 Comp. Gen. 652 (1982). As the Comptroller General interprets the FPM, therefore, in determining whether a grant of administrative leave is appropriate, the crucial considerations are, depending on the circumstances involved, the length of time authorized and the purpose for which that time is to be used. In weighing those considerations in particular cases, the Comptroller General has approved agency grants of approximately five (5) hours of administrative leave for an employee to rest after prolonged and difficult travel, 55 Comp. Gen. 510 (1975), and eight (8) hours for an employee to locate suitable housing in connection with an extended temporary assignment, Comptroller General Decision B-192258 (September 25, 1978), both of which were work-related situations. The Authority has also found negotiable a proposal which would have required authorization of a maximum of thirty (30) minutes of administrative leave per pay period for tardiness (that is, a maximum of 13 hours a year).31/ National Labor Relations Board, Region 5, supra.

[29] Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 174, AFL-CIO and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2237, AFL-CIO and Federal Employees' Metal Trades Council, Long Beach, California, 7 FLRA 362, 367 (1981). See also National Labor Relations Board, Region 5 and National Labor Relations Board Union, Local 5, 2 FLRA 327 (1979).

[30] The Comptroller General also stresses as important considerations whether the grant of administrative leave is for some purpose connected to the employee's work and, relying on references in the FPM to voting and blood donations, for some "civic" purpose. See, for example, Comptroller General Decision B-156287 (February 5, 1975).

Conversely, the Comptroller General has held that a grant of administrative leave for excess travel time is inappropriate where the excess time taken is attributable to an employee's delay for personal reasons or as a matter of personal convenience. 56 Comp. Gen. 865, 868-69 (1977). Moreover, the Comptroller General refused to question an agency's denial of eight (8) hours of administrative leave to an employee who, as the elected chief of a local all volunteer fire department, participated in fighting a fire and was absent from duty for that amount of time. 54 Comp. Gen. 706 (1974). In another case, the Comptroller General refused to restore to an employee's annual leave account five (5) days of annual leave which was charged after a previous grant of administrative leave, tc represent his installation in a chess tournament, was later denied. Comptroller General Decision B-176020 (August 4, 1972).32/

31/ The circumstances involved in the Long Beach Naval Shipyard case, note 30, supra, wherein the proposal involved, at most, an authorization of 4 to 5 days, are distinguishable. That case involved a group dismissal due to a shut-down of the shipyard for retooling and is a circumstance specifically referenced in the part of the FPM covering such dismissals. The proposal in this case concerns only individual instances of administrative leave and is covered by a different part of the FPM.

32/ The Comptroller General has also held that grants of administrative leave for 14 days, 28 days, and 31 days, to prepare for a bar examination are inappropriate, Comptroller General Decision B-156287 (February 5, 1975); that a grant of 23 days to participate in the Pan American Games as a member of the United States field hockey team is inappropriate, Comptroller General Decision B-185128 (December 3, 1975); that a grant of six weeks for voluntary, humanitarian service with Africare is inappropriate, Comptroller General Decision B-156287 (June 26, 1974).

Based upon the foregoing Comptroller General interpretations of FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5, it does not appear that a blanket authorization of eight (8) days for personal business, without consideration of the specific circumstances of each case, constitutes a brief period of absence from duty for appropriate reasons which is within the Agency's discretion to grant. In thus exceeding the limits of an appropriate exercise of discretion under the FPM, Union Proposal 15 is inconsistent therewith within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1).

The remaining issue is whether the provisions of FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5 constitute Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. If so, those provisions would bar negotiations on Union Proposal 15. In National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1497 and Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 9 FLRA 151, 154-5 (1982), the Authority, relying on its decision in National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748 (1980), determined that chapter 511, subchapter 4-3.b. of the FPM was a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) because it applies to Federal civilian employees in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of the Government and thus is generally applicable to the Federal civilian work force. The provisions of FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5 at issue in this case apply to a substantial portion of the civilian employees of the executive and judicial branches of the Federal Government. 5 U.S.C. §§ 6301(2)(A), 6311. 5 C.F.R. § 630.201(b)(4). See also Crain v. U.S., 77 F. Supp. 505 (D.C. Ill. 1948). Those provisions are likewise generally applicable to the Federal civilian work force so as to be "Government-wide" within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1).

As to whether FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5 constitutes a "rule or regulation" within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1), the Authority determined in Lowry Air Force Base that the term was not intended to refer only to those rules and regulations which met formal requirements as to notice and comment, see, for example, 5 U.S.C. § 553. The term also includes official declarations of policy which are binding on the officials and agencies to which they apply. Concerning FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5, which is issued by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), OPM is statutorily empowered to regulate the leave system governing Federal employment, 5 U.S.C. § 6311. The requirements as to excused absence which are set forth in subchapter S11-5 constitute its determination of the policies necessary to implement that system. Moreover, the fact that the provisions of subchapter S11-5 are enforceable by the Comptroller General against the officials and agencies to which they apply leads us to conclude that they are binding on those officials and agencies. The Authority finds, therefore, that FPM Supplement 990-2, chapter 630, subchapter S11-5 regarding an agency's limited discretion to authorize administrative leave is a Government-wide rule or regulation.

Union Proposal 15 is outside the Agency's duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) because it is inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation. In view of our decision, we do not have to decide whether the Agency has shown that the proposal is barred from negotiation by an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

XV. Union Proposal 16

Article 3, Section 7.

> Only officers of the Union will be granted official time and expenses per the Employer's General Travel Regulations to participate in all business (excluding internal union business) in the Union's other bargaining unit (Chicago Region of the Employer).

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) because it is inconsistent with Federal law. The Union disputes the Agency's contention.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 16 requires the Agency to negotiate on official time for Union officers who are members of the Madison Region to represent the Union in the separate Chicago Region unit. On May 31, 1985, another union was certified as exclusive representative for the employees in the Chicago Region. Consequently, the Union which is party to the petition herein is no longer the exclusive representative of the Chicago unit.[33] There is no bargaining relationship between the Agency and the Union with respect to the Chicago Region unit and no obligation on the part of the Agency to bargain with the Union which filed the petition in this case with respect to its representation of the Chicago Region unit. Therefore, issues as to the scope of bargaining as it pertains to that unit are not appropriate for resolution by the Authority. See Overseas Education Association and Department of Defense, Office of Dependents Schools, Alexandria, Virginia, 7 FLRA 84 (1981).

[33] An election had been conducted pursuant to a representation petition filed in Case No. 5-RO-50005.

We conclude that the negotiability issues raised by Union Proposal 16, insofar as they relate to the Chicago Region unit, have been rendered moot by the issuance of the certification of exclusive representative in Case No. 5-RO-50005. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, 18 FLRA No. 90 (1985).

XVI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the appeal as to Union Proposals 1-5, 10, and 13-16 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain on Union Proposals 7, 8, 9, and 11.[34]

> (c) The rule or regulation implements a mandate to the agency or primary national subdivision under law or other outside authority, which implementation is essentially nondiscretionary in nature.

22/ S. REP. No. 97-365, 97th Cong., 2nd Sess. 7 (1982) states as follows:

> Paragraph (3) defines the term "basic work requirement" to mean the number of hours, excluding overtime hours, which an employee is required to work or is required to account for by leave or otherwise.
> In view of the nature of a flexible schedule or compressed schedule experiment, any standard for determining what constitutes a regular work period must be adaptable to the particular flexible or compressed schedule. Accordingly, an employee's "basic work requirement" may be calculated on a daily, weekly, or biweekly basis depending on the hours which a particular employee is required to work or to otherwise account for. For example, a full-time employee working the standard 8-hour/5-day week has an 8-hour daily basic work requirement, a 40-hour weekly basic work requirement, and an 80-hour biweekly basic work requirement. An employee under a compressed schedule such as the 5-4-9 program, which consists of a 9-hour day/5-day workweek followed by an approximately 9-hour day/workweek [sic] has a 9-hour daily basic work requirement, one 45-hour weekly basic work requirement (first week), one 35-hour weekly basic work requirement (second week), and an 80-hour biweekly basic work requirement. Similarly, an employee under a compressed schedule which consists of four 10-hour days each week, has a 10-hour daily basic work requirement, a 40-hour weekly basic work requirement, and an 80-hour biweekly basic work requirement.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two Union proposals involving bargaining unit employees who are transferred to different duty stations within the state of Kansas as the result of a reduction-in-force (RIF).

II. Union Proposal 1

> Individuals affected will be furnished transportation and travel expenses until such time as they elect to move their families permanently.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that this proposal would require employees to be reimbursed for commuting expenses and, thus, is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. $ 5704. In support, the Agency relies on the Authority's decision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 9 FLRA 726 (1982).

The Union argues that the case relied upon by the Agency concerns employees' commuting expenses from their residences to their regular place of employment and is not applicable to employees being transferred from one part of Kansas to another as a result of a RIF. Finally, the Union argues that, by requiring a transferred employee to be reimbursed for travel and transportation expenses for a reasonable period of time until such employee permanently moves to the new job location, the proposal is an attempt to alleviate the impact of a RIF.

B. Analysis

Under 5 U.S.C. § 5721 et seq. and Chapter 2 of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTR), an employee transferred to a new duty station generally is entitled to reimbursement for certain travel and relocation expenses incurred as a result of the transfer. However, there is no indication in the record that the Union intends this proposal to cover any travel or relocation expenses for which reimbursement is authorized under law and the FTR. Rather, the Union tacitly agrees with the Agency that the proposal would require transferred employees to be reimbursed for their commuting expenses, that is, their daily mileage expenses from their permanent residence to their regular, albeit new, duty station until such time as they move their residence to the new duty location. Thus, notwithstanding the Union's claim that reimbursement for such expenses is an attempt to alleviate the impact of a RIF, it is well settled that reimbursement for such expenses is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. § 5704. Internal Revenue Service, 9 FLRA 726 (1982).

C. Conclusion

Based on the rationale in Internal Revenue Service, the Authority finds Proposal 1 to be inconsistent with law and therefore, outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Union Proposal 2

> Should vacancies arise in an individual's original vicinity which are the same grade or representative rate or lower, after an individual has accepted a position at the MATES [new duty station], SPMO [management] will unofficially offer the position to the individual concerned. If the individual indicates he will accept the offer, an official offer will be made. If he indicates he does not want the position, an official offer will not be made. These unofficial offers will be in accordance with past practice.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency alleges the underlined portion of this proposal, by requiring the selection of a particular employee for a position, interferes with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(A) to assign employees and with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source.

The Union contends that the disputed portion of the proposal merely attempts to alleviate hardship caused by a RIF. In support, the Union cites the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

B. Analysis

The Authority has held that where an agency alleges a union's proposal of an appropriate arrangement is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with management rights described in section 7106(a) or (b)(1), the Authority will consider whether such an arrangement is appropriate for negotiation within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) or, whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights. National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

Proposal 2 applies to National Guard technicians transferred, without personal cause, as the result of a RIF to a different duty station within the state of Kansas. National Guard technicians must possess not only the civilian qualifications required for the positions they hold but also the compatible military grade. See 32 U.S.C. § 709 (b). There is nothing in the record to indicate that, under this proposal, management could elect not to fill a vacant position. That is, if a position were to become vacant at the former duty station for any reason, including an Agency decision to abolish the position, management would still be required by this proposal to offer it to a transferred employee. In addition, there is nothing in the record to indicate that management would be able to make qualifications determinations, including determining whether a technician employee holds the compatible military grade for the vacancy arising at the original duty station. Thus, Proposal 2 is distinguishable from the proposal found to be an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106 (b)(3) of the Statute in National Association of Government Employees, Local R-14-87 and Department of the Army, Kansas Army National Guard, Topeka, Kansas, 21 FLRA No. 48 (1986). The proposal in the Topeka case required management to return employees to their former positions at their former duty station only if and when such positions were vacant and only then if the agency decided to fill them. No question was raised in that case as to whether the employees possessed the requisite qualifications for the vacant positions since the employees in question were merely returning to positions they would still occupy but for their reassignments as a result of a RIF. Further, that proposal specifically preserved the agency's right to elect to fill or not fill vacant positions. Unlike the proposal in Kansas Army National Guard, Topeka, Proposal 2 would absolutely eliminate the Agency's discretion concerning filling the vacancies involved. Thus, the proposal would constitute an excessive interference with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute and with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute to make selections for vacancies.

C. Conclusion

Because Proposal 2 excessively interferes with management's rights it does not constitute an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106 (b)(3) of the Statute.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be and it hereby is, dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION AND RELATED REQUESTS

This matter is before the Authority on a request for reconsideration filed by the Agency on April 14, 1986, seeking reconsideration of the above-entitled Authority's Decision and Order of March 25, 1986. Filed with its request for reconsideration, the Agency submitted requests for stay, oral argument, and consolidation with Case No. 0-AR-583 (21 FLRA No. 27 issued March 27, 1986). On April 28, 1986, the Union filed an opposition to the Agency's request for reconsideration and related requests. For the reason set forth below, the Agency's requests must be dismissed.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, provides in pertinent part:

> After a final decision or order of the Authority has been issued, a party to the proceeding before the Authority who can establish in its moving papers extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may move for reconsideration of such final decision or order. The motion shall be filed within ten (10) days after service of the Authority's decision or order. . . .

The Authority's Decision and Order was dated and served on the Agency by mail on March 25, 1986. Therefore, under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and sections 2429.21 and 2429.22, which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the Agency's request for reconsideration and related requests were due in the national office of the Authority before the close of business on April 9, 1986. Since, as indicated above, the Agency's requests were not filed until April 14, 1986, they are clearly untimely and must be dismissed.

Accordingly, for the reason set forth above, and apart from other considerations, the Agency's request for reconsideration and related requests are hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

Union

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Arthur Eliot Berkeley filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator awarded a retroactive promotion with backpay to the grievant after finding that the activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by failing to temporarily promote the grievant for a period of approximately 11 months when he performed the duties of a higher-graded position. In an addendum opinion, the arbitrator awarded attorney fees for 22.2 hours at the market-value rate of $ 85.00 per hour.

In its first exception, the activity contended that the arbitrator's award was contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 5596 (Back Pay Act) and to 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) because the case did not involve a prohibited personnel practice or an agency personnel action. The Authority held that an the agency's violation of the collective bargaining agreement constituted an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action for purposes of an award of a retroactive temporary promotion and backpay under the Back Pay Act. Also the broad category of personnel actions covered by the Back Pay Act includes the omission or failure to take an action or confer a benefit. Thus, the activity failed to establish that the award was contrary to law.

In its second exception, the activity alleged that the award was contrary to law because it was not in the "interest of justice" as required by 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). However, the arbitrator effectively found that the activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits. Therefore, the Authority concluded that the arbitrator's determination that the payment of attorney fees was warranted in the interest of justice was fully consistent with applicable legal requirements and the activity's exceptions provided no basis for finding the award deficient.

In its third exception, the activity contended that the arbitrator's award was not in accordance with the governing standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) for determining the reasonableness of an award of attorney fees. In determining what constitutes reasonable attorney fees, courts have applied a variety of methods and analyses. An example of a method acceptable to administrative adjudicatory agencies and most courts is the "lodestar" method, in which the attorney's customary hourly billing rate is multiplied by the number of hours reasonably devoted to the case with appropriate adjustments for any special factors. This is the method ordinarily applied by the MSPB in determining reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) when the attorney involved is in private practice.

Where, however, the attorney is an employee of a union, a different method must be applied in computing reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). Where such fees are to be paid to a union, the fees are computed based on actual cost rather than on the prevailing market rate for the legal services rendered. Further, a special fund created by a union into which all fees awarded to union-employed attorneys would be paid and expended solely for legal work does not entitle the union to market-rate fees for the services of its staff. Compensation of actual costs involves: (1) compensation paid to the attorney employee for the time expended on the case; (2) out-of-pocket expenses related to the case; (3) and overhead costs. Overhead costs may normally be an amount equal to 100 percent of the attorney's compensation in the absence of evidence the amount is substantially excessive or insufficient. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award of attorney fees to be consistent with this cost-plus method of determining attorney fees.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the activity did not meet the substantial evidence standard required by the parties' agreement to sustain a 10-day suspension of the grievant. As his award, the arbitrator set aside the suspension, directed the activity to expunge from the grievant's personnel file all references to the charges against her, and to reimburse the grievant for all wages, leave and other benefits lost as a result of the suspension.

READEX best copy available

The union then filed an application for attorneys fees as counsel for the grievant. The arbitrator determined that attorney fees were warranted in the interest of justice for the legal services related to those allegations for which the activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits in an arbitration proceeding. Concerning other charges, however, the arbitrator found that although the activity's evidence was insufficient to sustain those charges against the grievant, the charges were not wholly unfounded and this part of the case was not so clear that the activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits. Consequently, attorney fees were not awarded for the expenses of representing the grievant in this part of the case.

In its first exception, the activity contended that the award of attorney fees was contrary to law. Specifically, the activity contended that under MSPB's decision in Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980) and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), a case such as this requires that an agency's reasons for initiating a disciplinary action must be viewed as a totality and not separately. The activity similarly argued that an arbitrator may only find either that there was a reasonable basis for the action or find that there was not such a basis, and that an issue-by-issue analysis and determination is not permitted. The Authority found that the activity failed to establish that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees was contrary to law. Neither the decision of MSPB in Allen nor 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) precludes an arbitrator from granting part of a request for attorney fees based on a determination that only that part was warranted under applicable legal requirements.

In its second exception, the activity contended that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees to the union based on an hourly rate at or near the prevailing private practice rate for those hours was contrary to law. The Authority held that where the attorney is an employee of a union, fees are computed based on actual costs rather than the prevailing market rate (lodestar method) for the legal services rendered. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award to provide for computation of attorney fees calculated on a cost-plus basis.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the grievant's evaluation for an appraisal period was substantially defective because it did not include input from the unit manager who acted as her supervisor during nine of the twelve months covered by the evaluation. The arbitrator concluded that since there was no basis upon which he could determine the actual rating, he was unable to make a finding that "but for" the error the grievant would have been promoted to a GS-8 position earlier than she was actually promoted. As a remedy, the arbitrator ordered that after the grievant had served at least one year in the GS-8 grade, the grievant be given "priority placement" for the next promotion to GS-9.

In its exception the agency contended that the award was contrary to management's right to make selection for appointment from any appropriate source under § 7106(a)(2)(C). Further, if the arbitrator meant by "priority placement", priority consideration, the award was contrary to FPM chapter 335. The Authority held that if "placement" meant selection, the award would be contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(C). However, judging from the arbitrator's recognition that there was no legal basis for ordering a retroactive promotion to a GS-8 position, the Authority concluded that the arbitrator intended that the grievant be given priority consideration to a GS-9 position. In the typical situation where an aggrieved employee has been wrongfully denied the consideration or process to which the employee was entitled in a promotion action, and the the employee has not yet been promoted when the grievance is considered, the Authority has recognized that an appropriate remedy under Appendix A-4c(2) of FPM chapter 335 is to direct that the employee be granted priority consideration for promotion to the next available higher-graded position for which the employee is qualified. Moreover, in circumstances such as in this case where the grievant was promoted after the being wrongfully denied proper consideration in a promotion action, but before the matter was decided by an arbitrator, the FPM does not prohibit a remedy of priority consideration for promotion to a higher-graded position than the position for which the grievant was wrongfully denied proper consideration. Therefore, the Authority concluded that the agency failed establish that the award was deficient. However, the Authority modified the award by changing "priority placement" to "priority consideration".

DIGEST NOTES

In his supplemental decision issued in response to the union's application for attorney fees, the arbitrator found that there was no dispute that the grievant was the prevailing party in the initial arbitration proceeding and that attorney fees had been incurred by the employee. The arbitrator further found that attorney fees were warranted in the "interest of justice" because the agency's failure to abide by its earlier grievance settlement agreement and its repudiation of the basis for its earlier payments to the grievant were wholly unfounded; because the agency knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits; and because the agency's action was clearly without merit. The arbitrator also found that the number of hours claimed by the union attorney was reasonable. However, an award of fees at the prevailing market rate to salaried union counsel would not be "reasonable" and would be at odds with the purposes of the Back Pay Act and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) because such payments provide the union with a windfall profits. Also, the arbitrator found, that the creation of a special litigation fund by the union into which attorney fees were to be paid did not overcome those considerations. Accordingly, the arbitrator awarded attorney fees on the basis of actual cost of the attorney's salary plus an overhead cost allowance.

In its exception, the union contended that the award of attorney fees was deficient because 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) requires that an arbitrator must base an award of reasonable attorney fees on the prevailing market rate. The Authority held, however, that where the attorney is an employee of a union, a different method must be applied in computing reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). Where such fees are to be paid to a union, the fees are computed based on actual cost rather than on the prevailing market rate for the legal services rendered. Further, a special fund created by a union into which all fees awarded to union-employed attorneys would be paid and expended solely for legal work does not entitle the union to market-rate fees for the services of its staff.
Accordingly, the Authority denied the union's exception.

A party who seeks to challenge the propriety of an arbitration award may do so, as Congress intended, only by filing exceptions to that award under the provisions of § 7122(a); where a party fails to avail itself of this procedure, the award becomes final and binding and an agency is required to take such actions as are required by the award. To allow a party which has not filed exceptions to an award to defend its failure to implement that award in a subsequent unfair labor proceeding on grounds that should have been raised as exceptions to the award under § 7122 would circumvent the procedures provided in § 7122(a) and frustrate Congressional intent with respect to the

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal which seeks to impose a standard of negligence for assessing employees' liability for lost, damaged or destroyed Government property other than the standard determined by management directly interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1) and is, therefore, outside the duty to bargain. The union, in response to a proposed change in the existing standard of care required for assessing liability for the loss, damage or destruction of Government property, requested bargaining over the substance of the change, essentially proposing that the existing standard of gross negligence be retained. The union also requested bargaining over the procedures for implementing the change and the appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees. The Respondent bargained with the union over the procedures and appropriate arrangements for implementing the revised regulation but refused to bargain over the substance of the change. Thus, the Authority concluded that as the union's proposal was outside the duty to bargain, the Respondent did not violate the Statute when it refused to bargain over its decision to change the standard of care here.

The Authority specifically did not adopt the Judge's rationale that since the union had hot sought a compelling need determination from the Authority prior to pursuing an unfair labor practice over the Respondents' refusal to engage in local negotiations concerning the implementation of its national regulation, the complaint must be dismissed. Questions concerning the existence of the compelling need of an agency's regulation may be decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding, and management is required to come forward with affirmative support for its assertion that there is a compelling need for the regulation in question which justified its refusal to bargain. Accordingly, the Authority did not adopt the Judge's rationale for dismissing the complaint.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the addendum award of attorney fees by Arbitrator Ralph Roger Williams filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In his initial award in this matter, the Arbitrator found that the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by failing to temporarily promote the grievant for a period of approximately 11 months when he performed the duties of a higher-graded position. The Arbitrator ordered that the grievant be promoted retroactively for the period with backpay. The Arbitrator also retained jurisdiction of the matter for the purpose of determining whether an award of reasonable attorney fees was warranted. The Union subsequently filed a request for such fees for the services of its staff attorney who represented the grievant in the case.

In his addendum opinion and award the Arbitrator found: (1) the grievant had incurred attorney fees; (2) the grievant was the prevailing party; (3) an award of attorney fees was warranted in the interest of justice since the weight of the evidence favored the Union, the Activity knew or ought reasonably to have known that it had the "weaker case" and that the grievant was in fact working at the higher level, and the Activity's action was without merit; and, (4) the grievant was entitled to reasonable attorney fees at the market-value rate, i.e., the number of hours spent in the preparation and presentation of the case multiplied by the reasonable market-value hourly rate for the geographic area for any attorney with similar experience and expertise. In calculating the fee due the grievant, the Arbitrator found that 22.2 hours claimed by the Union attorney were reasonable and proper under the circumstances and were appropriately itemized. As to the amount of fees, the Arbitrator concluded that the market-value rate of $85.00 per hour was reasonable for the locality for an attorney with the training and experience of the Union staff attorney. Accordingly, as his addendum award, the Arbitrator provided:

> The Grievant's request for attorney fees is allowed. The amount of such fees in the total of $1,887.00 is hereby awarded the Grievant.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Activity contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 5596,[1] and to

In support of this contention, the Activity argues that under the statutory provisions relied upon, particularly 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1), attorney fees cannot be granted in matters which are not the result of an action or proceeding taken by an agency or the result of a prohibited personnel practice, and the matter involved in this case was the result of a grievance filed by the employee.

> (ii) reasonable attorney fees related to the personnel action which, with respect to any decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance processed under a procedure negotiated in accordance with chapter 71 of this title . . . shall be awarded in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g) of this title[.]

2/ 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) (1982) provides:

> Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Board . . . may require payment by the agency involved of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee . . . if the employee . . . is the prevailing party and the Board . . . determines that payment by the agency is warranted in the interest of justice, including any case in which a prohibited personnel practice was engaged in by the agency or any case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Activity's assertion that attorney fees are only warranted in situations involving agency prohibited personnel practices or actions taken against employees is without merit. It is well-established that an agency's violation of a collective bargaining agreement constitutes an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action for purposes of a retroactive temporary promotion and backpay under the Back Pay Act. Veterans Administration Hospital and American Federation of Government Employees, Lodge 2201, 4 FLRA 419, 424 (1980). It is also clear that attorney fees may be awarded by arbitrators in a variety of unjustified and unwarranted personnel actions, including, but not limited to, actions subject to negotiated grievance procedures and that the broad category of personnel actions covered by the Back Pay Act includes the omission or failure to take an action or confer a benefit. Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 25, slip op. at 4. Thus, the Authority concludes that the Activity has failed to establish that the award is contrary to law as alleged in this exception.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Activity alleges that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to law because it is not in the interest of justice as required by 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). In support of this exception, the Activity argues that it had substantial reason to believe it would prevail on the merits when it did not temporarily promote the grievant.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

In Naval Air Development Center, the Authority summarized the requirements for an award of reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). In order for an award of attorney fees to be authorized, the award of fees must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the unwarranted or unjustified personnel action; must be reasonable and related to the personnel action; and must be in accordance with the standards established under section 7701(g). Section 7701(g)(1), which applies to all cases except those of discrimination, requires that the fees must have been reasonable and have been incurred by the employee; the employee must have been the prevailing party in the proceeding; and the payment of the fees by the agency must be warranted in the interest of justice. Finally, there must be a "fully articulated, reasoned decision" setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount of fees was determined. In this case, it is clear that the Arbitrator established in a fully articulated and reasoned decision that the Union is entitled to an award of attorney fees. Thus, the award is in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the unwarranted personnel action, the failure to temporarily promote the grievant. There is no dispute that fees were incurred on behalf of the employee and that the grievant is the prevailing party. With regard to the "interest of justice" standard, the Arbitrator effectively found, based upon consideration and discussion of the various facts and circumstances involved, that the Activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits. The Authority therefore concludes that the Arbitrator's determination that the payment of attorney fees was warranted in the interest of justice is fully consistent with applicable legal requirements and that the Activity's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

As its third exception, the Activity contends the Arbitrator's award is not in accordance with the governing standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) for determining the reasonableness of an award of attorney fees. In support of this contention, the Activity argues that the Union should not receive fees calculated at the prevailing market rate but should recover only the salary of the Union attorney plus overhead costs.

The Union in its opposition maintains that it is entitled to an award of attorney fees calculated at the prevailing market rate since the fees recovered in this case are set aside for a Legal Services Program (LSP) used solely to litigate the rights of Federal employees before administrative and judicial tribunals. The Union argues that the LSP fund qualifies for treatment as a public interest organization or legal services firm and therefore it should be compensated under the market-rate formula.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In determining what constitutes reasonable attorney fees, courts have applied a variety of methods and analyses. An example of a method acceptable to administrative adjudicatory agencies and most courts is the "lodestar" method, in which the attorney's customary hourly billing rate is multiplied by the number of hours reasonably devoted to the case with appropriate adjustments for any special factors. Naval Air Development Center, slip op. at 9. This is the method ordinarily applied by the MSPB in determining reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) when the attorney involved is in private practice, for example, Kling v. Department of Justice, 2 MSPB 620, 624-28 (1980), and applied by the Authority in reviewing an arbitrator's award of fees to an attorney in private practice. Naval Air Development Center, slip op. at 12.

Where, however, the attorney is an employee of a union, a different method must be applied in computing reasonable fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). Where such fees are to be paid to a union, the fees are computed based on actual costs rather than on the prevailing market rate for the legal services rendered. Further, a special fund created by a union into which all fees awarded to union-employed attorneys would be paid and expended solely for legal work does not entitle the union to market-rate fees for the services of its staff. Id. at 10; National Treasury Employees Union v. Department of the Treasury, 656 F.2d 848 (D.C. Cir. 1981); Goodrich v. Department of the Navy, 733 F.2d 1578 (Fed. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 105 S. Ct. 958 (1985); Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB 329 (1982).

With regard to the computation of actual costs, there are three elements to be considered: the compensation paid to the attorney employee for the time expended on the case; out-of-pocket expenses related to the case; and overhead costs. Additionally, as to overhead costs, in the absence of evidence that an allowance of 100 percent of the attorney's compensation for overhead is substantially excessive or insufficient, such an overhead allowance may normally be included as an element of actual costs. Powell v. Department of the Treasury, 8 MSPB 21 (1981).

Among the reasons for limiting fees for salaried union attorneys under those statutory provisions to recovery of actual costs is, as the MSPB held in Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB at 333:

> [T]o award more . . . than that which is available under the cost-plus method would be inconsistent with the language and purpose of 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1)(A)(ii), the fees provision of the Back Pay Act. An attorney fee award ordered under that provision may not exceed the cost reasonably incurred by or on behalf of the employee for legal representation. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). This is consistent with the general purpose of the Back Pay Act to "make whole" employees who had suffered a loss in salary and benefits as the result of an improper personnel action. Senate Report No. 1062, 89th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1966) 1-2. Nothing in the Civil Service Reform Act indicates that Congress, in amending section 5596, intended to deviate from this basic principle. Thus, section 5596 clearly limits the recovery of costs for legal expenses incurred by or on behalf of employees to the expense they suffered as a result of the action. It is not intended to provide a union with a windfall profit for the performance of services which it was created to provide and by their dues its members support.

In this case, it is undisputed that the attorney who represented the grievant is an employee of the Union. Consequently, reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) for his services can only be awarded on a cost-plus basis. Therefore, to the extent that the Arbitrator awarded attorney fees on other than a cost-plus basis, the award is deficient and must be modified.

VI. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> Reasonable attorney fees are hereby awarded to reimburse the Union for its actual costs in representing the Grievant in this matter, including the 22.2 hours the Union attorney devoted to the case, in accordance with the applicable cost-plus formula.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 22, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the supplemental award of attorney fees by Arbitrator Clair V. Duff filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The underlying grievance in this case concerned the 10-day suspension of the grievant for alleged failure to process tax remittances and tax returns in a timely manner. The Activity's charges or reasons for the action were based on a number of specifications of unprocessed checks, tax returns and other documents found in or around the grievant's desk and in a file cabinet in the collection division office area. The Arbitrator separated the evidence presented into two parts: the items found in the file cabinet and the items found in the grievant's desk and adjacent work area. As to the specifications concerning the items discovered in the file cabinet, the Arbitrator found that no culpable conduct on the part of the grievant was established, but rather, that at most the evidence indicated inefficiency on the part of management. The Arbitrator concluded that the evidence presented as to those items did not constitute substantial evidence of an infraction, as required by a provision in the parties' collective bargaining agreement establishing the burden of proof for disciplinary actions. As to the items found in the grievant's desk and adjacent work area, the Arbitrator found that there was no substantial evidence proving that the grievant was in any way at fault or connected with the documents. The Arbitrator further found that the location of the documents in the grievant's work area was sufficient to create suspicion, but that upon careful examination of the documents and consideration of the other facts and circumstances involved, the evidence was more consistent with the grievant's innocence than with her guilt. The Arbitrator concluded that the Activity's proof concerning the items in and around the grievant's desk was inadequate to meet the required standard of substantial evidence.

Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator set aside the suspension, directed the Activity to expunge from the grievant's personnel file all references to the charges against her, and to reimburse the grievant for all wages, leave and other benefits lost as a result of the suspension. At the request of the Union, the Arbitrator also left the record in the proceeding open to permit the parties to file briefs on the issue of whether reasonable attorney fees should be granted pursuant to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596.[1] The Union subsequently filed an application for an award of fees in the amount of $6090 for the legal services provided the grievant by two of its staff attorneys. The Union's application and supporting brief claimed that it was entitled to compensation for the services of one of the attorneys for 87 hours at $75 per hour and for the services of the second attorney for 5 hours at $85 per hour based upon the market value of similar legal services in the locality.

> . . . .
> (b)(1) An employee of an agency who, on the basis of a timely appeal or an administrative determination (including a decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance) is found by appropriate authority under applicable law, rule, regulation, or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of all or part of the pay, allowances, or differentials of the employee--

In his supplemental opinion and award, the Arbitrator identified the issue as whether the Union, as counsel for the grievant, was entitled to an award of reasonable attorney fees pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5596, 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g),[2] and the relevant provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Arbitrator found that the first two requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1), i.e.,

---

> (A) is entitled, on correction of the personnel action, to receive for the period for which the personnel action was in effect--
> . . . .
> (ii) reasonable attorney fees related to the personnel action which, with respect to any decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance processed under a procedure negotiated in accordance with chapter 71 of this title . . . shall be awarded in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g) of this title[.]

[2] 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1982) provides, in pertinent part:

> (1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Board . . . may require payment by the agency involved of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee . . . if the employee . . . is the prevailing party and the Board . . . determines that payment by the agency is warranted in the interest of justice, including any case in which a prohibited personnel practice was engaged in by the agency or any case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit.

that the fees claimed be incurred by the employee and that the employee must be prevailing party, were satisfied and not in dispute. The Arbitrator further found that the focal point of the case was whether the payment of fees by the Activity was warranted in the interest of justice. As to this requirement, the Arbitrator found that two of the examples set forth in the decision of the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) in Allen v, U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980), to illustrate "interest of justice" were applicable:

- Where the agency's action was "clearly without merit" (§ 7701(g)(1)), or was "wholly unfounded," or the employee is "substantially innocent" of the charges brought by the agency; and
- Where the agency "knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits" when it brought the proceeding.

Applying those standards to the Activity's charges against the grievant, the Arbitrator found with regard to the allegations concerning the items found in the office file cabinet that based on the various facts and circumstances involved the Activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits. The Arbitrator therefore concluded that attorney fees were warranted in the interest of justice for the legal services related to those allegations. In that regard, the Arbitrator essentially found that approximately half of the time claimed by the attorneys was devoted to this aspect of the case. As to the Activity's allegations concerning the items found in and around the grievant's desk, however, the Arbitrator found that while the evidence was insufficient to sustain the charges against the grievant, the charges were not wholly unfounded and this part of the case was not so clear that the Activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits. The Arbitrator therefore concluded that counsel fees were not warranted for the legal services related to those allegations. For the legal services for which fees were found to be warranted, the Arbitrator ruled that the compensation claimed by the Union was based on a reasonable allocation of time and an amount per hour that was reasonable but below the prevailing rate of legal compensation in the locality. As his award the Arbitrator provided:

The Union's Application for Award of Attorney's Fees is granted to the extent that a total of $3,000 is warranted and the Agency is directed to reimburse the Union in said amount.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Activity contends that the Arbitrator's award of fees is contrary to law. Specifically, the Activity contends that under MSPB's decision in the Allen case and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), a determination as to whether attorney fees are warranted in a case such as this requires that an agency's reasons for initiating a disciplinary action must be viewed as a totality and not separately. The Activity similarly argues that an arbitrator may only find either that there was a reasonable basis for the action or find that there was not such a basis, and that an issue-by-issue analysis and determination is not permitted. Thus, the Activity concludes, an award of attorney fees in a case such as this would be warranted only if an agency's reasons for the action were determined to be "wholly unfounded."

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Activity has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees is contrary to law as alleged in this exception. Neither the decision of the MSPB in Allen nor 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g) precludes an arbitrator from granting part of a request for attorney fees based on a determination that only that part was warranted under applicable legal requirements. In this regard, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit has clearly indicated in two decisions that an award of less than the full amount of fees claimed can be appropriate. In Thomson v. Merit Systems Protection Board, 772 F.2d 879, 882 (Fed. Cir. 1985), the court held in remanding the case to MSPB for correction of certain errors that "the Board should have the opportunity initially to determine whether full fees, no fees, or partial fees should be allowed." In Van Fossen v. Merit Systems Protection Board, No. 86-536, slip op. at 7-8 (Fed. Cir. April 10, 1986), the court held that because the charges against the employee that were sustained were technical and very minor and because the original drastic penalty of removal was significantly mitigated to a 30-day suspension, not only did the employee prevail in the proceeding but he had also shown himself to be substantially innocent of the charges so as to be entitled to attorney fees. In remanding the case to the MSPB for determination of an appropriate award, the court directed that "[t]he Board will have to decide whether to allow full attorney fees or to make some deduction for the fact that these minor and technical charges were sustained."

Based upon the decisions of the Federal Circuit, the Authority concludes, contrary to the Activity, that an arbitrator properly can award partial attorney fees based upon the Arbitrator's disposition of different aspects of a case, if the award of fees otherwise meets the requirements of 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1).

In this regard, the Authority recently summarized those requirements in Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 25 (1986). In order for an award of attorney fees to be authorized, the award of fees first must be in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on the correction of an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action; it must be reasonable and related to the personnel action; and it must be in accordance with the standards established under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). Section 7701(g)(1), which applies to all cases except those of discrimination, requires that the fees must be reasonable and must have been incurred by the employee; that the employee must be the prevailing party in the proceeding; and that payment of the fees by the agency involved must be warranted in the interest of justice. Finally, there must be a "fully articulated, reasoned decision" setting forth the specific findings supporting the determination on each pertinent statutory requirement, including the basis upon which the reasonableness of the amount was determined when fees are awarded. In this case, it is clear that the Arbitrator properly established in a fully articulated and reasoned decision that the Union is entitled to an award of attorney fees. Thus, the award of fees is in conjunction with an award of backpay to the grievant on correction of the unwarranted suspension action. There is no dispute that fees were incurred in behalf of the employee and that the grievant is the prevailing party. With regard to the "interest of justice" standard, the Arbitrator expressly found, based upon consideration and discussion of the various facts and circumstances involved, that the Activity knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits of its allegations against the grievant concerning the documents found in the office file cabinet. The Authority therefore concludes that the Arbitrator's determination that the Union is entitled to reimbursement for attorney fees incurred in defending the grievant against those allegations is fully consistent with applicable legal requirements and that the Activity's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

The Authority turns now to the question of the reasonableness of the amount of fees awarded as raised in the Activity's second exception.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Activity contends that the Arbitrator's supplemental award of attorney fees to the Union based on an hourly rate at or near the prevailing private practice rate for those hours is contrary to law as enunciated by the Federal courts and MSPB. The Activity further contends that salaried union staff attorneys are only entitled to fees calculated on a cost-plus basis.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In determining what constitutes reasonable attorney fees, courts have applied a variety of methods and analyses. An example of a method acceptable to administrative adjudicatory agencies and most courts is the "lodestar" method, where the attorney's customary hourly billing rate is multiplied by the number of hours reasonably devoted to the case with appropriate adjustments for any special factors. Naval Air Development Center, slip op. at 9. This is the method ordinarily applied by the MSPB in determining reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) when the attorney involved is in private practice, e.g., Kling v. Department of Justice, 2 MSPB 620, 624-28 (1980), and applied by the Authority in reviewing an arbitrator's award of fees to an attorney in private practice. Naval Air Development Center, slip op. at 12.

Where, however, the attorney is an employee of a union, a different method must be applied in computing reasonable fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). Where attorney fees are to be paid to a union, the fees are computed based on actual costs rather than on the prevailing market rate for the legal services rendered. Further, a special fund created by the union into which all fees awarded to attorney employees would be paid and expended solely for legal work does not entitle the union to market-rate fees for the services of its attorneys. Id. at 10; National Treasury Employees Union v. Department of the Treasury, 656 F.2d 848 (D.C. Cir. 1981); Goodrich v. Department of the Navy, 733 F.2d 1578 (Fed. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 105 S. Ct. 958 (1985); Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB 329 (1982).

With regard to the computation of actual costs, there are three elements to be considered: the compensation paid to the attorney employee for the time expended on the case; out-of-pocket expenses related to the case; and overhead costs. Additionally, as to overhead costs, in the absence of evidence that an allowance of 100 percent of the attorney's compensation for overhead is substantially excessive or insufficient, such an overhead allowance may normally be included as an element of actual costs. Powell v. Department of the Treasury, 8 MSPB 21 (1981).

Among the reasons for limiting fees for salaried union attorneys under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) to recovery of actual costs is, as the MSPB held in Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB at 333:

> [T]o award more . . . than that which is available under the cost-plus method would be inconsistent with the language and purpose of 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1)(A)(ii), the fees provision of the Back Pay Act. An attorney fee award ordered under that provision may not exceed the cost reasonably incurred by or on behalf of the employee for legal representation. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). This is consistent with the general purpose of the Back Pay Act to "make whole" employees who had suffered a loss in salary and benefits as the result of an improper personnel action. Senate Report No. 1062, 89th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1966) 1-2. Nothing in the Civil Service Reform Act

> Congress, in amending section 5596, intended to deviate from this basic principle. Thus, section 5596 clearly limits the recovery of costs for legal expenses incurred by or on behalf of employees to the expense they suffered as a result of the action. It is not intended to provide a union with a windfall profit for the performance of services which it was created to provide and by their dues its members support.

In this case, it is undisputed that the attorneys who represented the grievant are employees of the Union. Consequently, reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) for their services can only be awarded on a cost-plus basis. Therefore, to the extent that the Arbitrator awarded attorney's fees on other than a cost-plus basis, the award is deficient and must be modified.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified as follows:

> The Union's Application for Award of Attorney Fees is granted for that portion of the legal services provided for which compensation has been determined to be warranted in the interest of justice and the Agency is directed to reimburse the Union for its actual costs in accordance with the applicable cost-plus formula.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator John J. Murphy filed by the Department of Justice (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Office of Personnel Management filed a brief as an amicus curiae.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievant alleged that her performance evaluation of "fully successful" was erroneous and that as a result she was not selected for certain GS-8 positions for which she competed. The Arbitrator determined that the grievant's evaluation for the 1983-1984 appraisal period was substantially defective because it did not include input from the unit manager who acted as her supervisor during nine of the twelve months covered by the evaluation.

However, he found that although the grievant's rating would probably have been higher if the evaluation had been conducted properly, there was no basis upon which he could determine the actual rating. The Arbitrator therefore concluded that he was unable to make a finding that "but for" the error the grievant would have been promoted to GS-8 in June 1984 rather than May 1985, and that he was unable to award the grievant a retroactive promotion. The Arbitrator, noting that the grievant had subsequently been promoted to GS-8, determined that an appropriate remedy for earlier deficiencies in the process of rating the grievant would be the granting of preferential treatment for promotion to GS-9 and made the following award:

> The grievance is granted to the extent the Grievant shall be given priority placement for the next promotion to a GS-9 level at the Federal Correctional Institution in Lexington, Kentucky, that occurs after the Grievant has had at least one year in the GS-8 grade.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute because it requires "placement" of the grievant in a GS-9 position and therefore negates management's right to make a selection for appointment to such a position from any other appropriate source.

The Agency further contends that if the Arbitrator directed that the grievant be given priority consideration for promotion to GS-9, the award is contrary to Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) chapter 335. In support of this contention the Agency argues that according priority consideration to the grievant for a GS-9 position would be inappropriate and contrary to the intent of FPM chapter 335. The Agency acknowledges that under FPM chapter 335, Appendix A-4,*/ agencies have broad discretion to use priority consideration to remedy errors in promotion actions. However, the Agency argues that priority consideration is a limited exception to the merit promotion process and that the intent of the FPM provision is to give an employee who has been erroneously not selected or not properly considered for promotion, consideration ahead of others only for another position at the same grade level.

> a. General.
> (1) Alternative actions . . . >
> (2) If the corrective action did not include vacating the position, an employee who was not promoted or given proper consideration because of the violation may be given priority consideration under a new promotion or other placement action. Agencies may make the final determination on how they will handle actions involving nonselected employees, except when actions are mandated by law or regulation.

In its amicus curiae submission, the Office of Personnel Management agrees with the Agency's interpretation of FPM chapter 335.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority finds that the decision on the issue of whether the Arbitrator's award is deficient as the Agency alleges depends on the meaning of the word "placement."

If "placement" means selection, the Agency is correct in its contention that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. It is well established that management's right to make the actual selection for an appointment can only be abridged if the arbitrator finds a direct connection between improper agency action and the failure of a specific employee to be selected. Office of the Secretary, U.S. Department of Transportation and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3313, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA 54 (1985). The Arbitrator did not find any connection whatsoever between the Agency's improper action and the nonselection of the grievant for any GS-9 position. Rather, the Arbitrator specifically declined to even make a finding that but for the improper evaluation, the grievant would have been selected for a GS-8 position. Consequently, as the Arbitrator correctly recognized, there was no legal basis for ordering a retroactive promotion to GS-8, and there is likewise no legal basis for ordering the selection of the grievant for a GS-9 position. The Authority therefore concludes that the Arbitrator's award, to the extent it directs placement of the grievant in a GS-9 position, is contrary to management's right to make selections for appointment under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute.

If, however, "priority placement" means "priority consideration," the Agency has failed to establish that the award is deficient. In the typical situation where an aggrieved employee has been wrongfully denied the consideration or process to which the employee was entitled in a promotion action, and the employee has not yet been promoted when the grievance is considered, the Authority has recognized that an appropriate remedy under Appendix A-4c(2) of FPM chapter 335 is to direct that the employee be granted priority consideration for promotion to the next available higher-graded position for which the employee is qualified. E.g., Local R4-97, National Association of Government Employees and Naval Mine Engineering Facility, Yorktown, Virginia, 5 FLRA 452, 456 (1981). However, as the Agency acknowledges, FPM chapter 335 does not expressly limit the remedy of priority consideration to those typical situations. Specifically, the FPM does not prohibit priority consideration as a remedy in circumstances such as here involved. Rather, as the Agency further acknowledges, Appendix A-4 provides broad discretion in the use of priority consideration as a corrective action. In this case, it is clear that the Arbitrator, consistent with Appendix A-4, based his determination that priority treatment for a GS-9 vacancy was warranted to remedy the violation found on the facts, circumstances, rights and interests involved. Furthermore, it is well established that arbitrators have considerable latitude in fashioning remedies in disputes. Veterans Administration Hospital, Newington, Connecticut and National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-109, 5 FLRA 64 (1981). The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that an award of priority consideration for promotion to GS-9 in this case is deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance is granted and the Grievant shall be given priority consideration for promotion to the next available GS-9 position at the Federal Correctional Institution in Lexington, Kentucky, that occurs after the Grievant has at least one year in the GS-8 grade and for which the grievant applies and is qualified.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the supplemental award of attorney fees by Arbitrator Ira F. Jaffe filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

In his initial award in this matter, the Arbitrator found that the parties' collective bargaining agreement clearly required that the grievant should have been temporarily promoted for a period she performed the duties of a higher-graded position and that in settlement of the grievance the Agency had also agreed by letter that the grievant was entitled to backpay for the full period. The Arbitrator concluded that the Agency violated the terms of the grievance settlement and the collective bargaining agreement by its failure to pay the grievant at the higher rate of pay for the period. The Arbitrator awarded the grievant backpay for the period and retained jurisdiction of the matter for the limited purpose of entertaining an application for attorney fees. The Union filed a request for fees pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5596[1],

[1] 5 U.S.C. § 5596 provides in part:

> § 5596. Back pay due to unjustified personnel action.
> . . . .
> (h)(1) An employee of an agency who, on the basis of a timely appeal or an administrative determination (including a decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance) is found by appropriate authority under applicable law, rule, regulation, or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which has resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of all or part of the pay, allowances, or differentials of the employee--
> (A) is entitled, on correction of the personnel action, to receive for the period for which the personnel action was in effect--
> . . . .
> (ii) reasonable attorney fees related to the personnel action which, with respect to any decision relating to an unfair labor practice or a grievance processed under a procedure negotiated in accordance with chapter 71 of this title . . . shall be awarded in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g) of this title[.]

5 U.S.C. § 7701(g),2/ and the applicable provision of the parties' agreement. The attorney claimed compensation for 66.9 hours at $95 per hour, the prevailing rate in the geographic area for a labor attorney with his experience.

In his supplemental award, the Arbitrator found that there was no dispute that the grievant was the prevailing party. The Arbitrator, citing O'Donnell v. Department of the Interior, 2 MSPB 604, 608-10 (1980), also found that attorney fees had been incurred by the employee. The Arbitrator further found that under the decision of the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) in Allen v. U.S. Postal Service, 2 MSPB 582 (1980),3/ attorney fees were warranted in the "interest of justice" because the Agency's failure to abide by its earlier grievance settlement agreement and its repudiation of the basis for its earlier payments to the grievant were wholly unfounded; because the Agency knew or should have known that it would not prevail on the merits; and because the Agency's action was clearly without merit.

2/ 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) (1982) provides:

> Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Board . . . may require payment by the agency involved of reasonable attorney fees incurred by an employee . . . if the employee . . . is the prevailing party and the Board . . . determines that payment by the agency is warranted in the interest of justice, including any case in which a prohibited personnel practice was engaged in by the agency or any case in which the agency's action was clearly without merit.

3/ In Allen, the Board set forth some examples of circumstances in which attorney fees would be warranted in the interest of justice, including situations:

> - where the agency's action was "clearly without merit," or was "wholly unfounded," or the employee is "substantially innocent" of the charges brought by the agency; and
> - where the agency "knew or should have known it would not prevail on the merits" when it brought the proceeding.

With regard to the actual amount of reasonable fees to be awarded, the Arbitrator found that the number of hours claimed by the Union attorney was reasonable. As to the reasonableness of the rate, however, the Arbitrator found, based on Goodrich v. Department of the Navy, 733 F.2d 1578 (Fed. Cir. 1984), cert. denied 105 S. Ct. 958 (1985) and Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB 329 (1982), that an award of fees at the prevailing market rate to salaried union counsel would not be "reasonable" and would be at odds with the purposes of the Back Pay Act and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). The Arbitrator further found that both Wells and Goodrich support the proposition that the make whole purposes underlying the statutory attorney fee provisions involved do not support payment of market-rate fees to salaried union attorneys because such fees would provide the union with a windfall profit. The Arbitrator further found that creation of a special litigation fund by the Union into which attorney fees were to be paid did not overcome those considerations. The Arbitrator therefore concluded that recovery of attorney fees in this case was limited to the actual cost of the attorney's salary plus an overhead cost allowance. On that basis, the Arbitrator awarded 66.9 hours of attorney fees at the cost-plus rate and reimbursement of the attorney's travel costs.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its exception, the Union contends that the award of attorney fees is deficient because 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) requires that an arbitrator must base an award of reasonable attorney fees on the prevailing market rate. In support of its contention, the Union argues that under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Freedom of Information Act and the Privacy Act, provisions for an award of reasonable attorney fees are construed as an entitlement to fees at the market rate and, therefore, any award of reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C § 7701(g)(1) also must be based on such a rate. The Union also argues that the concerns raised by the court in National Treasury Employees Union v. U.S. Department of the Treasury, 656 F.2d 848 (D.C. Cir. 1981), and by the MSPB in Powell v. Department of the Treasury, 8 MSPB 21 (1981), have been resolved by the Union's establishment of a Legal Services Program (LSP). In the NTEU case, the court found that an attorney employed by a union could not receive legal fees in excess of the union's actual expenses in providing the particular services because the union compensated the attorneys at well below the going value of their services on the open market and that the union therefore would profit on the legal activities of its lawyers, contrary to the American Bar Association's Code of Professional Responsibility, under any arrangement whereby market value fees found their way into the union's general treasury. The Union in this case maintains that any attorney fees recovered will be set aside for the LSP and used solely to litigate the rights of Federal employees before administrative and judicial tribunals. Therefore, the Union argues, the LSP should qualify for treatment as a public interest organization or legal services firm and be compensated under the market-rate formula.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In determining what constitutes reasonable attorney fees, courts have applied a variety of methods and analyses. An example of a method acceptable to administrative adjudicatory agencies and most courts is the "lodestar" method, in which the attorney's customary hourly billing rate is multiplied by the number of hours reasonably devoted to the case with appropriate adjustments for any special factors. Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 25 (1986), slip op. at 9. This is the method ordinarily applied by the MSPB in determining reasonable attorney fees under 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) when the attorney involved is in private practice, e.g., Kling v. Department of Justice, 2 MSPB 620, 624-28 (1980), and applied by the Authority in reviewing an arbitrator's award of fees to an attorney in private practice. Naval Air Development Center, slip op. at 12.

Where, however, the attorney is an employee of a union, a different method must be applied in computing reasonable fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1). Where such fees are to be paid to a union, the fees are computed based on actual costs rather than on the prevailing market rate for the legal services rendered. Further, a special fund created by a union into which all fees awarded to union-employed attorneys would be paid and expended solely for legal work does not entitle the union to market rate fees under 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1) for the services of its staff. Id. at 10, citing Goodrich and NTEU v. Department of the Treasury. Among the reasons for limiting fees for salaried union attorneys under those statutory provisions to recovery of actual costs is, as the Arbitrator in this case recognized and the MSPB held in Wells v. Schweiker, 12 MSPB at 333:

> [T]o award more . . . than that which is available under the cost-plus method would be inconsistent with the language and purpose of 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1)(A)(ii), the fees provision of the Back Pay Act. An attorney fee award ordered under that provision may not exceed the cost reasonably incurred by or on behalf of the employee for legal representation. Cf. 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g). This is consistent with the general purpose of the Back Pay Act to "make whole" employees who had suffered a loss in salary and benefits as the result of an improper personnel action. Senate Report No. 1062, 89th Cong., 2nd Sess. (1966) 1-2. Nothing in the Civil Service Reform Act indicates that Congress, in amending section 5596, intended to deviate from this basic principle. Thus, section 5596 clearly limits the recovery of costs for legal expenses incurred by or on behalf of employees to the expense they suffered as a result of the action. It is not intended to provide a union with a windfall profit for the performance of services which it was created to provide and by their dues its members support.

In this case it is undisputed that the attorney who represented the grievant was an employee of the Union. Consequently, as the Arbitrator determined consistent with 5 U.S.C. § 5596 and 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g)(1), reasonable attorney fees for his services were limited to providing for reimbursement of the actual costs[4] of those services.

[4] With regard to the computation of actual costs, there are three elements to be considered: the compensation paid to the attorney employee for the time expended on the case; out-of-pocket expenses related to the case; and overhead costs. Additionally, as to overhead costs, in the absence of evidence that an allowance of 100 percent of the attorney's compensation for overhead is substantially excessive or insufficient, such an overhead allowance may normally be included as an element of actual costs. Powell v. Department of the Treasury, 8 MSPB at 28-30.

Therefore, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award of reasonable attorney fees on the cost-plus basis is deficient as alleged.5/.

IV. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Union's exception is denied.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained. Further, under section 2429.23(d) of the Authority's rules of procedure, the time limit established in section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute may not extended or waived by the Authority.

The documents the Union submitted with its petition for review indicate that the parties forwarded a locally executed collective bargaining agreement to the Agency Head for review and approval pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute. As a result of such review, the Agency Head's designee disapproved certain provisions in the negotiated agreement by letter dated April 15, 1986. The disapproval apparently was served on the Union by mail on the same date. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, not later than the close of business on May 5, 1986. However, the petition was not filed with the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., until May 6, 1986.

In its negotiability appeal, the Union states at the outset that the Agency's disapproval was, "By letter received by the Union on April 21, 1986 . . . ." Inasmuch as the period for filing the instant petition for review began on the date the Agency's disapproval was served on the Union, that is, deposited in the mail (see section 2429.27(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations), and not on the date the disapproval was received, the Union's appeal was untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

NATIONAL MARITIME UNION OF

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the Respondent to the attached decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The issue concerns whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing to comply fully with an arbitrator's award to which no exceptions were filed pursuant to section 7122 of the Statute and which therefore had become final and binding.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

The Judge found that the Respondent had complied with the award of the arbitrator except the part of his award which called for the payment of interest and which the Respondent argued before the Judge was illegal based on Authority precedent. The Judge concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply fully with the arbitrator's award to which no exceptions had been filed, and ordered the Respondent to pay interest at "the prevailing legal rate" on the backpay awarded, retroactive to July 1, 1983.

III. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions, the Respondent, citing the Authority's earlier decision in Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, 7 FLRA 30 (1981),[1] argues that the arbitration award in this case, to the extent that it requires the payment of interest, is contrary to law. Therefore, the Respondent argues that its failure to comply with that part of the award did not violate the Statute. The Respondent further argues that the Authority's decision in Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, 15 FLRA 706 (1984),[2] should not be dispositive of this case because the Authority's rationale in that case was erroneous in light of its decision in Portsmouth Naval Shipyard. The General Counsel and the Charging Party, in their respective oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions, assert that the Respondent's contentions are without merit and that the Judge's conclusion is correct and amply supported by Authority precedent. The Charging Party's cross-exceptions also take issue with the Judge's comments on page 5 of his Decision as to how he would view this matter if it were a case of first impression.

IV. Analysis

In this case the Respondent primarily seeks to raise the illegality of the arbitrator's award as a defense to the complaint alleging that its noncompliance was an unfair labor practice. In United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA 151, 153 (1984), affirmed sub nom. Department of the Air Force, et al. v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 775 F.2d 727 (6th Cir. 1985), the Authority stated:

---

[1] In Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, an arbitration case involving timely filed exceptions to an arbitrator's award, the Authority on review modified the arbitrator's award after having determined that the Back Pay Act did not authorize the payment of interest.

[2] In Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, involving the same issue as in this case and where no exceptions to the arbitrator's award were filed, the Authority rejected the agency's defense that interest payments were precluded by the Back Pay Act and therefore unlawful, and concluded that the agency violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to fully comply with an arbitrator's award as required by section 7122 of the Statute.

> [W]here a party seeks to challenge the propriety of an arbitration award, the appropriate mechanism for doing so, as Congress clearly intended, is through the filing of exceptions to that award under the provisions of section 7122(a) of the Statute. Where a party fails to avail itself of this procedure within the allotted time period, the award becomes final and binding and an agency is required to take such actions as are required by the award. . . . To allow a party which has not filed exceptions to an award to defend its failure to implement that award in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding on grounds that should have been raised as exceptions to the award under section 7122 . . . would circumvent the procedures provided in section 7122(a) and frustrate Congressional intent with respect to the finality of arbitration awards.

Subsequently, in Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA 686 (1984) and Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, 15 FLRA 706 (1984), the Authority, relying on the rationale expressed in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, found in each case that the agency had failed to file timely exceptions to the arbitrator's award, and therefore violated the Statute by virtue of its failure to comply with the award. The Authority specifically reaffirms its rationale expressed in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and its holdings in the latter two cases.

Turning to the instant case, the Authority finds, based on the above decisions and for the reasons expressed in those cases, that the Respondent was required to file timely exceptions to the award of the arbitrator under section 7122 if it wished to raise a contention that all or part of that award was contrary to law. This is exactly what the agency did in Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, and the Authority upheld the agency's contention that a requirement to pay interest on the award of shift premium was unlawful. However, where the Respondent has failed to raise the issue in that forum, it cannot subsequently seek to raise the contention as a defense for its refusal to comply with the award in an unfair labor practice proceeding under section 7118 of the Statute.3/ Accordingly, the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to fully comply with the arbitrator's award which had become final and binding, as required by section 7122 of the Statute.

Finally, in view of the foregoing, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address the Judge's comments with regard to how he would have decided the case if it had been a matter of first impression.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent's refusal to pay interest at the prevailing legal rate on the backpay awarded, as required by the arbitrator's award, which had become final and binding under section 7122(b) of the Statute in the absence of timely exceptions, constituted a failure to comply fully with the arbitrator's award and therefore a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

3/ In addition to the cases cited above, see also United States Marshals Service v. FLRA, 778 F.2d 1432 (9th Cir. 1985), affirming the Authority's decision in United States Marshals Service, 13 FLRA 351 (1983). The Marshals Service case involved an agency's refusal to comply with an unfair labor practice remedial order of the Authority directing compliance with an arbitrator's award, even though the Authority in a separate proceeding under section 7122 of the Statute previously had rejected the agency's contentions that the arbitrator's award was deficient. In affirming the

Statement of the Case

This proceeding, under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the United States Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.[1], and the Final Rules and Regulations issued thereunder, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.1, et seq., concerns whether Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by refusing to pay interest awarded by an arbitrator where no exceptions were filed and the award had become final. Respondent fully complied with the decision and award of the arbitrator except as to the payment of interest which it asserts is illegal. This case was initiated by a charge filed on July 20, 1984 (Jt. Exh. 1), which alleged violations of §§ 16(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute and named as parties the Department of the Navy, Military Sealift Command, and Military Sealift Command (Atlantic). A Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on September 28, 1984 (Jt. Exh. 3) and set the hearing for January 7, 1985. A First Amended charge was filed on December 17, 1984 (Jt. Exh. 2), named only the Military Sealift Command (Atlantic) and alleged violations of §§ 16(a)(1) and (8); and an Amended Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on December 26, 1984, named only Military Sealift Command (Atlantic), alleged only violations of §§ 16(a)(1) and (8), and again set the hearing for January 7, 1985 (Jt. Exh. 5), pursuant to which a hearing was duly held on January 7, 1985, in New York City before the undersigned, at which time the parties submitted a Stipulation, G.C. Exh. 1, which constitutes the entire factual record in this proceeding (G.C. Exh. 1, Par. 25). At the close of the hearing, by agreement of the parties, February 21, 1985, was fixed as the date for mailing post-hearing briefs and each party timely mailed an excellent brief, received on, or before, February 25, 1985, which have been carefully considered.

[1] For convenience of reference, sections of the Statute hereinafter are, also, referred to without inclusion of the initial "71" of the Statute reference, e.g., Section 7116(a)(8) will be referred to, simply, as "§ 16(a)(8)."

Facts

Respondent and the Charging Party, National Maritime Union of America, AFL-CIO (hereinafter also referred to as "NMU") were parties to a collective bargaining agreement which expired June 15, 1981 (Jt. Exh. 7). The terms and conditions of employment set forth in the agreement have continued to remain in full force and effect (G.C. Exh. 1, Par. 6(b)). On, or about, April 6, 1984, Arbitrator Earle Warren Zaidins issued an award in FMCS Case No. 83K/28835 involving Respondent and NMU, which provided that Respondent was "to pay all affected employees the contractual longshore rate of pay, retroactive to July 1, 1983 . . . together with the prevailing legal rate of interest thereon" (G.C. Exh. 1, Par. 7; Jt. Exh. 8). No exceptions to the award were filed. By September 1, 1984, Respondent had complied with the award with respect to the payment of backpay (G.C. Exh. 1, Par. 11). However, Respondent has refused to pay interest on the backpay based on Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, 7 FLRA 30 (1981), which provides that interest payments in an arbitration award are not authorized by the Back Pay Act. (G.C. Exh. 1, Par. 12).

Discussion and Conclusions

In Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, 7 FLRA No. 9, 7 FLRA 30 (1981), which was before the Authority on an exception to that portion of an arbitration award directing the payment of interest, the Authority modified the award to strike out "with interest." The Authority noted that it was well settled that, ". . . unless authorized by an express provision in a relevant statute or contract, interest is not available against the Federal Government." (7 FLRA at 32); that it had been held that the Back Pay Act prior to the 1978 amendments did not authorize an award of interest [Fitzgerald v. Staats, 578 F.2d 435, 438 (D.C. Cir 1978), cert. denied, 439 U.S. 1004 (1978); Van Winkle v. McLucas, 537 F.2d 246 (6th Cir. 1976), cert. denied 429 U.S. 1093 (1977)]; and that, ". . . The legislative history to the Civil Service Reform Act indicates Congressional intent to continue this express omission in the Back Pay Act. In this regard, the final version of the bill passed by the House, H.R. 11280, included among its provisions amending the Back Pay Act a specific provision for the payment of backpay, 'plus 5 percent.' (footnote omitted). However, the version of the bill reported out of the Senate-House Conference Committee, which was ultimately enacted and signed into law . . . did not contain this 'plus 5 percent' provision. This action 'strongly militates against a judgment that Congress intended a result that it expressly declined to enact.' See Gulf Oil Corporation v. Copp Paving Company, Inc., 419 U.S. 186, 200 (1974)[6] (7 FLRA at 32-33)

> "[6] Accordingly, we respectfully disagree in the present case with the decision of the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit is Payne v. Panama Canal Co., 607 F.2d 155 (5th Cir. 1979), in which the court upheld, under the Back Pay Act as amended in 1978, a district court decision granting interest as part of an award of backpay." (7 FLRA at 33).

The Authority concluded,

> "Thus, the settled rule that interest is proscribed when not expressly authorized is controlling in this case. Because no statutory provision expressly permits the interest awarded by the Arbitrator, his award must be modified accordingly." (7 FLRA at 33).

In American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1778, AFL-CIO, 10 FLRA No. 62, 10 FLRA 346 (1982), the Authority denied the award of interest against a union, stating,

> "Inasmuch as interest is not available against the Federal Government in the absence of an express provision in a relevant statute or contract, and no relevant statutory provision expressly permits the payment of such interest by Federal agencies (see, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard and Federal Metal Trades Council (Fallon, Arbitrator), 7 FLRA No. 9 (1981), the Authority concludes that it would not effectuate the purposes of the Statute to require labor organizations to pay interest in > similar circumstances as included by the Judge in his recommended order. Accordingly, the Judges's recommendation that the Respondent be required to pay interest . . . is rejected." (10 FLRA at 352, n. 6).

The Authority has recognized that an agency may discontinue an unlawful past practice upon discovery of its illegality with no obligation to bargain concerning the decision to discontinue such practice, although it must, upon request, bargain upon impact and implementation. See, for example, Department of the Interior, U.S. Geological Survey, Conservation Division, Gulf of Mexico Region, Metairie, Louisiana, 9 FLRA No. 65, 9 FLRA 543 (1982); and, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, it was recognized that ". . . any provision of an agreement which conflicts with law, the Order, or regulations of appropriate authorities outside the agency would be void and unenforceable. See Section VII of the Council's Report and Recommendations (1975)." (Defense General Supply Center, A/SLMR No. 790, 7 A/SLMR 102, 104, n. 4).

Confronted with the issue of an arbitration award, to which no exception had been filed, which required an improper payment, i.e., a payment contrary to law, the Federal Labor Relations Council, in Department of the Army, Aberdeen Proving Ground, FLRC No. 74A-46, 3 FLRC 188 (1975), while first stating that, ". . . A party's refusal to comply with an arbitration award . . . where the party has failed to file exceptions . . . is a failure to comply with its obligations under the Order and may be deemed an unfair labor practice. And such a party may not relieve himself of such obligations under the Order by requesting an opinion from another agency such as the United States General Accounting Office. Hence, such action is not a defense to an unfair labor practice charged for failure to implement an arbitration award . . . ." (3 FLRC at 194), nevertheless, held,

> "However, the Assistant Secretary, in fashioning a remedial order in unfair labor practice cases, may not require a party to engage in an illegal action. In this connection, the Assistant Secretary's remedial order must 'effectuate the purposes of the Order.' (footnote omitted). Obviously, it would be inconsistent with such purposes to require a party to violate applicable law, appropriate regulation or the Order (footnote omitted). Thus, where the Assistant Secretary finds that an agency has committed an unfair labor practice under Executive Order 11491, as amended, by its failure to abide by an arbitration award to which no exceptions were filed with the council, the Assistant Secretary may not, as part of his remedial order, direct the agency to comply with an award which > the Comptroller General has determined, under 31 U.S.C. § 74, to call for an improper payment and, hence, to be contrary to law." (3 FLRC at 195)(Emphasis supplied).

In his Supplemental Decision and Order, A/SLMR No. 518, 5 A/SLMR 349 (1975), the Assistant Secretary did not require the Respondent, Department of the Army, Aberdeen Proving Ground, to implement the arbitration award involved by making payment to the Complainant, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, Local Lodge 2424, ordered by the arbitrator, although posting and a cease and desist order issued, see 5 A/SLMR at 351.

In this case the arbitrator was wrong in awarding interest on backpay; Respondent was wrong in failing to file exceptions to the award; but two wrongs do not make a right. If this were a case of first impression, I should follow without hesitation the decision of the Federal Labor Relations Council in Department of the Army, Aberdeen Proving Ground, supra, and the Supplemental Decision of the Assistant Secretary therein, supra, and find that Respondent committed an unfair labor practice; but I would not order Respondent to pay the interest ordered by the arbitrator because such payment is contrary to law. Such disposition would be, in my opinion, wholly consistent with § 22(b) of the Statute, i.e. "If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed . . . the award shall be final and binding" to the extent that such award does not require an action contrary to law. In this instance, the Authority has clearly and directly held that interest may not be awarded under the Back Pay Act, and Arbitrator Zaidins' award of interest was contrary to law and unlawful. The employees were never entitled to interest and neither the error of the arbitrator in granting it nor the error of Respondent in failing to file an exception to the award should result either in their receiving a windfall benefit or Respondent, as part of a remedial order, being directed to make an illegal payment.

But this is not a case of first impression. The Authority, in a series of cases, has reached a conclusion contrary to that of the Federal Labor Relations Council. Thus, in Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA No. 137, 15 FLRA 686 (1984), the Authority held, in part, as follows:

> ". . . In the Authority's view, any contention that an arbitrator's award is deficient because it is contrary to any law . . . must be made by invoking the procedure established by Congress in section 7122(a) of the Statute. If a party fails to file exceptions to an arbitrator's award . . . the award . . . becomes 'final and binding' and 'An agency shall take the actions required by an > arbitrator's award' . . . any failure to comply with a validly obtained arbitrator's award to which no exceptions have been timely filed constitutes a failure to comply with the requirements of section 7122 of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. Any other conclusion would render section 7122(b) meaningless . . . ." 15 FLRA at 687-688).

See, also, Department of Health and Human Services, Region II, 15 FLRA No. 139, 15 FLRA 710 (1984).

In Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, 15 FLRA No. 138, 15 FLRA 706 (1984), the Authority had before it precisely the same issue as presented in the present case, namely, the refusal to pay interest on an award based on the contention that interest payments are precluded by the Back Pay Act and therefore would be unlawful. There, as here, no exceptions to the arbitrator's award were filed. The Authority held as follows:

> "The relevant issue and supporting arguments raised by the parties are substantially identical to those involved in Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA No. 137 (1984), wherein the Authority, after denying Respondent's defense that compliance would require an unlawful act, concluded that any failure to comply with a validly obtained arbitrator's award to which no exceptions have been timely filed constitutes a failure to comply with the requirements of section 7122 of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. Accordingly, the Authority concludes herein that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute be failing to fully comply with an arbitrator's award . . . ." (15 FLRA at 707).

That there be no possible doubt, the Authority's Order specifically provided that the Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, inter alia,

> "(a) Fully comply with Arbitrator August G. Eckhardt's . . . award, including the payment of 10% per year interest on the grievant's back pay . . . ." (15 FLRA at 707).

As I am bound by the Authority's decisions, I am constrained to conclude, not only that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply fully with Arbitrator Zaidins' award, dated April 6, 1984 (Jt. Exh. 8), but that Respondent be ordered to pay interest at "the prevailing legal rate" on the backpay awarded, retroactive to July 1, 1983.

Accordingly, having found that Respondent violated §§ 16(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by its failure to fully comply with an arbitrator's award, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to § 18(a)(7) of the Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7118(a)(7); and § 2423.29 of the Regulation, 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29, the Authority hereby orders that Military Sealift Command (Atlantic) shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to fully implement Arbitrator Earle Warren Zaidins' arbitration award rendered on April 6, 1984.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purpose and policies of the Statute:

(a) Fully comply with Arbitrator Earle Warren Zaidins' April 6, 1984, arbitration award, including the payment of interest at the prevailing legal rate on the backpay awarded to all affected employees retroactive to July 1, 1983.

(b) Post at all facilities of Military Sealift Command (Atlantic) copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, Military Sealift Command (Atlantic), or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to members of the bargaining unit represented by the National Maritime Union of America, AFL-CIO, are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to § 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 26 Federal Plaza, Room 2237, New York, New York 10278, in writing, within 30 days of the date of this Order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge filed by the General Counsel. The complaint alleged that Respondent U.S. Air Force (USAF) and Respondent U.S. Air Force, Electronic Systems Division, Hanscom Air Force Base (the Activity) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to bargain in good faith with the National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-8 (NAGE), concerning a change in the Air Force regulation governing the standard of negligence to be used in assessing liability against unit employees for the loss, damage or destruction of Government property, and by unilaterally changing existing conditions of employment of employees in the bargaining unit by implementing the new regulation governing the standard of negligence without first bargaining with NAGE. The issue before the Authority is whether the Judge properly dismissed the complaint.

II. Background Facts

Prior to April 1981, Air Force Regulations (AFR 177-111) provided that civilian employees' liability for the loss, damage or destruction of Government property required a finding of gross negligence. In April, representatives of Respondent U.S. Air Force, Electronic Systems Division, Hanscom Air Force Base, the Activity, informed NAGE and other labor organizations at Hanscom Air Force Base that the Activity was going to implement a new AFR 177-111 which would change the existing standard of care so that employees would be liable for loss or damage to government property on the basis of their simple negligence. NAGE requested bargaining over the substance of the change, essentially proposing that the existing standard of care be retained, and over the procedures for implementation of the change and appropriate arrangements for adversely affected employees. The date for implementing the revised regulation was postponed while the Activity and NAGE exchanged proposals and negotiated concerning procedures and appropriate arrangements. However, the Activity's representative refused to negotiate concerning the substance of the change on the basis that it had no local authority to negotiate concerning the change in the standard of care. The Activity took this position based upon telephonic advice which it had received from Respondent USAF. NAGE continued to request negotiations concerning the substance of the change in the regulatory standard of care and the Activity continued to reject the request. Revised AFR 177-111, incorporating the change in the standard of care, was implemented by the Activity on July 6, 1981.

III. The Judge's Decision

The Judge dismissed the complaint on the basis that, under the provisions of section 7117 of the Statute, the Respondents had no duty to bargain on the subject matter of an agency regulation unless the Authority determined that no compelling need exists for the regulation and that such a determination cannot be made in the context of an unfair labor practice proceeding. Accordingly, the Judge concluded that neither Respondent had violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's dismissal of the complaint. Essentially the General Counsel argued that the Judge erred as a matter of law in concluding that where the alleged unilateral change involves a regulation covered by section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute, the Union must first seek a determination by the Authority concerning whether or not there is a "compelling need" for the regulation before it could pursue an unfair labor practice over the Respondents' refusal to engage in local negotiations concerning the implementation of its national regulation. The General Counsel argued that the issue of compelling need could be initially addressed in an unfair labor practice proceeding; that the Respondents had the burden of establishing compelling need; that they had failed to do so; and that their conduct therefore constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

The Respondents' brief in opposition to the exceptions of the General Counsel essentially argued that the Judge was correct in concluding that the Authority's negotiability procedures for determining "compelling need" must be utilized before any unfair labor practice could be found.

V. Analysis

The Authority adopts the Judge's conclusion that the complaint must be dismissed but not for the reasons stated by the Judge.

Subsequent to the issuance of the Judge's Decision in this case, the Authority issued its decision in Defense Logistics Agency (Cameron Station, Virginia) et al., 12 FLRA 412 (1983), affirmed sub nom. Defense Logistics Agency, et al. v. FLRA, 754 F.2d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1985),*/ finding that questions concerning the existence of a compelling need for agency regulations may appropriately be decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding, and that management is required to come forward with affirmative support for its assertion that there is a compelling need for the regulation in question which justified its refusal to bargain. See also Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army, 21 FLRA No. 100 (1986) and Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Mediterranean Region (Madrid, Spain) and Zaragoza High School (Zaragoza, Spain), 19 FLRA No. 54 (1985). But see United States Army Engineer Center v. FLRA, 762 F.2d 409 (4th Cir. 1985), reversing the Authority's decision in U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 13 FLRA 707 (1984). Thus the Authority does not adopt the Judge's rationale for dismissing the complaint.

*/ The court remanded the matter to the Authority for the sole purpose of permitting the petitioners to present evidence as to whether there existed a compelling need for the particular regulation at issue. On April 22, 1985, the Authority remanded the proceeding to the Chief Administrative Law Judge for disposition consistent with the direction of the court. Thereafter, on March 31, 1986, the complaint was withdrawn.

However, the Authority concludes that the Activity did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by issuing its revised regulation without bargaining over the substance of such change because the subject over which the Activity refused to bargain was NAGE's proposal to change the standard of care for lost, damaged or destroyed Government property upon which to base employee liability. Thus, the new Air Force regulation established a standard of simple negligence for the imposition of liability while the Union's proposal sought to establish a standard of "proven, willful, wanton, or reckless conduct directly attributed to the actions of the employee." Proposals such as this have been determined to be nonnegotiable. The Authority has found that union proposals which seek to limit the amount of money an employee may be required to pay for lost or damaged property, or proposals which seek to establish the standard to be used in determining whether an employee will be held pecuniarily liable for the loss, damage, or destruction of government property, directly interfere with management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 34 (1986) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, Kansas City District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City Missouri, 21 FLRA No. 32 (1986). Therefore, NAGE's proposal was outside the duty to bargain and the Activity's refusal to negotiate over the proposal did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The Authority also concludes, based on the facts set forth above, that the Respondent USAF did not refuse to bargain nor did it cause the Activity improperly to do so.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings and conclusions only to the extent consistent with this decision. For the reasons set forth above, the Authority therefore concludes that the complaint must be dismissed.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 1-CA-853 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191 (hereinafter referred to as the Statute), and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. XIV, § 2410 et seq.

A charge was filed on July 29, 1981 and was amended on August 5, 1981 by National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-8 (hereinafter called the Union and/or NAGE), against United States Air Force and U.S.

Air Force Electronic Systems Division, Hanscom Air Force Base, MA (hereinafter referred to as Respondents). Pursuant to the above described charge and amended charge the General Counsel of the FLRA, by the Director of Region 1, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing on October 9, 1981 alleging that Respondents violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally changing the standard of negligence to be used in assessing employee liability for damage to Government property. Respondents filed an Answer denying that the Statute had been violated.

A hearing in this matter was conducted before the undersigned in Boston, Massachusetts. The Respondents and Counsel for the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to argue orally. Post hearing briefs were filed and have been fully considered.

Based upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein NAGE has been the collective bargaining representative for a unit composed of all of Respondent's non-supervisory and non-professional General Schedule employees serviced by the U.S. Air Force Electronic Systems Division Central Personnel Office at Hanscom Air Force Base. The unit contains approximately 1,400 employees.

Since at least 1978 until April 22, 1981 Air Force Regulations (AFR 177-111) provided that civilian employees' liability for the loss, damage or destruction of Government property was based upon a finding of gross negligence.

On April 22, 1981 representatives of the U.S. Air Force Electronics Systems Division at Hanscom Air Force Base informed NAGE President Norman Downes and representatives of other labor organizations representing employees at the Hanscom Air Force Base, that the Hanscom Air Force Base would implement on May 1, 1981 a new AFR 177-111 which inter alia, changed the existing standard of care for lost, damaged, or destroyed Government property upon which to base employee liability, to simple negligence[1] from gross negligence. The Hanscom Air Force Base representatives provided Downes with a copy of revised AFR 177-111. Downes requested that representatives of U.S. Air Force Electronic Systems Division at the Hanscom Air Force Base negotiate with NAGE concerning the decision to change the standard of care. There was no response to Downes' request. On April 22 Downes wrote a letter to Denis Pelley, Chief of the Labor Relations Office of Hanscom Air Force Base, in which Downs requested to negotiate concerning the change in the proposed AFR.

[1] The revised provision of Chapter 1, Section 100, paragraph 10005(F) of AFR 177-111 provided:

> "When property is lost, damaged, or destroyed, pecuniary charges will be based on a standard of simple negligence, willful misconduct, or deliberate unauthorized use, and will be assessed as required by statute."

The date for implementing revised AFR 177-111, was postponed while the parties exchanged proposals and negotiated the impact and implementation of the change.[2/]

During June 1981, Respondents' representative, Captain Gruenwald, of the Judge Advocate General's Office, advised NAGE that Hanscom Air Force Base had no local authority to negotiate concerning the subatance of the change in AFR 177-111. Pelley and Mr. Kennedy, of the Hanscom Air Force Base Labor Relations Office, also advised NAGE that Hanscom Air Force base could not bargain with NAGE concerning the substance of the change in AFR 177-111; that this matter could not be negotiated at this local level. Pelley took this position after he was telephonically advised to do so in June 1981, by Chester Nelson, Chief of Staffing and Labor Relations, Headquarters, U.S. Air Force Systems Command, Andrews Air Force Base.

By memorandum dated June 29, 1981 Pelley advised Downes that the revised AFR 177-111 would be implemented on July 6, 1981.

By letter dated June 30, 1981 Downes submitted to Gruenwald a written proposal concerning AFR 177-111 and the standard of care. By letter dated July 2 from Downes to Pelley, Downes reiterated his request to negotiate concerning the change in the standard of care.

The revised AFR 177-111, incorporating the change in the standard of care, was implemented on July 6, 1981.

Downes wrote a letter dated July 10 to Pelley reiterating his request to negotiate with respect to the standard of care.

By letter dated July 14, 1981 from Colonel Thomas O. Duff, Commander of Hanscom Air Force Base, to Downes, Duff rejected Downes' request to bargain concerning the standard of care because "Management's obligation to bargian with you does not extend to the first proposal . . . as it would change the substance of an Air Force Regulation, specifically Chapter 1, Property Accountable-General, Paragraph 10005F, Principles of AFR 177-111 (Test) . . ."

[2/] There is no allegation that there was a refusal to bargain about the impact and implementation of the change.

NAGE was never given any reason for Hanscom Air Force Base's refusal to bargain about the change in the standard of care other than that it involved a change in an Air Force regulation and that the local activity lacked authority to negotiate about the substance of the change.

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 7117 of the Statute provides:

> "(a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the duty to bargain in good faith shall, to the extent not inconsistent with any Federal law or any Government-wide rule or regulation, extend to matters which are the subject of any rule or regulation only if the rule or regulation is not a Government-wide rule or regulation.
> (2) The duty to bargain in good faith shall, to the extent not inconsistent with Federal Law or any Government-wide rule or regulation, extend to matters which are the subject of any agency rule or regulation referred to in paragraph (3) of this subsection only if the Authority has determined under subsection (b) of this section that no compelling need (as determined under regulations prescribed by the Authority) exists for the rule or regulation.
> (3) Paragraph (2) of the subsection applies to any rule or regulation issued by any agency or issued by any primary national subdivision of such agency, unless an exclusive representative represents an appropriate unit including not less than a majority of the employees in the issuing agency or primary national subdivision, as the case may be, to whom the rule or regulation is applicable.
> (b)(1) In any case of collective bargaining in which an exclusive representative alleges that no compelling need exists for any rule or regulation referred to in subsection (a)(3) of this section which is then in effect and which governs any matter at issue in such collective bargaining, the Authority shall determine under paragraph (2) of this subsection, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Authority, whether such a compelling need exists.
> (2) For the purpose of this section, a compelling need shall be determined not to exist for any rule or regulation only if -

(A) the agency, or primary national subdivision, as the case may be, which issued the rule or regulation informs the Authority in writing that a compelling need for the rule or regulation does not exist; or

(3) A hearing may be held, in the discretion of the Authority, before a determination is made under this subsection. If a hearing is held, it shall be expedited to the extent practicable and shall not include the General Counsel as a party.

(4) The agency, or primary national subdivision, as the case may be, which issued the rule or regulation shall be a necessary party at any hearing under this subsection.

(c)(1) Except in any case to which subsection (b) of this section applies, if an agency involved in collective bargaining with an exclusive representative alleges that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to any matter, the exclusive representative may appeal the allegation to the Authority in accordance with the provisions of this subsection."

Section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute provides that the duty to bargain extends to matters which are the subject of an agency regulation only if the FLRA has determined that no compelling need exists for the regulation.

The subject case deals with a matter, standard of care, which is the subject of an agency regulation, or more accurately a regulation issued by an agency or primary subdivision as described in Section 7117(a)(3) of the Statute. Pursuant to Section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute Respondents have no duty to bargain concerning standard of care until the FLRA has first determined that no compelling need exists for AFR 177-111. Thus, it is necessary that the FLRA make a finding that there is no compelling need for AFR 177-111 before a finding can be made that Respondents have an obligation to bargain about the standard of care set forth in revised AFR 177-111. Because NAGE did not first pursue the procedures provided for presenting the compelling need issue to the FLRA, I am unable to conclude that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to bargain with NAGE concerning the change in the standard of care. I adopt the reasoning and conclusions set forth by the Administrative Law Judges in Boston District Recruiting Command, 1-CA-206, OALJ-81-023 (1980); Defense Logistics Agency, et al, 1-CA-213, OALJ-81-131 (1981); Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency, 3-CA-664, OALJ-81-133 (1981); and Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5-CA-20018, OALJ-83-06 (1982).

Accordingly, although certain other unilateral changes might be pursued by either the unfair labor practice procedures or the negotiability procedures, where the alleged unilateral change involves a regulation covered by Section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute, the "compelling need" procedures must be utilized before any unfair labor practice can be found.

In view of the foregoing, I conclude that the record fails to establish that Respondents violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Accordingly, it is recommended that the FLRA issue the following:

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Edward L. Harrison filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator found that the activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement by not temporarily promoting the grievant, a laborer (WG-2), to a warehouse-forklift operator (WG-5) position when assigned the duties of the higher-graded position. As a remedy the arbitrator awarded the grievant an amount equal to the difference between a WG-2, which he received, and a WG-5, which he should have received for a period of nearly four years.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7121(c)(5) which expressly precludes any grievance concerning the classification of a position which has not resulted in the reduction in grade or pay of an employee. However, the Authority found that the grievance pertained to whether the grievant should have been temporarily promoted during the period of the asserted assignment to the WG-5 position and that therefore the grievance did not directly concern the classification of any position.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596 because: (1) the arbitrator did not make the requisite award of a retroactive promotion; (2) the arbitrator did not find that but for an unwarranted personnel action, the grievant would have been paid at the WG-5 level; (3) there was not a vacant WG-5 position to which the grievant could have been promoted. The Authority held that the arbitrator's award effectively provided the requisite order and finding necessary for an award of backpay under the Back Pay Act. Additionally, the arbitrator found that the agreement mandated that the grievant be temporarily promoted as a result of the extended assignment of the duties of the WG-5 position.

In its third exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5, which limits the duration of a temporary promotion. Civil service regulations permit an agency to temporarily promote an employee to meet a temporary need for a definite period of one year or less and extend such a promotion for a definite period not to exceed one additional year. 5 C.F.R. § 335.102(f)(1); FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5. Agencies may temporarily promote an employee for more than two years only with the formal approval of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM). 5 C.F.R. § 335.102(g); FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5. The Authority found that to the extent that award effectively ordered the grievant temporarily promoted retroactively for a period in excess of two years without formal approval of OPM, the award was deficient as contrary to civil service regulations. The Authority modified the award to be consistent with civil service law and regulation.

In its fourth exception the agency contended that the award was contrary to civil service law and regulation to the extent it orders the grievant temporarily promoted for a period of time during which he was not minimally qualified for promotion. The Authority found that it was uncertain whether the grievant met minimum qualification requirements for the promotion. Consequently, the Authority modified the award to assure that it was consistent with civil service law and regulation.

DIGEST NOTES

Official time for more union negotiators than the number designated by management is negotiable. Representation of employees in matters concerning their employment clearly affects the working conditions of those employees. Further, the number of union representatives involved in the negotiation process necessarily influences the effective presentation of matters affecting bargaining unit working conditions. Thus, a request by a union for sufficient personnel to allow it to carry out its representational responsibilities under the Statute is inextricably tied to the conditions of employment of the employees it represents. The proposal does not in any manner, determine the number of negotiators who will represent the agency. Rather, the proposal would authorize official time for a number of union representatives beyond that authorized under section 7131(a).

Parties bear the burden of creating a record sufficient for the Authority to resolve a negotiability dispute. The Authority concluded that the agency failed to provide support for its claim that the union agreed to be represented at the negotiations by two negotiators.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would prescribe certain abilities and accomplishments for which credit will be given, and the amount of credit, to candidates in the rating process involved in filling positions. Under the proposal, portions of the agency's "crediting plan" would be established without being based on a job analysis which demonstrates a connection between performance in a current position and job-related training and success in the positions(s) for which candidates are applying. Accordingly, the proposal is inconsistent with the job analysis requirement of 5 C.F.R. § 300.103(a), a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of § 7117(a)(1). (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would establish the standard (gross negligence instead of negligence) to be used in determining whether an employee will be held "pecuniary liable" for the loss, damage, or destruction of agency property. The proposal directly interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1). (proposal 2).

Where a party unilaterally repudiates a memorandum of understanding or an agreement in its entirety, such conduct is violative of the Statute. The union entered into the memorandum of understanding which delegated local level impact and implementation bargaining authority to local representatives at the former levels of exclusive recognition. Subsequently, the union, while negotiating with the agency over a new collective bargaining agreement, notified the agency that the memorandum of understanding was rescinded by virtue of all matters covered by the union's proposals concerning the new agreement presently under consideration by the agency. The Authority found that as the union had repudiated the memorandum in its entirety and refused to abide by the terms set forth therein, it had violated § 7116(a)(5). Accordingly, the union was ordered to comply, to the extent that the memorandum of understanding was not inconsistent with the terms of any subsequently negotiated agreement between the parties, with the memorandum of understanding.

The grievance in this case concerned the changing of "numeric guidelines", which the union considered to be performance standards, during the appraisal period and the retroactively application of those new standards. The arbitrator found that "numeric guidelines" used by the agency were actually performance standards; that under the parties' agreement, the activity did not have the right to unilaterally change performance standards during the appraisal period; the union had the right to object to and negotiate any changes prior to implementation. The arbitrator sustained the grievance and, as a remedy, ordered the activity to reappraise the grievants' performance for the entire year using the performance standards that were in effect at the beginning of that period.

In its first exception, the activity contended that by finding "numeric guidelines" to be performance standards, the arbitrator improperly substituted his judgment for that of management since the actual standard management had established was a non-quantitative standard. Under 5 C.F.R. § 430.203, "Performance standards means a statement of the expectations or requirements established by management for a critical or non-critical element at a particular rating level. A performance standard may include, but is not limited to, factors such as quality, quantity, timeliness, and manner of performance." Since the activity acknowledged that it used the quantitative requirements of the "numeric guidelines" to evaluate employee performance and the activity's supervisors considered the guidelines to be performance standards, the Authority held that the activity failed to show that the award was deficient.

In its second exception, the activity contended that the arbitrator's award improperly required the activity to negotiate on the contents of performance standards and prevented management from changing the standards after the start of the fiscal year. The Authority held that to the extend that the award may be construed as requiring the activity to negotiate concerning the establishment or content of any performance standard, the award was contrary to management's right to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Also, the Authority held that to the extent the award may be construed as improperly denying the authority of the activity to exercise its rights to revise the grievants' performance standards and to prospectively evaluate their performance under the changed standards during the designated appraisal period, the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B).

In its third exception, the activity contended that the award improperly required the activity to reappraise the grievants' performance using performance standards of the prior year. The Authority held that the activity was properly directed to reappraise the grievants' performance for the period prior to the time when the grievants were notified of the changed performance standard.

DIGEST NOTES

A party that fails to raise an allegation regarding an arbitration award in the nature of timely exceptions, as provided by the procedures of § 7122(a), may not present that allegation as a defense to a complaint in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding based upon its failure to comply with the award. The failure to comply with any part of an arbitrator's award to which no exceptions have been filed once that award becomes final and binding constitutes a failure to comply with the requirements of § 7122 in violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (8). Any other conclusion would be inconsistent with § 7122(b), as a party could fail to file exceptions to portions of an arbitrators award pursuant to § 7122(a), take no action to comply with the award, and then belatedly present its argument as a defense to a complaint in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding that the failure and refusal to comply with a final and binding award constituted an unfair labor practice. To permit such a protracted procedure would be inconsistent with the policy that the arbitration process provides both an expeditious and a final resolution of grievances. The Respondent filed exceptions to an arbitrator's award but its exceptions were denied by the Authority. Subsequently, the Respondent failed to comply with the award and in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding based upon such conduct, the Respondent raised as a defense that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act and the Anti-Deficiency Act, a contention that it had not raised in the prior arbitration proceeding. Thus, the Authority concluded that the Respondent, having filed no exceptions pertaining to the Back Pay or Anti-Deficiency Acts to the arbitration award, was required to implement the award which had become final and binding when the Authority denied its original exceptions. Accordingly, by failing to do so, the Respondent violated § 7116(a)(1) and (8).

The Authority also rejected the Respondent's argument that the Authority should seek an opinion from the Comptroller General as to whether the arbitrator's award is consistent to the Back Pay Act. Congress intended that the awards of arbitrators, when they become final, not to be subject to further review by any other authority or administrative body, including the Comptroller General.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Ernest Weiss filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.[1]

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The issue submitted to the Arbitrator questioned whether the Activity violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it failed to temporarily promote the grievant to a WG-5 position. According to the Arbitrator, the grievant, a WG-2 laborer, was granted a temporary promotion to warehouseman-forklift operator, WG-5, for the period February 17, 1980, to June 16, 1980, at which time the grievant returned to his position as laborer, WG-2. Subsequently, the grievant filed a grievance claiming that after the termination of the temporary promotion, he had continued to perform the duties of the WG-5 position. The Arbitrator found that the grievant was regularly and consistently assigned the duties of the WG-5 position. Noting that the parties' agreement provided for a temporary promotion rather than a detail for an extended assignment to a higher-grade position, the Arbitrator further found that the grievant should have been temporarily promoted to the WG-5 position and paid accordingly. Consequently, the Arbitrator ruled that the Activity had violated the collective bargaining agreement when it failed to temporarily promote the grievant to the WG-5 position. As a remedy the Arbitrator awarded as follows:

[1] In its opposition the Union maintains that the exceptions were not timely filed. However, contrary to the Union's assertion, the Authority finds that the exceptions were timely filed under the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

> The [Activity] is hereby directed to pay the grievant in accordance with 5 U.S.C. 5596, an amount equal to the difference between a WG-2, which he received, and a WG-5, which he should have received, from thirty (30) days after June 16, 1980, until May 15, 1984, when the assignments ceased.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7121(c)(5) of the Statute, which expressly precludes any grievance concerning the classification of a position which has not resulted in the reduction in grade or pay of an employee. Specifically, the Agency argues that the grievance was barred and the award is deficient because the substance of the dispute between the parties was the grade level of the duties performed by the grievant.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service and National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2805, 15 FLRA 862 (1984), the grievance concerned whether the grievant was assigned to perform substantially all the duties of a higher-grade position for an extended period of time for which she was entitled under the parties' collective bargaining agreement to have been compensated at the higher rate of pay. In denying an exception that the grievance was barred by section 7121(c)(5) of the Statute, the Authority specifically ruled that the grievance pertained to whether the grievant should have been compensated at a higher rate of pay during the period of the asserted detail and that therefore the grievance did not directly concern the classification of any position. 15 FLRA at 863. The Authority similarly finds in this case that the grievance pertains to whether the grievant should have been temporarily promoted during the period of the asserted assignment to the WG-5 position and that therefore the grievance does not directly concern the classification of any position. Accordingly, the first exception fails to establish that the award is contrary to section 7121(c)(5) and therefore provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. Specifically, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator made no award of a retroactive promotion and made no finding that but for an unwarranted personnel action, the grievant would have been paid at the WG-5 level. The Agency also maintains that in any event the record does not establish that there was a vacant WG-5 position to which the grievant could have been promoted.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has consistently recognized that in order for an award of backpay to be authorized by the Back Pay Act, the arbitrator must find that an agency personnel action was unjustified or unwarranted, that such action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances or differentials, and that but for such action, the grievant otherwise would not have suffered such withdrawal or reduction. U.S. Army Aberdeen Proving Ground and Local 2424, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 35 (1985). In this case the Arbitrator specifically ruled that the Activity had violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement when it failed to temporarily promote the grievant to the WG-5 position to which he had been assigned for an extended period of time. As a remedy the Arbitrator directed for that period of time that the grievant be paid an amount equal to the difference between a WG-2, which he received, and WG-5, which he should have received. Contrary to the argument of the Agency, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator effectively ordered the grievant temporarily promoted retroactively and that the Arbitrator made the findings necessary to an award of backpay under the Back Pay Act. See Department of Justice, INS, 15 FLRA at 863; American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923 and Social Security Administration, Headquarters, Bureaus and Offices, 12 FLRA 511 (1983). Additionally, because the Arbitrator found that the agreement mandated that the grievant be temporarily promoted as a result of the extended assignment of the duties of the WG-5 position, the Authority also finds that the award of backpay is clearly consistent with the grievant's statutory entitlement under the Back Pay Act to receive the pay that he would have earned if the unwarranted action had not occurred without regard to whether the record in this case establishes that there was a vacant WG-5 position. See 5 U.S.C. § 5596(b)(1)(A)(i); National Labor Relations Board Union, Local 19 and Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 7 FLRA 21 (1981). Accordingly, this exception fails to establish that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act and therefore provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

V. THIRD EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its third exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5, which limits the duration of a temporary promotion.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has clearly indicated in these types of cases that the award by an arbitrator of a temporary promotion must be consistent with civil service law and regulation. Veterans Administration, V.A. Medical Center, Muskogee, Oklahoma and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2250, 20 FLRA No. 48 (1985). Civil service regulations permit an agency to temporarily promote an employee to meet a temporary need for a definite period of one year or less and extend such a promotion for a definite period not to exceed one additional year. 5 CFR § 335.102 (f)(1); FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5. Agencies may temporarily promote an employee for more than two years only with the formal approval of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM). 5 CFR § 335.102(g); FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5. In this case the Authority finds that to the extent the award has effectively ordered the grievant temporarily promoted retroactively for a period in excess of two years without formal approval of OPM, the award is deficient as contrary to civil service regulation and must be modifed.2/

VI. FOURTH EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its fourth exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to civil service law and regulation to the extent it orders the grievant temporarily promoted for a period of time during which he was not minimally qualified for promotion. Specifically, the Agency maintains that after the grievant's loss of his forklift operator's license in June 1981, he was no longer minimally qualified for promotion to the position of warehouseman-forklift operator, WG-5.

2/ In view of this decision, no basis is provided for finding the award contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute because the Arbitrator assertedly awarded the grievant a permanent promotion.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has uniformly recognized that in order for an employee to be properly promoted consistent with civil service law and regulation, the employee must meet the minimum qualification requirements for the position to which the employee is promoted. Veterans Administration, V.A. Medical Center, Muskogee, Oklahoma and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2250, 20 FLRA No. 48 (1985). Although the Arbitrator mentioned the grievant's loss of his forklift operator's license, he did not address the loss in terms of the grievant's qualification to be promoted to warehouseman-forklift operator. In addition, the Authority finds that the Agency has not clearly substantiated that as a result of this loss, the grievant did not meet minimum qualification requirements for the position. Thus, whether the grievant met minimum qualification requirements for the promotion is uncertain. However, in order for the award to be consistent with governing law and regulation, the grievant must have met during the time of the disputed promotion the minimum qualification requirements for the position. Consequently, in these circumstances, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with civil service law and regulation. Department of the Army, Headquarters XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1770, 18 FLRA No. 63 (1985).

VII. DECISION

Accordingly, for the reasons stated above, the Agency's first and second exceptions are denied, and the Arbitrator's award is modified to provide as follows:

> Provided that at all relevant times the grievant met the minimum qualification requirments for promotion to warehouseman-forklift operator, WG-5, the grievant is awarded a retroactive temporary promotion to such position for the period July 16, 1980, to July 15, 1982, with backpay, and the Activity shall request that the Office of Personnel Management formally authorize the Activity to award > the grievant a retroactive temporary promotion with backpay for the period July 16, 1982, to May 14, 1984.[3]

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 23, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of one Union proposal.

Union Proposal

The union (A.C.E.A.) will be allowed three negotiators on official time.

II. Positions of the Agency[1]

Although not stated, it is apparent that the Agency determined to be represented at negotiation by less than three negotiators. Thus, the Agency argues that, under section 7131(a) of the Statute, the Union is limited to the same number of negotiators on official time as the number of negotiators representing management. The Agency also claims that the Union previously agreed to be represented at such negotiations by two negotiators. Finally, the Agency contends that the number of negotiators representing management is not a matter concerning the working conditions of bargaining unit employees. In support, the Agency relies on National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1451 and Naval Training Center, Orlando, Florida, 3 FLRA 87 (1980), enforced sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees v. FLRA, 652 F.2d 191 (D.C. Cir. 1981).

[1] The Agency did not file a statement of Position and the Union did not file a reply Brief in this case.

III. Analysis and Conclusions

The Agency has provided no support for its claim that the Union agreed to be represented at the negotiations by two negotiators. It is well established that the parties bear the burden of creating a record sufficient for the Authority to resolve a negotiability dispute. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 681 F.2d 886, 891 (D.C. Cir. 1982), aff'g National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 588 (1981). A party failing to assume this burden acts at its peril.

Representation of employees in matters concerning their employment clearly affects the working conditions of those employees. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2, 7-8 (1986); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980) (Union Proposal II), enf'd as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982). Further, the number of union representatives involved in the negotiation process necessarily influences the effective presentation of matters affecting bargaining unit working conditions. Thus, a request by a union for sufficient personnel to allow it to carry out its representational responsibilities under the Statute is inextricably tied to the conditions of employment of the employees it represents.

Contrary to the Agency's claim, this proposal does not, in any manner, determine the number of negotiators who will represent the Agency. Rather, the proposal would authorize official time for a number of union representatives beyond that authorized under section 7131(a). The Authority has previously held that, under section 7131(d) of the Statute, a proposal seeking more union negotiators than the number designated by management is within the duty to bargain. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, 15 FLRA 461 (1984). (Proposal 2). The Authority finds the Union's proposal to be within the duty to bargain for the reasons set forth in that case.[2]

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning the proposal presented herein.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 23, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents an issue concerning the negotiability of two Union proposals.

II. Union Proposal 1

> Ranking Criteria. The screening factors established by the Office of Personnel Management are applied to all competing employees. Employees who meet the eligibility requirements of the Office of Personnel Management are considered to be at least minimally qualified and are eligible to be further evaluated and ranked. The following criteria are applied to the competing employees who meet minimal eligibility requirements:
> a. Experience: 1/2 point for each two weeks of experience directly related to the position being filled. Directly related experience is that experience gained while doing like or similar jobs as that which is described in the position description of the job being filled. 1/4 point for each two weeks of experience indirectly related to the position being filled. Indirectly related experience is that experience in the same job family or related families.

b. Training: 1/4 point for each two weeks of training received which can be directly related to the position being filled. 1/4 point for each two two weeks of training received which can be indirectly related to the position being filled.

c. Education:

Doctor's Degree Awarded	200 points
Master's Degree Awarded	150 points
Bachelor's Degree Awarded	100 points
Each full year of college (no degree)	20 points
Graduate Work	4 points /credit hour
ECI Courses (for each 40 hours)	1/2 point

d. Awards: A maximum of 2 points is given for awards. Such awards must be directly related to the position being filled. Credit is given only within 1 year of the effective date of the award.

e. Supervisor Appraisal: Will only count for 5% additional points based upon a perfect appraisal. Anything less than a perfect appraisal will be prorated.

The employees will be ranked in accordance with the total number of points which they have received. Those employees with the most points will be referred to the selecting supervisor in rank order in accordance with the other provisions of this article. [Only the underlined portions of the proposal are in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates 5 U.S.C. § 2301(c), Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Chapter 335, FPM Supplement Chapter 335, and Agency Regulation (AFR) 40-335 because the Agency must insure that personnel management is based on and embodies the merit system principles.

The Union maintains that the intent of the proposal is to rank promotion candidates who meet minimum qualifications of the X-118 and Air Force standards by applying credit for training, education, experience and awards that are relevant to the job being filled along with the supervisor's appraisal.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Under existing Authority precedent we find the proposal nonnegotiable for reasons other than those alleged by the Agency. This proposal would prescribe certain abilities and accomplishments for which credit will be given, and the amount of credit, to candidates in the rating process. Essentially, the proposal would establish portions of the Agency's "crediting plan" and has the same effect as the proposal in The Montana Air Chapter of Association of Civilian Technicians and U.S. Department of the Air Force, Montana Air National Guard, 19 FLRA No. 112 (1985). In that case, adopting the decision of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 762 F.2d 1119 (D.C. Cir. 1985), the Authority held that a proposal which assigned points for crediting plan purposes solely on the basis of seniority was inconsistent with 5 CFR 300.103(a) because it was not derived from a job analysis which linked seniority to success in the particular positions(s) in question.[1] Proposal 1 in this case similarly is not based on a job analysis which demonstrates a connection between performance in a current position and job-related training and success in the position(s) for which candidates are applying.[2]

> § 300.103 Basic requirements
> (a) Job analysis. Each employment practice of the Federal Government generally, and of individual agencies, shall be based on a job analysis to identify:
> (1) The basic duties and responsibilities;
> (2) The knowledges, skills, and abilities required to perform the duties and responsibilities; and
> (3) The factors that are important in evaluating candidates. The job analysis may cover a single position or group of positions, or an occupation or group of occupations, having common characteristics.

Thus, for the reasons set forth in the Montana Air National Guard decision, we find that Union Proposal 1 is inconsistent with 5 CFR 300.103(a) and outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.[3]

III. Union Proposal 2

> That gross negligence continue to be the standard instead of just negligence.

The Authority has determined that Office of Personnel Management requirements codified at title 5 of the Code of Federal Regulations are Government-wide regulations within the meaning of section 7117(a) of the Statute. Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, AFL-CIO and Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 4 FLRA 232, 233 (1980).

[2] The Court stated in the Customs Service decision, 762 F.2d 1119, 1122-23, as follows:

> Exclusion of non-job-related education and experience is not the same as a job analysis before the measurement scheme is adopted, and cannot reasonably be said to assure the same results. The latter is apparent from the fact that, even as so limited, the proposal establishes the number of points to be awarded for each level of the various factors without any reference to the demands of specific occupations. It requires, for example, that boards grant the same number of points for a (job-related) bachelor's degree in all positions; and that they grant the same number of points for a sustained superior performance award as for a bachelor's degree in all positions. [Emphasis in original.]

[3] In view of this conclusion, we find it unnecessary to consider the Agency's additional contentions that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it violates 5 U.S.C. § 2301(c), the FPM, and Air Force Regulation.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal violates its rights to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) and to determine the methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The Union maintains that the proposal establishes the standard of negligence to be used in the Agency's regulation to assess pecuniary liability of employees. The Union therefore contends that the proposal is procedural in nature and negotiable because it does not prevent the Agency from acting at all.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 would establish the standard to be used in determining whether an employee will be held "pecuniarily liable" for the loss, damage, or destruction of Air Force property. The proposal, therefore, has the same effect as Union Proposal 1 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 34 (1986). In that case, relying on our decision in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, Kansas City District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City, Missouri, 21 FLRA No. 32 (1986), the Authority held that a proposal which established a standard of "gross negligence" directly interfered with management's right to determine its internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1). For the reasons stated in Wright-Patterson Air Force Base and Kansas City District, we find that the proposal in this case likewise directly interferes with management's right to determine its internal security practices and is not within the duty to bargain under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.[5] [5] In view of this conclusion, we find it unnecessary to consider the Agency's additional contention that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it violates management's right to determine the methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1).

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute on a petition for review of a negotiability issue filed by the Union.

From the record before the Authority, it appears that by letter dated November 26, 1985, the Activity notified the Union that it intended to implement the revision of Ft. Devens Memorandum, Civilian Personnel Administrative Manual 690-1, Chapter 7, "Conduct and Discipline" within fourteen (14) days absent any proposals from the Union. Subsequently, on December 3, 1985, the Union submitted its proposal to the Activity. By letter dated December 11, 1985, the Activity declared that the Union's proposal was outside the duty to bargain because it infringed on retained management rights under 5 U.S.C. 7106(a)(2)(A). Thereafter, on January 22, 1986, the Activity sent another letter to the Union informing it that since it had not appealed the Activity's nonnegotiability allegation and since it had not submitted any other proposals for consideration, the Activity would implement the Memorandum on February 3, 1986. Subsequently, by letter dated February 27, 1986, the Union explained the meaning of its proposal and requested that the Activity reconsider its allegation of nonnegotiability concerning the Union's proposal. The Activity responded by letter dated March 21, 1986, reiterating its position that the proposal was outside the duty to bargain. The Union then filed the instant petition for review with the Authority on April 9, 1986, seeking a determination, pursuant to section 7117 of the Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as to whether the disputed proposal was within the duty to bargain. Subsequently, on May 2, 1986, the Agency submitted its statement of position on the petition for review to the Federal Labor Relations Authority. In its statement of position, the Agency withdrew its allegation of nonnegotiability.

Since the Agency has withdrawn the allegation concerning the Union's proposal, there is no longer an issue as to whether the proposal is within the parties' duty to bargain under the Statute.

Accordingly, and apart from other considerations, the petition for review in this case is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER

This matter is before the Federal Labor Relations Authority pursuant to the Regional Director's "Order Transferring Case to the Authority" in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon consideration of the entire record, including the stipulation of facts, accompanying exhibits, and the contentions of the parties, the Authority finds:

It is alleged that the Respondent, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE), violated section 7116(b)(5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute)[1] by rescinding a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) and failing to abide by the terms and conditions set forth therein.

§ 7116. Unfair labor practices

(b) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization--

. . . . . .

(5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with an agency as required by this chapter[.]

The Respondent has been the exclusive representative for the majority of employees employed by the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA or the Agency) in a nationally consolidated unit since February 1, 1980.

On August 21, 1980, agents for the two parties executed the MOU which delegated local level impact and implementation bargaining authority to local representatives at the former levels of exclusive recognition. Subsequently, on October 3, 1983, the Respondent notified the Agency, by letter, of the Respondent's rescission of the MOU. That letter stated, in relevant part, as follows:

> We have been informed that Mr. Bob Davis, our Chief Negotiator for the national agreement, has sent you the union's proposals for the national agreement. This is to notify you that the 1980 [MOU] . . . is rescinded by virtue of all matters covered by the union's proposals being "on the table."
> Where you may find it necessary to effect a condition of employment . . . at a local area office of EPA, the Agency's proposals should be sent to Mr. Davis for consideration at the national negotiations. On a case-by-case basis, we will consider authorizing local union negotiators to negotiate on specified matters upon EPA's request. However, any negotiations conducted at the local level without specific and express authority by this office or the National EPA Council will be considered unauthorized. (Emphasis in original.)

The record also reveals that, at all times material herein, the parties were in the process of negotiating a collective bargaining agreement at the national level but had not yet reached agreement.[2/]

2/ In this connection, the Authority takes official notice of Union Recognition in the Federal Government (1985), at p. 415, which indicates that an agreement covering certain of the Agency's employees and AFGE became effective on June 11, 1984, for a three-year period.

In the Authority's view, the Respondent's unilateral repudiation of the MOU constituted a violation of section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute. In this regard, the Authority has previously held that where a party repudiates a memorandum of understanding or an agreement in its entirety, such conduct is violative of the Statute. See U.S. Patent and Trademark Office, 18 FLRA No. 82 (1985); Great Lakes Program Service Center, Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 499 (1982); and Veterans Administration Hospital, Danville, Illinois, 4 FLRA 432 (1980).[3/] In the instant case, as is evident from the Respondent's October 3 letter, the Respondent, AFGE, repudiated the MOU in its entirety and refused to abide by the terms set forth therein. The Respondent's conduct in this regard is therefore violative of section 7116(b)(5) of the Statute.[4/] Accordingly, to the extent that the MOU is not inconsistent with the terms of any subsequently negotiated agreement between the parties, AFGE shall be ordered to comply therewith.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO shall:

[3/] Such cases are to be distinguished from those in which the Authority found that single instances of noncompliance with agreements did not rise to the level of an unfair labor practice. See Internal Revenue Service and Internal Revenue Service, Detroit District, 12 FLRA 445 (1983) and cases cited therein at n. 3. Rather, they would constitute contract violations which are cognizable under applicable negotiated grievance procedures. See, in this regard, Environmental Protection Agency and Environmental Protection Agency, Region II, 20 FLRA No. 76 (1985) at n. 4 and Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 614 (1984).

[4/] The Authority rejects the Respondent's argument that a memorandum of understanding executed on August 12, 1983 superseded the 1980 MOU and thus negated any subsequent repudiation. In the Authority's view, the substance of the 1983 memorandum, which concerned the delegation of authority in the event of an extended absence by either of the parties' designated representatives at the national level, pertained to a separate matter than was contained in the 1980 agreement and did not, even by its own terms, supersede the 1980 agreement.

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing to abide by the terms set forth in the Memorandum of Understanding entered into with the Environmental Protection Agency on August 21, 1980, to the extent that such terms are not inconsistent with any subsequently negotiated agreement between the parties.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Abide by the terms set forth in the Memorandum of Understanding entered into with the Environmental Protection Agency on August 21, 1980, to the extent that such terms are not inconsistent with any subsequently negotiated agreement between the parties.

(b) Post at its business offices and in normal meeting places, including all places where notices are customarily posted at the Environmental Protection Agency, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the President of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, or a designee, and shall be posted for 60 consecutive days. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Submit signed copies of such Notice to the Environmental Protection Agency for posting in conspicuous places where unit employees are located, where they should be maintained for 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Lawrence Kanzer filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievants in this case, contact representatives in the Activity's teleservice center, claimed that they received lower performance ratings than they should have because, after the beginning of the designated annual appraisal period, the Activity improperly changed and retroactively applied the requirements for the number of phone calls and workload reports to be completed each hour. According to the Arbitrator, the annual appraisal period was from October 1 of one year to September 30 of the following year; the Activity notified the Union of the changes in the requirements on October 28 of the appraisal year involved; the employees were informed of the changes in November; and the Activity apparently implemented the new requirements on or about February 1 and applied them retroactively to the beginning of the appraisal period when the employees' performance for the period from October through December was evaluated at the first quarterly review of their performance. The Union claimed that the requirements were performance standards and that under the parties' national collective bargaining agreement, the Activity was required to give 30 days advance notice of any proposed change in such standards and to provide employees with the performance standards for their positions before the beginning of the annual appraisal period. The Union further maintained that under the parties' agreement and regulation,[1] employees were entitled to be evaluated for the entire 12-month period under the standards in effect on October 1 of the appraisal year. The Activity principally argued that although the requirements were used to evaluate employee performance, they were "numeric guidelines" and not performance standards; and that the establishment of such performance requirements is a management right under section 7106(a)(2) of the Statute.

The Arbitrator found that based on all the evidence, including the fact that a number of supervisors referred to the requirements in writing as "standards" and the fact that the requirements were used to evaluate employee performance, the requirements were performance standards. The Arbitrator further found that under the parties' agreement the Activity did not have a right to unilaterally change performance standards during the appraisal period and that the Union had a right to object to and negotiate any changes prior to implementation. The Arbitrator essentially concluded that the Activity was required to notify the Union and the employees prior to the start of the annual appraisal period of any new performance standards and that the Activity violated the parties' agreement by changing the standards at issue in this case after the beginning of the appraisal period involved and by implementing and retroactively applying those new standards in that period. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievances and, as a remedy, ordered the Activity to reappraise the grievants' performance for the entire year using the performance standards that were in effect at the beginning of that period.

> 5 U.S.C. 4302(a) and (b) require that each appraisal system shall provide for establishing performance standards based on the requirements of employees' positions, communicating the standards of performance and the critical elements of the position at the beginning of each appraisal period, and appraising employees based on a comparison of performance with the standards established for the appraisal period.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception, the Activity contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. In support of its contention, the Activity argues: (1) by finding that the numerical guidelines are performance standards, the Arbitrator improperly substituted his judgment for that of management since the actual standard management had established was a non-quantitative standard; (2) assuming that the guidelines are performance standards, the Arbitrator's award improperly requires management to negotiate on the content of the standards and prevents management from changing the standards after the start of the appraisal period when the change was necessary to ensure accomplishment of its mission; and (3) the award improperly requires the Activity to reappraise the grievants' performance using performance standards of the prior appraisal year.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

1. "Guidelines" or "Performance Standards"

Under 5 U.S.C. § 4302(b), an agency's performance appraisal system must provide for the establishment of "performance standards which will, to the maximum extent feasible, permit the accurate evaluation of job performance on the basis of objective criteria . . . related to the job in question for each employee or position under the system." The Office of Personnel Management, the agency authorized under 5 U.S.C. § 4302(b) to issue regulations implementing the statutory requirements for performance appraisal systems, defines the term "performance standard" in 5 CFR 430.203 as follows:

> "Performance standard" means a statement of the expectations or requirements established by management for a critical or non-critical element at a particular rating level. A performance standard may include, but is not limited to, factors such as quality, quantity, timeliness, and manner of performance.

Thus, under the applicable law and regulations, performance standards establish the level of job performance required of an employee with regard to the duties and responsibilities of the employee's position. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

In this case, the Activity clearly established a level of quantitative performance required for each contact representative in its "guidelines" for the number of phone calls and workload reports to be completed each hour. As found by the Arbitrator, the Activity acknowledged that it used the quantitative requirements to evaluate employee performance and the Activity's supervisors considered the requirements to be performance standards. In these circumstances, the Authority therefore concludes that the "guidelines" meet the definition of "performance standards" and that the Activity has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award finding that the guidelines were in fact performance standards is in any way deficient. Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 148, 21 FLRA No. 15 (1986) (where the agency defined the standard for "outstanding" performance in a regulation).

2. Establishing and changing performance standards

The Authority has repeatedly held that an arbitration award may not interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, 17 FLRA 38 (1985). With regard to performance standards, the Authority has held that proposals that would require negotiations concerning the establishment or content of standards interfere with management's rights to direct employees and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and, therefore, such proposals are nonnegotiable. Bureau of Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769-81; American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784, 787-89 (1980). Thus, it is clear that the establishment and determination of the content of performance standards constitute an exercise of rights reserved to management under section 7106(a). Additionally, the Authority has held that a decision to revise performance standards is a right reserved to management under section 7106(a) of the Statute. Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, and Newark Air Force Station, Newark, Ohio and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2221, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 78, slip op. at 2 (1986).2/ Moreover, with regard to the authority of an arbitrator in resolving grievances concerning performance appraisals, the Authority has specifically held that an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of the agency as to the appropriateness of critical elements or performance standards established for a position. Bureau of Prisons, 21 FLRA No. 15, slip op. at 4, 6.

In this case, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) in two respects. First, to the extent that the award may be construed as requiring the Activity to negotiate concerning the establishment or content of any performance standard the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Second, to the extent the award may be construed as improperly denying the authority of the Activity to exercise its rights to revise the grievants' performance standards and to prospectively evaluate their performance under the changed standards during the designated appraisal period the award is also contrary to section 7106(a)(2)((A) and (B).

2/ In its decision in 21 FLRA No. 78, the Authority also noted that where an agency exercises a reserved management right under section 7106(a) of the Statute to change a condition of employment of unit employees, the agency has a duty to provide adequate prior notice to the exclusive representative and, upon request, to bargain consistent with section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute with respect to the procedures that management will follow in exercising such right and with respect to appropriate arrangements for employees who may be adversely affected by the exercise of the right.

However, to the extent that the award prohibits retroactive application of the new standards to the period before the requirements were implemented and the employees were made aware that their performance was going to be measured against the new requirements, the award is not deficient. In that regard, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit recently held that agency changes in performance standards during the course of a designated annual appraisal period and evaluations of employees under the new standards are not prohibited by 5 U.S.C. $ 4302(b)(2) [3] provided that the substantive rights of employees are preserved. Weirauch v. Department of the Army, No. 85-2290 (Fed. Cir. Jan. 30, 1986). In its decision in that case, the court rejected the employee's two arguments: (1) that since 5 U.S.C. $ 4302(b)(2) required the agency to communicate the elements and standards of his position to him before the start of the annual appraisal period, he was therefore entitled to be evaluated for the full year under the elements and standards that were in effect at the beginning of the period, and (2) that the agency had violated section 4302(b)(2) by changing his standards and evaluating his performance under the changed standards during the annual appraisal period. The court found, in agreement with the Merit Systems Protection Board's interpretation of section 4302(b)(2), for example, Cross v. Department of the Air Force, 84 FMSR 6093 (1984), which interpretation the court also found was in accord with that of the Office of Personnel Management and was supported by the legislative history of the provision, that the substantive rights of employees in the appraisal situation described were not tied to the officially-designated annual appraisal period of the agency. The court agreed with MSPB that there was no statutory restriction on the number or frequency of evaluations of employees within the appraisal period fixed by the agency in its master appraisal system. The court determined that where an agency has a yearly appraisal period, the evaluation of individual employees properly may involve more than one standard if the standard has been changed, provided that the substantive rights of the employees are preserved, namely: to be made aware of the critical elements and standards by which their performance is to be appraised before being evaluated, and to be evaluated under those elements and standards after a period of time long enough to afford them an ample opportunity to improve.

[3] 5 U.S.C. $ 4302(b)(2) provides:

> . . . . . .
> (2) as soon as practicable, but not later than October 1, 1981, with respect to initial appraisal periods, and thereafter at the beginning of each following appraisal period, communicating to each employee the performance standards and the critical elements of the employee's position[.]

In the facts of this case, as determined by the Arbitrator, it appears that the requirements were not implemented until on or about February 1 of the annual appraisal period and that the employees were not made fully aware that their performance was being evaluated under the new standards until the time of their first quarterly performance review. In these circumstances, the Authority concludes that to the extent that the Arbitrator's award prohibits the retroactive application of the new performance requirements to the period before February 1, the award is not deficient as alleged.

3. Reappraisal of the grievants

The Authority has previously held that in resolving a grievance concerning a performance appraisal, an arbitrator may properly direct that an aggrieved employee's performance be reappraised in certain circumstances. Where the arbitrator determines that management failed to apply its established standards to the aggrieved employee or applied those standards to the employee in violation of law, regulation or an appropriate general, nonquantitative requirement the parties may have agreed upon, the arbitrator to that extent may sustain the grievance. In such circumstances, the arbitrator, as a remedy, may direct that the grievant's performance be reevaluated by management utilizing the performance standards it had established and/or that the grievant's performance be reevaluated in accordance with law, regulation or the appropriate general, nonquantitative requirement in the parties' agreement. Bureau of Prisons, at 5-6.

In the circumstances of this case, where the Arbitrator directed the Activity to reappraise the grievants' performance, the Authority finds that for the period from October 1 through January 31, the Arbitrator's remedy is not contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute as alleged. Specifically, where the employees were entitled to be made aware of their performance standards before being evaluated and where the requirements apparently were implemented on or about February 1, and the employees were not made fully aware by the Activity that they were being evaluated under the new requirements until the first quarterly performance review, the Authority concludes that the Activity was properly directed to reappraise the grievants' performance for the period from October 1 through January 31 under the established standards that were in effect on October 1.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the remedy awarded by the Arbitrator is modified to direct the Activity to reappraise the grievants' performance for the period from October 1 through January 31 of the designated appraisal period under the standards that were in effect on October 1, to reappraise their performance for the period from February 1 to September 30 of that appraisal period under the standards that were implemented on or about February 1, and to grant the grievants the appropriate annual performance rating for the entire period.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of exceptions filed by the Respondent to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The General Counsel and the Charging Party (the Union) filed oppositions to the exceptions. The issue concerns whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to comply fully with an arbitration award which became final and binding once the Authority denied all of the Respondent's timely filed exceptions to such award.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

As more fully set forth in the Judge's Decision, Arbitrator Monroe Berkowitz issued an arbitration award which found that the Respondent had improperly transferred employee Robert Alvarado*/ from Perth Amboy to Newark, New Jersey under the terms of the parties' agreement. As his award, the Arbitrator required the Respondent to return Alvarado to his former duties at Perth Amboy and to pay him at the usual government rates for the extra mileage he had driven during his reassignment to Newark.

The Judge found that the arbitration award in question had become final and binding when the Authority denied the Respondent's exceptions, and that on this date the Respondent was under a legal obligation to comply fully with the arbitration award. He also noted that the Respondent's exceptions to the award filed with the Authority did not raise the argument that payment of travel expenses would be a direct violation of the Back Pay Act. The Judge concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply fully with the arbitration award, and ordered the Respondent to compensate the grievant for travel expenses as required by the award.

III. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions, the Respondent repeats the argument made before the Judge that for the Agency to pay travel expenses is illegal under the Back Pay Act and the Anti-Deficiency Act. It argues that such an award would violate the holdings in Morris v. United States, 595 F.2d 591 (Ct. Cl. 1979) and Hurley v. United States, 624 F.2d 93 (10th Cir. 1980). It argues further that the Authority should seek a ruling from the Comptroller General before rendering a decision in this matter. The General Counsel and the Union, in their respective oppositions to the Respondent's exceptions, note that the Morris and Hurley cases did not involve (final and binding) arbitration awards. They argue that the Respondent's contentions are without merit and that the Judge's conclusion is correct and amply supported by Authority precedent.

IV. Analysis

The Judge concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing and refusing to comply fully with an arbitration award which became final and binding once the Authority denied all of the timely filed exceptions to such award. The Authority notes particularly that the Respondent's allegation that the arbitration award is contrary to the Back Pay Act and the Anti-Deficiency Act was not raised before the Authority in its exceptions to the arbitration award.

In United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA 151 (1984), affirmed sub nom. Department of the Air Force, et al. v FLRA, 775 F.2d 727 (6th Cir. 1985), the Authority stated:

> To allow a party which has not filed exceptions to an award to defend its failure to implement that award in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding on grounds that should have been raised as exceptions to the award under section 7122 . . . would circumvent the procedures provided in section 7122(a) and frustrate Congressional intent with respect to the finality of arbitration awards.

The Authority in Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA 686 (1984) further stated:

> Given the Congressionally mandated exclusivity of section 7122(a) as a mechanism for questioning arbitrators' awards, it would be inappropriate for the Authority to entertain in subsequent unfair labor practice proceedings matters which more appropriately should be pursued in accordance with section 7122(a) of the Statute. In the Authority's view, any contention that an arbitrator's award is deficient because it is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation must be made by invoking the procedures established by Congress in section 7122(a) of the Statute. [Footnote omitted.]

In this case, the Authority finds that the Respondent was required to implement the arbitration award, which became "final and binding" within the meaning of section 7122(b) of the Statute, upon the Authority's denial of the Respondent's exceptions. See United States Department of Justice and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons (Washington, D.C.) and Federal Correctional Institution (Danbury, Connecticut), 20 FLRA No. 5 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. U.S. Department of Justice and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons et al. v. FLRA, No. 85-4167 (2d Cir. Nov. 5, 1985). In the Authority's view, failure to comply with any part of an arbitrator's award to which no exceptions have been filed once that award has become final and binding constitutes a failure to comply with the requirements of section 7122 of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. Any other conclusion would be inconsistent with section 7122(b), as a party could fail to file exceptions to portions of an arbitrator's award pursuant to section 7122(a), take no action to comply with the award, and then belatedly present its argument as a defense to a complaint in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding that the failure and refusal to comply with a final and binding arbitration award constituted an unfair labor practice. To permit such a protracted procedure would be inconsistent with the policy that the arbitration process provides both an expeditious and a final resolution of grievances.

The Respondent, having filed no exceptions pertaining to the Back Pay Act or the Anti-Deficiency Act in its exceptions to the Arbitrator's award and its other exceptions having been denied by the Authority, was required to take the actions required by the arbitrator's award, and its failure to do so violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. See also United States Marshals Service v. FLRA, 778 F.2d 1432 (9th Cir. 1985), affirming the Authority's decision in U.S. Marshals Service, 13 FLRA 351 (1983). That case involved an agency's refusal to comply with an unfair labor practice remedial order of the Authority directing compliance with an arbitrator's award, even though the Authority in a separate proceeding under section 7122 of the Statute previously had rejected the Agency's contentions that the arbitrator's award was deficient. In affirming the Authority's remedial order, the court specifically declined to review the Authority's original determination that the award was not deficient, but examined the award only to determine whether an unfair labor practice was committed--i.e., whether the agency had failed to comply with the arbitrator's award as the Authority ordered it to do. The court held that the agency's refusal to abide by the Authority's order requiring compliance with a final and binding arbitration award was an unfair labor practice.

Finally, the Respondent's argument that the Authority should seek an opinion from the Comptroller General as to whether the Arbitrator's award is consistent with the Back Pay Act is rejected. The Authority has pointed out in prior decisions that Congress intended the awards of arbitrators, when they become final, not to be subject to further review by any other authority or administrative body, including the Comptroller General. For example, see United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, cited above, which refers to H.R. Rep. No. 95-1717, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 158 (1978), reprinted in Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 at 826 to this effect. (15 FLRA 151 at 154).

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that decision, the positions of the parties, and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent's failure to compensate employee Alvarado for travel expenses, as required by the Arbitrator's award in this case, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to fully implement the March 26, 1984 arbitration award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308 by failing and refusing to compensate Customs Inspector Robert Alvarado for travel expenses as required by the award.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply with the March 26, 1984 arbitration award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308 by compensating Customs Inspector Robert Alvarado for travel expenses as required by the award.

(b) Post at its facilities at the Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Commissioner, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 29, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose as an unfair labor practice proceeding under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The complaint, as amended at the hearing, alleges that since on or about August 29, 1984, the Respondent has failed and refused to comply with the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 7122 of the Statute by failing and refusing to comply with an arbitrator's award; and further, that by reason of the foregoing, the Respondent committed unfair labor practices in violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[1]

[1] Section 7122 of the Statute, as amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984), provides:

> (a) Either party to arbitration under this chapter may file with the Authority an exception to any arbitrator's award pursuant to the arbitration (other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f) of this title). If upon review the Authority finds the award is deficient --
> (1) because it is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation; or
> (2) on other grounds similar to those applied by federal courts in private sector labor-management relations;
> the Authority may take such action and make such recommendations concerning the award as it considers necessary, consistent with applicable laws, rules, or regulations.
> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30 day period beginning on the date the award is served on the party, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of back pay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).

Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) provide:

> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency --
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;
> . . .

The Respondent contends that compliance with the award would be contrary to the provisions of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, and the Anti-Deficiency Act, 31 U.S.C. § 1341; that the award is unenforceable under these circumstances; and that the complaint should be dismissed.

Based upon the entire record herein, including the stipulation of facts, stipulated exhibits, and briefs filed by the parties, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The facts in this case are not in dispute. A stipulation of facts filed by the parties disclosed the following:

1. On or about March 25, 1984, Arbitrator Monroe Berkowitz issued an arbitration award in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308, a case involving the Respondent and the Charging Party.[2]

2. Arbitrator Berkowitz found that the Respondent improperly transferred Customs Inspector Robert Alvardo from Perth Amboy, New Jersey to Newark, New Jersey in November of 1982.

3. The award provides that, "[t]he reassignment of Robert Alvardo from Perth Amboy to Newark in November, 1982, was improper and in violation of the terms of the national agreement between the parties. Mr. Alvardo shall return forthwith to his former duties at the Port of Perth Amboy. He shall be furnished at the usual government rates for the extra mileage, 40 miles per day, which he has driven since his reassignment to Newark."

4. Exceptions to the arbitration award were filed with the Authority by the Respondent on or about April 24, 1984.

5. By letter dated April 27, 1984, the Federal Labor Relations Authority acknowledged receipt of Respondent's exceptions and assigned Case No. 0-AR-758 to the proceedings.

6. On or about June 12, 1984, an opposition to Respondent's exceptions was filed with the Authority by the Charging Party.

[2] The record reflects that the award was signed by Arbitrator Berkowitz on March 26, 1984 (Exhibit 6).

7. By decision dated August 29, 1984, the Authority denied Respondent's exceptions in Case No. 0-AR-758 on the ground that the United States Customs Service "failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in Section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal Courts in private sector labor-management relations." The award then became final and binding.

8. In or around September, 1984, the Charging Party requested that the Respondent comply with the arbitration award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308 by transferring Customs Inspector Robert Alvardo back to the Perth Amboy Port of Entry and compensating him for extra travel costs incurred as a result of the improper assignment.

9. On or about October 29, 1984, Respondent, through Benjamin Jefferson, Area Director, Newark, Port of Entry, U.S. Customs Service, informed the Charging Party that the Respondent would not pay travel expenses as ordered in the arbitration award.

10. On or about November 6, 1984, Respondent complied with, and implemented the arbitration award referred to above only with respect to the reassignment of Customs Inspector Alvardo from Newark to the Perth Amboy Port of Entry.

11. Since on or about August 29, 1984, Respondent has refused, and at all times thereafter has continued to refuse, to reimburse Customs Inspector Alvardo for travel costs as required by the arbitrator's award in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308.

12. The determination not to compensate Customs Inspector Alvardo for extra travel costs was made by the Respondent.

13. The determination not to compensate Customs Inspector Alvardo was based on Respondent's opinion that compensation of Customs Inspector Alvardo for travel expenses would be in direct violation of the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596 (1976), and on holdings in Morris v. United States, 595 F.2d 591 (Ct. of Cl. 1979) and Hurley v. United States, 624 F.2d 93 (10th Cir. 1980).

14. The Respondent did not raise the argument of illegality of the travel expense payment as set forth in Paragraph 13 above as a timely exception to the arbitrator's award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308.

Discussion and Conclusions

In U.S. Soldiers' and Airmen's Home, Washington, D.C., 15 FLRA No. 26 (1984), 15 FLRA 139,[3] the Authority made it clear that the language of Section 7122 of the Statute requires an agency to take actions required by an arbitrator's award when the award becomes "final and binding." In this case the Authority held that an arbitrator's award becomes final and binding when timely exceptions are not filed in accordance with the provisions of Section 7122(a), or when timely filed exceptions have been denied by the Authority. The Authority used the following language to explain the meaning of Section 7122:

> The language of section 7122(b) makes it clear that an agency must take the actions required by an arbitrator's award once the award has become final, and defines a final and binding arbitrator's award as one to which no exceptions are filed during the prescribed time following the service date of such award. Accordingly, where no timely exceptions to an arbitrator's award have been filed under section 7122(a) of the Statute, an agency's subsequent failure or refusal to implement the award has been found to constitute a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. See U.S. Army Health Clinic, Fort Ritchie, Maryland, 9 FLRA No. 133 (1982). Similarly, once an agency's timely filed exceptions to an arbitrator's award have been denied by the Authority, the agency must implement such award, and therefore a subsequent failure or refusal to do so also constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. See United States Marshals Service, 13 FLRA No. 60 (1983), appeal docketed, No. 83-7973 (9th Cir. Dec. 30, 1983). Such conclusion is consistent with the intent of Congress with respect to the finality of arbitrators' awards, as expressed by the Committee on Conference in its Report which accompanied the bill ultimately enacted and signed into law: (footnote omitted)
> The House provides that if no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed with the Authority,

> the award "shall be final and binding" (section 7122(b)). The Senate contained no comparable provision. The conferees adopted the House provision. The intent of the House in adopting this provision was to make it clear that the awards of arbitrators, when they become final, are not subject to further review by any other authority or administrative body, including the Comptroller General. (Emphasis added.)

The concept was further elaborated in United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA No. 27 (1984), 15 FLRA 151, at 153, where the Authority stated:

> [W]here a party seeks to challenge the propriety of an arbitration award, the appropriate mechanism for doing so, as Congress clearly intended, is through the filing of exceptions to that award under the provisions of Section 7122(a) of the Statute.

It is clear from the facts in this case that Arbitrator Berkowitz's March 26, 1984 arbitration award became final and binding within the meaning of Section 7122 of the Statute, when the Authority denied Respondent's exceptions. This occurred on August 29, 1984. On this date the Respondent was under a legal obligation to comply fully with the arbitration award. The fact that the Respondent did not raise certain legal defenses during appeal of the arbitration award would not operate to subject the Authority's decision to collateral attack in this forum. United States Marshals Service, 13 FLRA No. 60 (1983), 13 FLRA 351, at 358 footnote 6, appeal docketed, No. 83-7973 (9th Cir., Dec. 30, 1983).[4]

In a series of analogous cases involving failure of agencies to interpose timely appeals in arbitration cases, the Authority has held that any contention that an arbitrator's award is deficient because it is contrary to any law, rule or regulation must be made by invoking the procedures established by Congress in Section 7122(a) of the Statute. Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA No. 137 (1984), 15 FLRA 686; Veterans Administration Medical Center, Phoenix, Arizona, 15 FLRA No. 138 (1984), 15 FLRA 706; Department of Health and Human Services, Region II, 15 FLRA No. 139 (1984), 15 FLRA 710; Department of Justice, U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, Washington, D.C., 16 FLRA No. 118 (1984), 16 FLRA 840.

[4] However, it should be noted that administrative law judge decisions are subject to review by the Authority, and that Authority decisions relating to unfair labor practices are subject to review by an appropriate United States court of appeals.

In view of the foregoing it must be concluded that the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by failing to comply fully with the arbitration award under consideration herein.

Having found that the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and Section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to fully implement the March 26, 1984 arbitration award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308 by failing and refusing to compensate Customs Inspector Robert Alvardo for travel expenses as required by the award.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Comply with the March 26, 1984 arbitration award issued in FMCS Case No. 83K/29308 by compensating Customs Inspector Robert Alvardo for travel expenses as required by the award.

(b) Post at its New York, New York Regional Office facilities, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Regional Commissioner, United States Customs Service, New York Region, New York, New York, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region II, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DIGEST NOTES

An agency is required to bargain prior to changing the established standard for determining disbursements to employees' for actual travel expense claims. Under Federal Travel Regulation 1-8.3b, an agency is authorized to make a determination of reasonableness of actual subsistence expenses and to issue written guidelines to serve as a basis for an appropriate review of employee's expenses. The authority of an agency's dispursing official to issue guidelines pursuant to this regulation prior to issuance of an agency-wide policy has been sustained by the Comptroller General. Since an agency clearly has discretion to issue guidelines to serve as a basis for review of the reasonableness of an employee's expenses, such matter is, therefore, not specifically provided for by federal statute within the meaning of § 7103(a)(14)(C) or otherwise outside the duty to bargain. Thus, an agency is required to bargain to the extent of its discretion prior to establishing and implementing a change in the guidelines used for review of employee actual travel expense claims. Here, the agency's Accounting and Finance Officers (AFOs), who are responsible for dispursing public monies for the agency's expenditures, without any notice to the union, changed the guidelines used to evaluate travel vouchers for expenses incurred by employees. Thus, the Authority concluded, in agreement with the Judge, that the Respondent, by its failure to bargain over the impact and the implementation of the change in evaluating employees' travel vouchers, violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5).

The Judge also rejected the agency's contention that the actions of the Accounting and Finance Officers (AFOs) that resulted in the change here was not attributable to the Respondent. In this respect, the judge concluded that while the AFOs were responsible for the submission of official signatures to the Treasury of the United States and the assignment by the Treasury, at the request of higher command, of a disbursing station symbol number, those acts were ministerial in nature and merely connected with setting up the agency's account with the Treasury. There was no evidence that the Treasury Department controlled how the agency's funds held in the Treasury's repository were used or at any time attempted to control the use of Respondent's funds in the travel area. Further, there was no link between the Treasury and the actions of the AFOs on or about October 21, 1983 in changing the guidelines by which reimbursement of travel claims would be determined.

The Authority also agreed with the Judge that a status quo ante remedy was warranted with additional rational. In reaching this determination, the Authority noted that the Respondent had established and implemented the new method and guidelines for evaluating certain travel vouchers without any prior notice or an opportunity to request bargaining by the union. The Respondent's unilateral action, although without apparent willfulness, resulted in the disallowance of some portion of actual expenses claimed on 106 of 111 vouchers submitted by bargaining unit employees, whereas no claimed actual expenses for such travel were disallowed prior to the change. A total of $60,561 was disallowed and at least three employees received admonishments regarding disallowances. Moreover, there was no evidence in the record, nor did the Respondent assert, that a status quo ante remedy would disrupt or impair the efficiency and effectiveness of Respondent's operations. The Authority revised the Judge's recommended order, as requested by the General Counsel, to provide that the status quo ante remedy would require the Respondent to reexamine vouchers submitted after October 21, 1983, for travel to a HGRA prior to February 5, 1984, pursuant to guidelines used prior to October 21, 1983, and remunerate employees accordingly, consistent with applicable law and regulation; to reestablish and apply the guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, until modified in accordance with the requirements of the Statute; and to expunge any record of admonishments for disallowed travel expenses which would have been allowed under the preexisting guidelines.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the automatic selection of an employee to the first vacancy for which the employee qualifies and which the agency decides to fill. The proposal is limited to "qualified" candidates. Such candidates must meet the minimum qualifications requirements established by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) for the particular position as supplemented by any selective factors such as the knowledge, skills or abilities essential to the successful completion of the job which are added by the agency involved. See FPM ch. 335, § 1-2h. As a result, the proposal would preserve management's discretion to determine the qualification requirements of the position involved and the discretion to determine whether the repromotion eligible candidates under consideration are qualified. Therefore the proposal is an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3) for employees who had been demoted without personal cause. However, the proposal is not negotiable because it is contrary to a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of § 7117(a)(1). Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM permits agencies to make selections from any appropriate source whereas the proposal would limit the agency's selection to those employees who were affected by a reduction-in-force action involving demotion. (1st disputed sentence)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires a career ladder promotion for certain employees on the basis of an overall satisfactory performance appraisal without regard to whether the employee was appraised fully successful on critical elements that are also critical to performance at the next higher grade of the career ladder. This requirement is inconsistent with 5 C.F.R. § 335.104, which is a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of § 7117(a)(1). (2nd disputed sentence)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires sufficient telephones for the conduct of Government business be provided at a new office location. The proposal concerns the technology of performing work which is an elective management right under § 7106(b)(1). The agency declined to bargain on the matter. The fact that the agency may have initially bargained over the matter does not oblige the agency to continue bargaining. An agency may withdraw from bargaining on a matter within the coverage of § 7106(b)(1) at any time prior to reaching final agreement. (proposal 1)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the agency to provide adequate parking for both government and private automobiles. The adequacy of parking, i.e. the number of parking spaces for government vehicles, concerns the method and means and technology of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1) which provides for elective management rights. The agency did not elect to bargain over the proposal. (proposal 2)

A proposal concerning a joint labor-management health and safety committee was not sufficiently specific and delimited in content to enable a negotiability determination to be made. The Authority has found previous proposals concerning the establishment of local health and safety committees to be within the duty to bargain. On the other hand, the Authority has found proposals to be nonnegotiable which interject the union into the agency decision-making process through which management exercises its reserved rights under the Statute. Where the agency served the union's receptionist at its headquarters with its memorandum disapproving an agreement provision, instead of union officials who were out of town, within the 30 day time period prescribed by § 7114(c)(3), the disapproval was timely served on the union. (footnote *)

Where the agreement provision in a petition for review to the Authority was not the same provision disapproved by the agency, the Authority concluded that the petition for review on the provision was moot and would not be considered. (provision 1)

Provisions that seek to designate a particular individual within an agency who would evaluate an employee's work performance are nonnegotiable. Such provisions interfere with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). (provisions 2, 3, 4 and 5)

A provision is nonnegotiable that establishes the number of rating levels for the appraisal of an employee's performance in each critical element and also for rating overall performance. The proposal violates management's right to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). (provision 6)

A provision that prohibits the selecting official from serving on the ranking panel is nonnegotiable because it interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The proposal would restrict the agency in designating certain supervisory personnel to evaluate employees. (provision 7)

A provision is nonnegotiable that precludes the agency from rotating assignments of employees, who are temporarily assigned to higher graded positions, solely to avoid compensating them at a higher rate. The proposal substantially restricts the agency's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). (provision 8)

A provisions is nonnegotiable that would restrict the detailing of employees to lower-graded positions. The provision would allow management to detail employees under certain limited circumstances but would require management to keep such action "to an absolute minimum." Such qualifying language in a provision results in a substantial interference with management's rights. The provision would subject management's decisions to detail employees to arbitral review with an arbitrator substituting his or her judgment for that of management as to the necessity of the detail, thus, substantively interfering with management's right to assign employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). diem expenses, parties may negotiate on such payments. The agency had agreed to the payment of travel and per diem expenses to employees on official time in the previous agreement. Upon the agreement's expiration, the agency signed a memorandum of understanding extending the terms of the agreement pending negotiation of a new agreement. Thus, when the agency unilaterally terminated payment of travel and per diem expenses, it violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5). However, the same actions did not constitute an independent violation of § 7116(a)(8).

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when, upon expiration of the parties' agreement, it refused to negotiate concerning a proposal that permitted some civilian technicians the option of wearing attire other than the required military uniform. The requirement that civilian technicians wear military uniforms rather than civilian attire involves the methods and means of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1) and therefore is a permissive rather than a mandatory subject of bargaining. Although the previous agreement had a provision concerning civilian attire, an agency may unilaterally change, upon the termination of an agreement, a term and condition of employment embodied in the expired agreement which involves a permissive subject of bargaining.

While an agency acts at its peril when it refuses to negotiate on proposals similar to proposals previously found negotiable by the Authority, an unfair labor practice will not be found negotiable by the Authority where subsequently established law supports the agency's position.

Section 709(e) of the Technicians Act is the exclusive procedure for dealing with a matter involving an adverse personnel action against a National Guard technician. Such matters may not be included within the scope of the negotiated grievance procedures. Thus the Authority held that the agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) and the agency was within its rights when it asserted that upon termination of the parties' agreement, the processing of all grievances and all disciplinary and adverse actions would have to be consistent with applicable National Guard regulations.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the General Counsel and by the Respondent. The General Counsel also filed a brief in opposition to the Respondent's exceptions. The case concerns whether, as found by the Judge, the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) based on its failure to give the Union prior notice and an opportunity to request bargaining with regard to procedures and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by its decision to change the guidelines used for review of employees' travel expense claims.

II. Background

The facts, more fully set forth in the Judge's Decision, indicate that on or about October 21, 1983, Warner Robins Air Logistics Center (Respondent), without any notice to the Union, established and implemented a new method and guidelines to evaluate travel vouchers for expenses incurred by employees while performing temporary duty in high rate geographic areas (HRGA). Essentially this change involved the application of stricter standards regarding whether or not such expenses were necessary or prudent. The stricter standards for review had not been exercised by the Respondent prior to October 21, 1983, and there had been no disallowances of any travel claims submitted by unit employees who had been in a travel status within a HRGA prior to that date. The parties stipulated that the change to a stricter standard of review or closer scrutiny of employee travel vouchers resulted in disallowances of some portion of actual expenses claimed on 106 of 111 vouchers submitted by unit employees between October 21, 1983, and February 5, 1984[1] amounting to $60,561.71. Additionally, at least three employees received admonishments regarding these disallowances.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondent had established and implemented the new method and guidelines for evaluating travel vouchers without giving the Union notice or an opportunity to bargain about procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the change, thereby violating section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The Judge determined that a status quo ante remedy would be appropriate in that all employees who traveled during the period from October 21, 1983, to February 5, 1984, when a new standard was implemented, were entitled to have their travel claims considered under the standards in effect prior to October 21. However, the Judge declined to order that all disallowed expenses automatically be paid or that all admonishments automatically be expunged.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel excepts to the wording of the Judge's Decision regarding the "make whole" remedy for employees whose claimed expenses were denied. The General Counsel asserts that, as currently written, the language in the Judge's Decision may be misconstrued so as not to include any travel expense claim disallowances for travel incurred prior to October 21, 1983, and included in the travel claims submitted by employees after October 20, 1983. The General Counsel argues that, to be consistent with the Judge's findings, the remedy should include all travel claims submitted to the Respondent after October 20, 1983, concerning travel to an HRGA prior to February 5, 1984.

[1] The record reveals that on February 5, 1984, a "flat rate per diem" test was begun within the Department of the Air Force, including the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center, and that as of that date the unilaterally imposed guidelines and method of evaluation which gave rise to the complaint in this case were discontinued. Thus, the Judge found the new guidelines and method were not applied to claims for actual travel expenses after that date.

The Respondent excepts to the Judge's conclusions that the actions of its Accounting and Finance Officer (AFO) in denying claims are attributable to the Respondent; that the AFO's determinations concerning travel expense claims constitute a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute; that there was a change in past practice regarding the scrutiny of claims; and that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

V. Analysis

All of the issues raised in the Respondent's exceptions were considered fully by the Judge in his Decision. In agreement with the Judge, and for the reasons he stated, the Authority finds that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by its failure to give the Union prior notice and an opportunity to request bargaining with regard to procedures and appropriate arrangements for unit employees adversely affected by its decision to change the guidelines used for review of employees' actual expense claims for travel in high rate geographical areas (HRGA).

The Authority also agrees that a status quo ante remedy is warranted. This conclusion is based upon a careful balancing and consideration of the specific factors enumerated in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982). More specifically, the Respondent established and implemented the new method and guidelines for evaluating certain travel vouchers without any prior notice to the Union. In these circumstances, the Union had no opportunity to request bargaining. The Respondent's unilateral action, although without apparent willfulness, resulted in the disallowance of some portion of actual expenses claimed on 106 of 111 vouchers submitted by bargaining unit employees, whereas no claimed actual expenses for such travel were disallowed prior to the change. A total of $60,561 was disallowed and at least three employees received admonishments regarding disallowances. Moreover, there is no evidence in the record, nor did the Respondent assert, that a status quo ante remedy would disrupt or impair the efficiency and effectiveness of Respondent's operations.

Under all of the foregoing circumstances, the Authority concludes that a status quo ante remedy is warranted in order to best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. Such status quo ante remedy would require the Respondent to reexamine vouchers submitted after October 21, 1983, for travel to a HRGA prior to February 5, 1984, pursuant to guidelines used prior to October 21, 1983, and remunerate employees accordingly, consistent with applicable law and regulation; to reestablish and apply the guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, until modified in accordance with the requirements of the Statute; and to expunge any record of admonishments for disallowed travel expenses which would have been allowed under the preexisting guidelines.[2]

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings and conclusions, with the additional rationale for the status quo ante remedy as noted, and revises his recommended Order to clarify the language and avoid any ambiguity noted by the General Counsel in his exceptions. Therefore the Authority finds that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute as alleged in the complaint and shall order that it take appropriate action to remedy the violation.

[2] As stated by the Judge, there is no indication in the record that the prior standards for review were illegal or resulted in disbursements which violated applicable regulations.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Robins Air Force Base, Georgia shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the guidelines for review of employee actual travel expense claims without first affording the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, the designated agent of the exclusive representative of the affected employees, notice and an opportunity to bargain, consonant with the obligations imposed by the Statute, concerning the procedures for implementing such changes and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Reinstate the guidelines for examination of vouchers for travel to high rate geographical areas in effect prior to October 21, 1983.

(b) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, of any proposed change in the guidelines used for review of employee actual travel expense claims and, upon request, negotiate with the exclusive representative, to the extent consonant with the obligations imposed by the Statute, concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes.

(c) Examine under the guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, each appropriate voucher involving travel to a high rate geographical area submitted to the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center Accounting and Finance Office after October 20, 1983, concerning travel prior to February 5, 1984, on which date the unilaterally imposed guidelines and method for evaluating such vouchers were discontinued, by any employee represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, and make whole said employees accordingly, consistent with applicable law and regulation.

(d) Expunge any recorded admonishment for disallowed expenses which would have been allowed under the standards and guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, and notify the employee accordingly.

(e) Post at Warner Robins Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Robins Air Force Base, Georgia, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an appropriate official and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 29, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Atlanta, Georgia, against the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Robins Air Force Base, Georgia (Respondent or WR-ALC) based on a charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987 (Charging Party, Union, or AFGE). The complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), in that on or about October 21, 1983, the Respondent discontinued reimbursement to employees the maximum amounts allowable pursuant to the Joint Travel Regulations (JTR) for travel expenses incurred by employees performing temporary duty (TDY) in high rate geographical area (HRGA) locations and instead the Respondent provided reimbursement at rates less than the maximum amounts allowable pursuant t the JTR without first notifying AFGE and providing it an opportunity to bargain collectively concerning the procedures to be utilized in implementing such change and the impact of such change on adversely affected employees.

Respondent's answer denied that the acts and conduct complained of regarding such reimbursements constituted an unfair labor practice under the Statute. Among other things, Respondent asserted that the determination of rates approved or paid were not made on behalf of Respondent, but rather were approved or paid by an agent of the U.S. Treasury Department.

A hearing was held at Warner Robins, Georgia. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. Based on the entire record,[1/] including the stipulations offered and my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The WR-ALC is one of five air logistics centers of the Air Force Logistics Command, located at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, Ohio. (Tr. 16). The WR-ALC Accounting and Finance Office is a part of the WR-ALC base complex and is serviced by other WR-ALC service organizations. (Tr. 18-19). There are approximately 225 to 250 civilian employees in the Accounting and Finance Office. (Tr. 21 and 57). The Accounting and Finance Office consists of a number of branches including the Pay and Travel Branch whose mission, in pertinent part, is to process travel voucher expense claims (travel claims), submitted by, inter alios, Union bargaining unit employees. (Tr. 20)[2/] Lieutenant Colonel Michael Wilder is the WR-ALC Accounting and Finance Officer (AFO), in command of the Accounting and Finance Office. (Tr. 16 and 55). Lieutenant Colonel Wilder's second in command is Edward G. Hilliard who is the Deputy AFO. (Tr. 15 and 23).

[1/] Counsel for the General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the transcript is granted; the transcript is hereby corrected as set forth therein.

[2/] At all times material herein, the American Federation of Government Employees, hereinafter referred to as the AFGE, was the exclusive representative of certain employees of Respondent in an ALC wide consolidated bargaining unit described in a collective bargaining agreement between AFGE, Council 214 and the ALC. (G.C. Exhs. 1(c) and (d); Joint Exh. 2, paragraph 1, Attachment 1).

The AFO and Deputy AFO are subject to the direction and control of the Respondent in connection with managing the accounting and finance programs and operations. With respect to these matters as well as the disbursement of funds, their work is guided by a large variety of laws, regulations, policy directives and procedural manuals issued by higher headquarters and precedent decisions by specialized agencies.

Pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3321(c) the head of each of the military Departments of the Department of Defense designates personnel of the agency as disbursing officials to disburse public money available for expenditure by the agency. Air Force Regulation 177-101(c2), Chapter 6 provides for the appointment of an AFO by a deputy commander for resource management or base commander and for actions that must be taken before the AFO takes up disbursing duties. These include the submission of official signatures to the Treasurer of the United States and the assignment by the Treasury Department, at the request of the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center, of a disbursing station symbol number. (Joint Exh. 1, Att. 2). The AFOs in this matter assumed the status of disbursing officials in this manner. (Joint Exh. 1, Att. 8-11; Jt. Exhs. 4-6).

Air Force Regulation 177-101, para. 6-13(b) provides that the AFO "is an agent of the U.S. Treasury Department in the receipt, safeguarding, and disbursing of cash and issuance of checks; and of the Federal Reserve System in the receipt, safeguarding, and issuance of U.S. savings bonds." This regulation states that "AFOs legally remain pecuniarily liable to the U.S. for all public funds entrusted to their accounts and for any erroneous or illegal payments they make." (Joint Exh. 1, Att. 2). Relief from liability for illegal, improper, or incorrect payments is available to a disbursing official of an agency only on the initiative of the Comptroller General or written recommendation of the head of the agency, and only when the Comptroller General decides that the payment was not the result of bad faith or lack of reasonable care by the official. 31 U.S.C. § 3527(c). Losses or deficiencies within the Air Force are investigated and recommendations for relief are initially considered within the Air Force command structure. (Joint Exh. 1, Att. 2, Chapter 11). AFO's receive broad, general guidelines from the Air Logistics Command, the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center, and the Inspector General.3/ However, in determining the propriety of any specific payment, no one in the chain of command can direct them to make a payment of over $25.00 which they do not feel is proper. AFOs may request a decision from the Comptroller General on a question involving a voucher presented for payment. 31 U.S.C. § 3529. The request is submitted through Air Force channels. Reviewing authority may disagree with the propriety of submitting the request, but if the reasons given are not acceptable to the AFO, the AFO cannot be deprived of the right to submit the question to the Comptroller General where the amount involves $25.00 or more. Where the amount involves $25.00 or less, decision on the request is made by the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center and need not be submitted to the Comptroller General for decision. (Joint Exh. 1, Att. 2 and 3, Chapter 12 and 16; Tr. 19; see B-192246, January 8, 1979).

3/ Lt. Col. Wilder also testified that he received guidance from the Treasury Department. (Tr. 58). However, unlike the case of the other sources cited, there is no relevant documentary evidence or testimony to corroborate Lt. Col. Wilder's self-serving declaration concerning the alleged Department of Treasury guidance.

The Joint Travel Regulation (JTR) and various Air Force Regulations (AFR's), pertain to the processing of travel claims. (Joint Exh. 1, p. 1, Att. 1, 2 and 3). Among these regulations is JTR, par. C1058-1 which provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> A traveler on official business (permanent duty travel or temporary duty travel) will exercise the same care in incurring expenses and accomplishing a mission that a person would exercise if traveling on personal business. Excess costs, circuitous routes, delays or luxurious accommodations unnecessary or unjustified in the performance of a mission are not considered acceptable as exercising prudence. (Joint Exh. 1, p. 2).

This "prudent and necessary standard" is the source of authority upon which the AFO and/or Deputy AFO review the reasonableness of travel claims submitted by bargaining unit employees involving M&IE which do not otherwise exceed the limits for particular cities established in the JTR at Appendix E. The AFO and Deputy AFO are personally responsible for the approval, disapproval, or other determinations concerning the payment of travel claims. However, in processing travel claims, the application of the prudent and necessary standard has been ministerially delegated to subordinate staff personnel in the WR-ALC Accounting and Finance Office. The discretion used in applying the standard is exercised only by the AFO and the Deputy AFO. With regard to travel voucher expense claims resulting in a disallowance of actual expenses by the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO, WR-ALC employees, including Union bargaining unit employees, have the right to appeal any disallowance determination to higher command levels for recommendation and ultimately to the Comptroller General for a decision; said appeal procedure is commonly referred to as the "doubtful claims" procedure. (Joint Exh. 1, p. 2-3).

The Air Logistics Center (ALC) and the Air Force Accounting and Finance Center (AFAFC), Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, periodically issue messages to Air Force AFO's including the WR-ALC AFO concerning the application of the prudent and necessary standard. (Joint Exh. 2, p. 3, 4 and 2, Att. 3, 4 and 5). In fact, the prudent and necessary standard was the focus of attention within the Air Force as a part of the Air Force campaign against fraud, waste and abuse. (Joint Exh. 2, p. 2, 3, 4 and 7, Att. 2, 3, 4 and 7; and 3; Tr. 48-49). Specifically, Air Force AFO's within the ALC including the WR-ALC AFO and Deputy AFO, were encouraged by both the ALC and the AFAFC to more closely monitor the application of the prudent and necessary standard as a means to comply with the campaign. For example, as early as January 7, 1983, the ALC Chief of Staff, Major General William J. Kelly sent a memorandum to the WR-ALC stating, inter alia, that "administration of travel allowances is a Command responsibility" and further encouraging the closer scrutiny of travel claims. The memorandum ordered all travel orders issuing/approving officials to review and sign travel vouchers prior to submission to the AFO for final payment. A travel claim review guide was attached to facilitate the review process. The four page guide offered broad guidelines on all expense items. It stated, "The reviewer should be concerned with the reasonableness of amounts claimed. Accounting and Finance personnel will make determinations concerning propriety of payment." (Joint Exh. 3; Tr. 24). Also, the WR-ALC Accounting and Finance Office received a message from the AFAFC dated September 8, 1983, encouraging the recognition of abuses in expending Government funds and offering general guidelines for use in establishing the reasonableness of travel claims. General guidelines were offered for examining meal, lodging, transportation, and miscellaneous expense claims. (Joint Exh. 2, p. 3, Att. 3).

On or about October 11, 1983, the WR-ALC AFO received another message from AFAFC. The message stated that specific guidelines for determining the reasonableness of expenses would not be issued; that AFOs were expected to operate under the present broad guidelines; and that the facts of each case should be analyzed and additional clarification or advice should be sought from the traveler, supervisor, staff judge advocate, or higher command as needed. (Joint Exh. 2, Att. 4).

As a result of this Air Force campaign to combat fraud, waste and abuse, including the correspondence received by the WR-ALC Accounting and Finance Office through Air Force channels, and as a result of talks with WR-ALC subordinates, the AFO and/or Deputy AFO determined, in or about early October 1983, that it had to have some guidelines, some kind of procedures to follow in determining what is reasonable and prudent. The AFO secured what it thought was a good guide, the Runzheimer Meal-Lodging Cost Index and decided to begin a process of stricter scrutiny of travel claims to WRGA for all employees, including Union bargaining unit employees. (Joint Exh. 1, par. 4; Tr. 48-50). Thus, on or about October 7, 1983, Colonel Gary Bowman, WR-ALC Comptroller, issued a memorandum to all WR-ALC "Directors, Staff officers, and Tenant Commanders" announcing this action. (Joint Exh. 2, p. 2, Att. 2; Tr. 62). There is no record evidence that this memorandum was sent to the Union.

On or about October 21, 1983, the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO at WR-ALC with regard to the application of the "prudent and necessary" standard, implemented the decision and began a process of stricter scrutiny of HRGA travel voucher actual expense claims submitted by WR-ALC employees, including Union bargaining unit employees. Respondent did not notify any representative of either AFGE Local 987, AFGE Council 214 or the National Office AFGE prior to these actions. (Joint Exh. 1).

Prior to the actions of the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO at WR-ALC on or about October 21, 1983, there are no travel voucher actual expense claims involving a Union bargaining unit employee on travel to a HRGA wherein a claimed actual expense was disallowed, as the process of the application of stricter scrutiny pursuant to the prudent and necessary standard described above, was not exercised by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO prior to on or about October 21, 1983 (Joint Exh. 1). Travelers prior to, and on and after October 21, 1983, were required to certify that their claimed expenses were actual and necessary. (Joint Exh. 7, DD Form 1351-3). The voucher was subject to organizational review by travel approving officials. The voucher was then examined by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO to determine that the claim was properly supported by documentation and was legal and valid in accordance with the JTR and other regulations. More or less what the travelers were claiming was what was being paid.4/ (Tr. 47-48).

As part of the stricter scrutiny process, on or about October 21, 1983, the AFO and/or Deputy AFO, with regard to travel claims of, inter alios, Union bargaining unit employees, began using a standard reimbursement rate or limit to be applied to all travel claims involving HRGA based on the Runzheimer Meal-Lodging Cost Index. Runzheimer's, in general, sets forth average meal (breakfast, lunch and dinner) and lodging costs for U.S. cities. This initial use of Runzheimer's, for the first time, as an absolute standard reimbursement rate, resulted in the disallowance of portions of claims submitted by Union bargaining unit employees. (Tr. 24-25 and 45-46, 49; Joint Exh. 2, p. 12, Att. 12).

Shortly after the implementation of this change involving the utilization of Runzheimer's, however, the WR-ALC Labor Relations Officer and a representative from the WR-ALC Staff Judge Advocates Office, visited the Deputy AFO and told him that it was their opinion he could not use Runzheimer's in the manner he was using it, i.e. setting standard reimbursement rates per city. Thereafter, the Deputy AFO discussed the use of Runzheimer's with ALC and AFAFC personnel. They then discontinued the use of Runzheimer's in the manner in which he had been applying the index since on or about October 21, 1983.[5] This initial use of Runzheimer's, according to the uncontested testimony of the Deputy AFO, lasted a very short time to about a week. (Tr. 24-27).

4/ For the approximate two year period prior to October 21, 1983, there were about 66,424 vouchers submitted by bargaining unit employees at WR-ALC involving travel to both HRGA and non-HRGA. There were about 12,062 such vouchers filed in the four month period prior to October 21, 1983.

After the AFO and Deputy AFO discontinued using Runzheimer's as an absolute limit for reimbursements, they began using Runzheimer as only a guide as part of the process of giving stricter scrutiny to travel claims. Other sources also considered as guides in making these determinations as to those expenses which would be deemed reasonable in certain locations were area menus, discussions with travelers, and discussions with commanders in the various locations. (Tr. 40-41, 45-47). They continued as before to also examine the voucher in light of the documentation provided and the applicable policies and regulations. (Tr. 47-48). Upon discontinuance of the use of Runzheimer's in the initial manner in which it had been used, the travel claims of bargaining unit employees who had been reviewed pursuant to Runzheimer's were recomputed by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO. This resulted in some lesser disallowances than had been determined under the previous manner in which the Runzheimer index had been used. (Tr. 24-26).

Subsequent to October 21, 1983, there were 111 travel voucher actual expense claims submitted by bargaining unit employees to which the following occurred: The AFO and/or Deputy AFO applied the stricter scrutiny review process described above. There were 5 travel vouchers where no actual expense claims were disallowed. There were 106 travel vouchers where actual expense claims were disallowed. Subsequent to the disallowance of certain actual expense claims, 22 Union bargaining unit employees filed a request with the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO to reconsider the disallowed actual expense claim pursuant to the "doubtful claim" procedures. As a result, 6 filings were subsequently withdrawn, 5 filings resulted in a reduction of the initial disallowance by the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO, and 11 filings resulted in the AFO and/or Deputy AFO upholding his initial disallowance determination. Of the 11 filings which resulted in the initial disallowance of the AFO and/or Deputy AFO being upheld by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO, all the 11 filings were sent to the AFAFC recommended by the AFAFC with regard to the AFO's and/or Deputy AFO's determination. None of the doubtful claims have been appealed by the 11 employees to the Comptroller General for decision.

[5] Subsequently, by message dated January 9, 1984 the AFAFC advised, inter alia, the WR-ALC/AAFO that the use by some AFOs of Runzheimer's Index and possibly other publications as the basis for determining and limiting meal and laundry reimbursement rates was in direct violation of the JTRs and must be discontinued. AFAFC stated that Runzheimer's may only be used as a guide in determining the reasonableness of claimed expenses, and that AFOs may not arbitrarily set a standard reimbursement rate to be applied against all vouchers. (J. Exh. 2, Att. 5).

The total amount of actual expenses claimed involving the 111 travel vouchers was $490,414.34. The total amount of disallowed actual expenses claimed in the 106 travel vouchers which involved an initial disallowance by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO was $60,804.61. The total amount of disallowed actual expenses claimed in the 5 travel vouchers which involved a reduction in the initial disallowance by the AFO and/or Deputy AFO pursuant to the doubtful claims procedure was $242.90. Therefore, the net total amount disallowed was $60,561.71.

With regard to the Union bargaining unit employees who were disallowed actual expense claims, notification of these disallowance determinations was sent by the office of the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO to the WR-ALC duty organization management and/or supervisory officials of some of the employees whose claims were disallowed. As a result of these notifications, some of the management and/or supervisory officials made independent inquiries into the circumstances of the disallowances and as a result at least three bargaining unit employees received oral admonishments which were annotated in the employees' AF Form 971 (a supervisor's record of an employee).

For an approximate four month period subsequent to October 21, 1983, there were about 10,752 vouchers submitted by bargaining unit employees at WR-ALC involving travel to both HRGA and non-HRGA.

As of February 5, 1984, and until September 30, 1985, a "flat rate per diem" test experiment is being conducted within the Department of the Air Force, including WR-ALC. As a result of this experiment, with regard to travel to HRGA incurred by WR-ALC employees, including Union bargaining unit employees, after February 5, 1984, the prudent and necessary standard, pursuant to an amendment to the JTR, is not applicable to claims for actual travel expenses. Thus, with regard to travel incurred by WR-ALC employees, including Union bargaining unit employees, after February 5, 1984, set forth in travel voucher expense claims processed by the office of the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO at WR-ALC after February 5, 1984, the stricter scrutiny application of the prudent and necessary standard has not been applied to actual expenses. However, with regard to travel incurred by WR-ALC employees, including Union bargaining unit employees, prior to February 5, 1984, set forth in travel voucher expense claims processed by the office of the AFO and/or the Deputy AFO at WR-ALC after February 5, 1984, the stricter scrutiny application of the prudent and necessary standard is applied to Union bargaining unit employees.

Discussion, Conclusions, and Recommendations

The General Counsel contends that the actions of the WR-ALC AFO and/or Deputy AFO in changing the method of reviewing travel claims affecting bargaining unit employees without prior notice to the exclusive representative violated sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The General Counsel asserts that the AFO and Deputy AFO are agents of Respondent, and that the subject travel expense claims are not excluded from those matters subject to collective bargaining pursuant to section 7103(a)(14)(c) as being "specifically provided for by Federal statute."

Respondent defends on the basis that the actions of the AFOs resulting in the application of stricter scrutiny and the concomitant disallowances of actual travel expense claims submitted to them by employees are not attributable to Respondent. Respondent claims that the AFOs in this capacity answer only to the Department of the Treasury and to the Comptroller General and not to the Respondent agency. Respondent also asserts that matters involving the approval, disapproval, or other determinations regarding disbursements to employees for actual travel expense claims are not a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) as such matters are specifically provided for by Federal statute and, therefore, do not form a basis for invoking the right to engage in collective bargaining. Finally, Respondent contends that the actions of the AFOs was not a change requiring bargaining as the agency has always been obligated to make case-by-case determinations in each instance under the same standard, and the only change was in the AFOs ability to make more precise determinations.

The change established and implemented by the AFOs in October 1983, was not merely more precise determinations of what actual expense claims were "prudent and necessary" on a case-by-case basis as contended by Respondent. Rather, the record reflects that the change was in the AFOs establishment and implementation of overall guidelines by which "prudent and necessary" would be determined in each case. First, the AFOs adopted Runzheimer's Meal-Lodging Cost Index as an absolute limit for reimbursements. Then, when Runzheimer's was abandoned as the absolute limit for reimbursements after about a week, Runzheimer's was used along with area menus, discussions with travelers, and discussions with area commanders in various locations as guidelines for determining whether such claims were "prudent and necessary." The change resulted in an impact and a reasonably foreseeable impact on bargaining unit employees inasmuch as out of 111 actual expense claims submitted thereafter, 106 had actual expense claims disallowed whereas no claimed actual expenses for travel to HMGA were disallowed under the "prudent and necessary" standard of review used prior to the change. There is no suggestion, either prior to or after the change, that the actual expenses claimed were not actually incurred by employees. As noted, the change was in the guidelines used and the evaluation thereunder, the method of review, of whether such incurred expenses were "prudent and necessary." This strict scrutiny of travel claims under the process outlined represented a significant shift from past practice. Cf. New Mexico Air National Guard, Department of Military Affairs, Office of the Adjutant General, Santa Fe, New Mexico, 4 A/SLMR 176 (1974).

The actions of the AFOs in this case are attributable to Respondent and not to the Department of the Treasury and the Comptroller General, a contended by Respondent. The AFOs were appointed as disbursing officers by the Respondent pursuant to 31 U.S.C. § 3321 and Air Force Regulation 177-101. The submission of official signatures to the Treasury of the United States and the assignment by the Treasury Department, at the request of higher command, of a disbursing station symbol number were ministerial acts connected with the setting up of the account with the Treasury. It permitted the AFOs to disburse public money by cash or chec available for expenditure by the agency and held by the Treasury Department as the repository of funds. There is no evidence that the Treasury Department controls how the funds are used, or, at any time, attempted to control the use of Respondent's funds in the travel area. There is no link between the Department of the Treasury and the actions o the AFOs on or about October 11, 1983 in changing the guidelines by which reimbursement of travel claims would be determined.

The AFOs undertook the change at issue as a result of higher command encouragement to combat fraud, waste, and abuse. In fact, as discussed i more detail infra, paragraph 1 - 8.3b of the Federal Travel Regulations requires that "[a]gencies shall assure that travel on an actual subsistence basis is properly administered and shall take necessary actio to prevent abuse." The AFOs, in changing the guidelines by which reimbursement of travel claims would be determined, were acting as management officials within the meaning of section 7103(a)(11) of the Statute and as agents of Respondent. It is also noted that Respondent, through the comptroller, sanctioned the change by issuing a memorandum, drafted by the AFOs, to all directors, staff officers, and tenant commanders on the base.

The next issue is Respondent's contention that a determination regarding disbursements to employees for actual travel expense claims is not a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute[6/] as such matters are specifically provided by Federal statute and, therefore, do not form a basis for collective bargaining. It is noted that under § 5 U.S.C. § 5702(c) the Administrator of General

"(14) 'conditions of employment' means personnel policies, practices, and matters, whether established by rule, regulation, or otherwise, affecting working conditions, except that such term does not include policies, practices, and matters --"

Services may prescribe conditions by regulations under which an employee may be reimbursed for "actual and necessary expenses" for travel to a highrate geographical areas in an amount not to exceed the maximum rate prescribed. Within that maximum, a Department of Defense employee's reimbursement is subject to the "prudent and necessary" general limitations set out in the Joint Travel Regulations, par. C1030-1. See also Federal Travel Regulations (FTR) para. 1-1.3. The agency's responsibility for the authorization and reimbursement of actual subsistence expenses is outlined in paragraph 1-8.3b of the FTR as follows:

> b. Review and administrative controls. Heads of agencies shall establish necessary administrative arrangements for an appropriate review of the justification for travel on the actual subsistence expense basis and of the expenses claimed by a traveler to determine whether they are allowable subsistence expenses and were necessarily incurred in connection with the specific travel assignment. Agencies shall ensure that travel on an actual subsistence expense basis is properly administered and shall take necessary action to prevent abuses.

The Comptroller General has held that this regulation serves a dual function. It requires an agency determination of reasonableness of actual subsistence expenses[7] and it gives the agency authority to issue written guidelines to serve as a basis for an appropriate review of an employee's expenses. Matter of Davis, B-197576, September 8, 1980 and Matter of Kephart, B-186078, October 12, 1976. The Comptroller General has observed that such guidelines can benefit both the traveler and the approving official. The authority of an APO to issue guidelines pursuant to this regulation prior to issuance of an agency-wide policy has also been sustained. Matter of R. Edward Palmer, B-203762, 62 Comp. Gen. 88 (1982).

Accordingly, since the Respondent clearly has discretion to issue guidelines for the benefit of both the traveler and the approving official to serve as a basis for review of the reasonableness of an employee's expenses, the matter at issue is not specifically provided by federal statute. See Legislative History of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, 96th Cong., 1st Sess., Committee Print No. 96-7(1979), p. 956-957.

[7] The Comptroller General has held that he will overturn the agency's initial determination of reasonableness only where the evidence results in a finding that the agency's determination was clearly erroneous, arbitrary, or capricious. Matter of Charles B. Boucher, B-213021 (May 2, 1984).

Respondent was required to bargain to the extent of its discretion prior to establishing and implementing a change in the guidelines used for review of employee actual travel expense claims. Cf. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748 (1982); March Air Force Base, Riverside, California, 13 FLRA No. 44, 13 FLRA 255 (1983) at 260; Boston District Recruiting Command, Boston, Massachusetts, 15 FLRA No. 142, 15 FLRA 720 (1984) at 723-724. See also National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU, Chapter 208, 13 FLRA No. 13, 13 FLRA 60 (1983)(proposal concerning travel status which would not require disbursements which would be inconsistent with applicable regulations would be within the duty to bargain). The General Counsel alleged a failure to bargain on the impact and implementation of such change. Respondent's failure to do so in the circumstances of this case violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged. Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 4 FLRA 488 (1980); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Region VI, 10 FLRA 26 (1982); U.S. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., Case No. 3-CA-2751, ALJDR 20 (1983).

The General Counsel requests as an appropriate remedy that employees suffering disallowances be made whole, that any recorded admonishments emanating from the disallowances be expunged, a return to the status quo with regard to the processing of any travel claims for travel during the period from October 21, 1983 to February 5, 1984, and the posting of an appropriate notice.

It would not be appropriate to order that all disallowed expenses automatically be paid or that all admonishments automatically be expunged. Disbursements must be made consistent with applicable regulations and in accordance with the advice/appeal rights of both employees and the AFOs. However, balancing the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by a status quo ante remedy, and taking into consideration the various factors set forth in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA No. 111 (1982), it is concluded that the status quo ante remedy requested will best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. All bargaining unit employees who traveled during the period from October 21, 1983 to February 5, 1984, are entitled to have their travel claims considered under the standards existing prior to October 21, 1983 and without regard to the additional guidelines implemented at that time. There is no indication in the record that the prior standards for review were illegal or resulted in disbursements which violated applicable regulations. However, in the event there is any question that incurred expenses were not allowable under the standards then in effect, both the AFOs and the employees will be able to exercise any advice/appeal rights consistent with applicable law or regulation.

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

Order

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Warner Robins Air Logistics Center (AFLC), Robins Air Force Base, Georgia shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the guidelines for review of employee actual travel expense claims without first affording the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, notice and an opportunity to bargain consonant with the obligations imposed by the Statute.

(b) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, of any proposed change in the guidelines used for review of employee actual travel expense claims and, upon request, negotiate in good faith on the proposal to the extent consonant with the obligations imposed by the Statute.

(b) Examine each appropriate voucher submitted by any employee represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 987, for actual expenses incurred for travel to high rate geographical areas during the period from October 21, 1983 to February 5, 1984, under the standards and guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, and remunerate said employee accordingly consistent with applicable law and regulation. In the event any employee was given a recorded admonishment for disallowed expenses which should have been allowed under the standards and guidelines in effect prior to October 21, 1983, expunge any such admonishment and notify the employee accordingly.

(c) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commander shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to 5 C.F.R. section 2423.30 notify the Regional Director, Region IV, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Atlanta, Georgia, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the two underscored sentences of the following Union proposal.

> Repromotions. Special consideration for repromotion is extended to an employee who has been demoted in the unit without personal cause (that is, without misconduct or performance failure and not at the employee's request). Such consideration is extended for three years following the effective date of the demotion. This employee shall be selected for the first available vacancy for which he or she qualifies and which the Employer determines to fill. Such demoted employees who have been placed in career ladder positions shall be promoted therein annually provided their overall performance remains satisfactory until he or she has regained his or her original grade level.

Based on the positions of the parties in this case each disputed sentence is treated separately in this decision.

II. First Disputed Sentence

> This employee shall be selected for the first available vacancy for which he or she qualifies and which the Employer determines to fill.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that:

1. By requiring the automatic selection of a repromotion eligible this sentence interferes with management's right to make selections from any appropriate source under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute and a Government-wide regulation, namely, Requirement 4, subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM);

2. because it is not limited to filling positions at or below the level from which the employee was demoted and would apply to employees only minimally qualified it is an inappropriate arrangement and inconsistent with the mandate of an effective and efficient government under section 7101(b) of the Statute;

3. because it would apply to employees voluntarily demoted section 7106(b)(3) is inapplicable;

4. because it would apply to employees demoted for cause it would prevent management from acting at all with regard to effecting performance based or conduct based adverse actions; and,

5. it does not concern conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees to the extent it applies to individuals separated from employment or to nonbargaining unit employees or positions.

According to the Union this sentence was intended to be limited to employees involuntarily demoted without personal cause and did not contemplate employees being selected for managerial positions. Further, in support of its position that the disputed sentence is negotiable as an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), the Union cites the decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

B. Analysis

1. Meaning of First Disputed Sentence

The portion of the Union's proposal which is not in dispute expressly limits application of the first disputed sentence to employees involuntarily demoted without personal cause to positions in the unit. Thus, the Agency's arguments to the contrary are without merit and cannot be sustained. In addition, the Agency does not support its claim that the sentence would require the filling of positions at grade levels above the demoted employee's former grade or require the filling of nonbargaining unit positions.

2. Appropriate arrangements within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute

The first disputed sentence expressly limits the selection of demoted employees for vacancies which the Agency decides to fill to demoted employees who are "qualified." The term "qualified" is not defined in the record. We therefore adopt for the purpose of this decision the meaning accorded to it in the FPM: Meeting the minimum qualifications requirements established by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) for the particular position as supplemented by any "selective factors" such as the knowledge, skills or abilities essential to the successful completion of the job which are added by the agency involved. See FPM chapter 335, section 1-2h. As a result, the first disputed sentence would preserve management's discretion to determine the qualifications requirements of the position involved and the discretion to determine whether the repromotion eligible candidates under consideration are qualified. Further, the first disputed sentence would not require management to fill a vacant position. Hence, the Authority finds that the first disputed sentence in this case has the same effect as the proposal in the Authority's Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984). In that case the Authority concluded that the proposal constituted a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute notwithstanding its limitation on management's discretion to determine the relative qualifications of repromotion eligibles.1/ Accordingly, the Authority finds, for the reasons stated more fully in that decision, that the first disputed sentence here does not excessively interfere with management's rights and, therefore, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

3. Interference with Government-wide Rule or Regulation

The Authority also concluded in its Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census that while the proposal constituted an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3), it nevertheless was outside the duty to bargain under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute because it was inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation, that is, Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, which would permit agencies to fill positions by making selections from any appropriate source. The first disputed sentence at issue in this case would require the Agency to select for vacancies which it has decided to fill only those employees who are affected by reduction-in-force actions involving demotion. It would, therefore, have the same effect as the proposal in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, that is, it would prevent the Agency from making selections from any appropriate source. Thus, for the reasons stated more fully in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, the first disputed sentence in this case also violates Requirement 4 of subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM, a Government-wide regulation, and is outside the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

We find that the first disputed sentence would not excessively interfere with management's rights and, thus, that it constitutes an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of such rights, within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. However, we also hold, based upon the analysis provided in our Decision and Order on Remand in AFGE, Local 2782 and Bureau of the Census, 14 FLRA 801 (1984), affirmed in the Authority's Decision and Order on Motion for Reconsideration (July 11, 1985), petition for review filed, No. 85-1562 (D.C. Cir. September 6, 1985), that the sentence conflicts with FPM, chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

[1/] Subsequent to the filings in this case the Authority issued National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), in which we specifically adopted the rationale of the District of Columbia Circuit in AFGE, Local 2782. Thus, as we stated in the Kansas Army National Guard decision, we will henceforth determine whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute by determining whether the proposal excessively interferes with the exercise of management's rights.

III. Second Disputed Sentence

> Such demoted employees who have been placed in career ladder positions shall be promoted annually provided their overall performance remains satisfactory until he or she has regained his or her original grade level.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that:

1. By making career ladder promotions automatic based only on an overall satisfactory performance rating it interferes with management's right to make selections for promotions under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute, it is inconsistent with Government-wide regulations, namely, Requirement 4, subchapter 1-4, chapter 335 of the FPM and subchapter 1-5, chapter 335 of the FPM, it is inconsistent with classification requirements established in law and the FPM, and it is inconsistent with 5 U.S.C. §§ 4303 and 7512;

2. because it would in certain circumstances require promotions above the journeyman levels of the career ladder it interferes with management's rights to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B), to make selections for promotions under section 7106(a)(2)(C) and to determine numbers, types and grades of employees assigned under section 7106(b)(1); and,

3. it does not concern working conditions of bargaining unit employees to the extent it applies to nonbargaining unit employees and positions.

According to the Union the proposal is limited to employees involuntarily demoted without personal cause and did not contemplate employees being selected for managerial positions. The Union further argues that it does not intend the proposal to require employees to be promoted to positions at a level above the one from which they had been demoted or to positions outside the bargaining unit.

In support of its position, the Union cites American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782, 702 F.2d 1183 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

B. Analysis

It is generally understood that when a Federal employee is placed in a career ladder position that employee is placed at a grade level less than the full performance or journeyman grade level with the express intention to prepare that employee for advancement by noncompetitive promotions through intermediary grade levels to the full performance grade level. See FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-5. Although not discussed by the parties, such noncompetitive career ladder promotions are governed by 5 C.F.R. § 335.104 (1985).

This regulation provides as follows:

> (a) No employee shall receive a career ladder promotion unless his or her most recent summary rating under Part 430 of this chapter is "Fully Successful" or higher. In addition, no employee may receive a career ladder promotion who has a rating below "Fully Successful" on a critical element that is also critical to performance at the next higher grade of the career ladder.

The second disputed sentence, however, expressly requires a career ladder promotion solely on the basis of an overall satisfactory performance appraisal without regard to whether the employee was appraised fully successful on critical elements that are also critical to performance at the next higher grade of the career ladder. This requirement is inconsistent with 5 CFR § 335.104, which is a Government-wide regulation within the meaning of section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. See National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748, 755 (1980).

In view of our decision that this sentence violates a Government-wide regulation we find it unnecessary to address the Agency's additional contentions that the proposal would improperly require noncompetitive promotions in various hypothetical circumstances.

C. Conclusion

We hold that the second disputed sentence conflicts with 5 CFR § 353.104 and, therefore, is nonnegotiable under section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute. In view of this holding, section 7106(b)(3) is inapplicable.[2/]

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Federal Labor Relations Authority (the Authority) pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and raises issues concerning the negotiability of three Union proposals made in connection with an office relocation.

II. Threshold Issue

The Agency contends that it has no duty to bargain any of the three proposals because the office relocation does not substantially or materially affect any condition of employment. It also claims as to Union Proposal 2 that it has no duty to bargain based on bargaining history and the coverage of the parties' existing agreement.

The Authority has consistently held that we will only decide in a negotiability appeal issues which are before us under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties concerning the duty to bargain in the specific circumstances of this case, these issues may be raised in other appropriate proceedings. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984).

> Management shall provide sufficient telephones necessary to conduct government business.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is bargainable only at the election of the Agency under section 7106(b)(1) because it concerns the technology, methods, and means of performing work i.e., the Agency will determine the number of telephone instruments necessary for the conduct of its business. The Agency also maintains that there is no obligation to bargain on the proposal because it is inconsistent with the requirement under section 7101(b) of the Statute that the Statute be interpreted in a manner consistent with an effective and efficient Government.

The Union contends that the proposal is negotiable because the employees in the effected office are Mine Safety and Health Inspectors who have a critical need for the use of a telephone to perform their official duties and because the Agency signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the Union in which the Agency did in fact bargain over telephones and thus established a past practice of bargaining over the matter.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 1, by requiring that sufficient telephones "for the conduct of Government business" be furnished, concerns the "technology of performing work" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 644, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Mine Health and Safety Administration, Morgantown, West Virginia, 15 FLRA No. 170 (1984) (Union Proposal 3), citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3760 and Social Security Administration, Disability Analysis Branch, Field Assessment Office, 11 FLRA 576 (1983) and cases cited therein. Under section 7106(b)(1), such matters are negotiable at the Agency's election. Also, it is well established that an agency may withdraw from bargaining on a matter within the coverage of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute at any time prior to reaching final agreement on such matter. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1979 and U.S. Forest Service, San Dimas Equipment Development Center, 16 FLRA No. 60 (1984) (Provisions 2-3); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council and

Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 8 FLRA 347 (1982) (Union Proposal 15), rev'd on other grounds sub nom. United States Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA, 709 F.2d 724 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Since the Agency has declined to bargain on the proposal, we conclude that Union Proposal 1 is not within the duty to bargain. We therefore need not address the Agency's additional claim that bargaining over the proposal would be inconsistent with section 7101(b).

IV. Union Proposal 2

> Adequate parking shall be provided for both government and private automobiles.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the proposal conflicts with government-wide regulations pertaining to parking and is inconsistent with section 7106(a) and (b)(1) of the Statute because it relates to the assignment of work.

The Union contends that the proposal is negotiable because it deals only with maintaining the adequacy of parking for bargaining unit employees.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Government-wide regulations relied upon by the Agency are the same as those involved in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 644, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, 21 FLRA No. 84 (1986) (Union Proposals 6 and 11). In that case we found that the regulations were not a bar to negotiation of a proposal to provide parking for private and government vehicles. For the reasons stated in that decision, we reach the same result in the present case. As to whether the proposal is inconsistent with management rights under section 7106, however, an issue which was not presented in U.S. Department of Labor, OSHA, we find that Union Proposal 2 by requiring the Agency to negotiate over the adequacy of parking i.e., number of spaces, for government vehicles concerns the method, means and technology of performing work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The proposal would require the Agency to acquire parking spaces for government vehicles used in connection with an employee's performance of official duties. Matters relating to the use of government vehicles, including parking for them, constitute methods, means and technology of performing the agency's work. Compare, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 644, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Mine Health and Safety Administration, Morgantown, West Virginia, 15 FLRA No. 170 (1984) (Union Proposal 3) (matters pertaining to use of telephone for government business within purview of 7106(b)(1) of the Statute). As such, the proposal violates section 7106(b)(1). Since the Agency has not elected to bargain on the matter, the Authority concludes that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain.

V. Union Proposal 3

> Prior to occupancy, a complete Safety and Health inspection shall be made of the building and office space provided. Before occupancy, all conditions observed shall be corrected. The Union shall be a part of the inspection team.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that: (1) the proposal is inconsistent with the requirement under section 7101(b) of the Statute that the Statute be interpreted in a manner consistent with an effective and efficient Government; and (2) the Union waived its right under the parties' agreement to bargain on the proposal by virtue of the bargaining history of the agreement.

The Union contends that: (1) the parties' agreement does not address pre-occupancy inspections of facilities; and (2) the proposal does materially affect conditions of employment pertaining to safety and health because it is the Union's obligation to insure that employees will be moving into a hazard-free work environment from the hazard-free environment they currently enjoy.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The proposal is not sufficiently specific and delimited in content to enable a negotiability determination to be made. From the proposal and the parties' statements it is unclear: (1) whether the committee itself will correct deficiencies based upon its findings and/or whether its findings are binding upon management; and (2) the relative weight of the Union's participation--whether it is intended to be an equal, minority or majority role. The Authority has found proposals concerning the establishment of local health and safety committees to be within the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council of Prison Locals and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, 11 FLRA 286 (1983) (Provision 2). Of course, proposals including those concerning joint labor-management committees which interject the union into the agency decision-making process through which management exercises its reserved rights under the Statute, are outside the duty to bargain. Such proposals, in effect, place the union "inside" management's decision-making process, giving the union information about and access to the discussions and deliberations of management officials concerning protected management decisions and actions. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1421 and Veterans Administration Medical Center, East Orange, New Jersey, 9 FLRA 998 (1982) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1001 and Department of the Air Force, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, 15 FLRA 804 (1984) (Provisions 2 and 3). Union Proposal 3 does not in any event set forth sufficient specific information to enable us to reach a reasoned decision. Thus it does not meet the conditions for review set forth in section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and is dismissed. VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and raises issues concerning the negotiability of nine provisions of an agreement which were disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.*/

II. Procedural Issues

Article 7, Section 2G:

> The Employer shall provide the employee with a prompt written final decision. When a > negative determination is sustained after reconsideration, an employee shall be informed in writing of the reasons for the decision and of his/her right to submit the decision, with the consent of the Union, to binding arbitration.

*/ The Union in its petition for review dated August 15, 1985 asserts that the Agency did not fulfill the 30 day requirement for disapproval under section 7114(c)(3) of the Statute because the Agency left the memorandum of disapproval with the Union's receptionist at its headquarters at a time when most Union officials were out of town. The Agency in an affidavit submitted by one of its employees, the contents of which the Union did not dispute, states that the memorandum of disapproval was served on the Union at its headquarters within the 30 day time period. Consequently, the Union has not established that the Agency did not meet the requirements set forth in section 7114(c)(3) of the Statute.

The provision quoted above submitted in the Union's petition for review is not contended by the Agency to be outside the duty to bargain under the Statute. Rather, it appears from the record that the Agency's basis for holding a provision originally executed by the local parties nonnegotiable was an additional phrase which is not contained in the above provision. The Union, therefore, has not appealed the Agency head's disapproval of the original provision. Since Provision 1 as submitted in the petition for review has never been alleged by the Agency to be nonnegotiable, the Authority concludes that the petition for review as to the issue is moot and will not be considered further. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and U.S. Office of Personnel Management, 8 FLRA 420 (1982) (Proposal 2) and case cited therein.

III. Provisions 2, 3, 4, and 5

Article 8, Section 5(A):

> Immediate supervisors, at least once a year, must provide each employee with an appraisal of their performance on ATF F 2430.7, Performance Appraisal for Bargaining Unit Employees, and on ATF F 2430.8, Performance Appraisal for Bargaining Unit Employees--Continuation Sheet. In addition, supervisors, during the course of the year, must advise employees as to their performance and must document such counselling sessions. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute.]

Article 8, Section 6:

> If the immediate supervisor is an acting supervisor or a supervisor who has not been supervising the employee for at least ninety (90) days, the appraisal will be made by the next higher level supervisor. Employees in new positions will be evaluated ninety (90) days after entering the new positions, regardless of the effective date of their performance appraisal. [Only the underlined portions of the provision are in dispute.]

Article 8, Section 7:

The following provisions will apply to employees on detail:

1. When an employee has been on detail for less than three (3) months at the time a performance appraisal due date occurs, the employee's regular supervisor will prepare the official performance appraisal.

2. When the employee has been on detail for more than three (3) months, the supervisor controlling the detailed employee's activities will prepare a written performance appraisal at the time of the performance appraisal due date and state whether the employee's work performance is or is not fully acceptable. The written statement will be forwarded to the regular supervisor, who will endorse or supplement the statement and issue the rating.

3. When the employee has been on detail for the entire appraisal period, the written performance appraisal of the supervisor controlling the activities of the detailed employee establishes the performance appraisal. This appraisal is used by the regular supervisor to certify that the employee has been rated for the specific appraisal period.

4. Where it is known that the detail is for the entire appraisal period, the supervisor of the position to which an employee is detailed will verify whether standards of performance and critical elements have been established for the position to which detailed. If standards and critical elements exist for either the position to which detailed or for identical positions within the Bureau, those will be applied in evaluating the detailee's performance. The supervisor > will initially explain the standards of performance and critical elements of the position to the detailee. In situations involving details to positions for which no standards of performance or critical elements exists, the supervisor evaluating the employee will follow the procedures in this article. [Only the underlined portions of the provision are in dispute.]

Article 8, Section 8(C):

> Prior to issuing a notice of proposed action based on unacceptable performance, the Employer, generally through the immediate supervisor, will meet with the employee, fully discuss the performance problems, and provide him/her the following in writing:
> 1. identification of the critical elements and performance standards for which the performance is unacceptable;
> 2. advice as to what the employee must do to bring the performance above the unacceptable level;
> 3. notification that the employee will be afforded a reasonable period of time (specified in calendar days) in which to bring performance above the unacceptable level,
> 4. identification of training and/or developmental activities which would assist the employer in attaining performance above the unacceptable performance level, and a description of what the Employer will do to assist the employee to improve the unacceptable performance during the opportunity period. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that by specifying which supervisor will complete an annual appraisal, Provisions 2, 3, 4, and 5 impermissibly interfere with its management right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Union maintains that the above provisions are negotiable because: Provision 2 provides each employee with an appraisal at least once a year; the intent of Provision 3 is clear on its face; Provision 4 insures the parties that the performance of employees on details will be evaluated by people who are in a position to observe the performance; and Provision 5 requires the Agency to meet with an employee who is having performance problems and provide a written document containing the items listed in subsections 1-4.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The disputed portions of Provisions 2, 3, 4, and 5 seek to designate a particular individual within the Agency who would evaluate an employee's work performance. The Authority has consistently held that such proposals are inconsistent with the agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 943, and Department of the Air Force, Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi, 16 FLRA 313,316 (1984) citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1858 and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Missile Command, Redstone Arsenal, Alabama, 10 FLRA 440 (1982) and Congressional Research Employees Association and the Library of Congress, 3 FLRA 737 (1980). Therefore, for the reasons more fully set forth in Keesler Air Force Base and the cases cited therein, Provisions 2, 3, 4 and 5 are not within the duty to bargain under the Statute because they violate the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B).

IV. Provision 6

Article 8, Section 9:

> In appraising employees on ATF Form 2430.7, supervisors must:
> A. Describe actual performance for each critical element in terms of a comparison between actual performance and the performance standards.
> B. Assign rating for each element of Outstanding, Commendable, Fully Acceptable, Partially Acceptable, and Unacceptable. In assigning these ratings, supervisors should take into account the following:

1. A rating of Outstanding (O) means that the actual performance meets the level of outstanding performance specified for that job.

2. A rating of Commendable (C) means that the actual performance exceeds the fully acceptable standard of performance in the job element but the performance does not meet the standard established for outstanding performance.

3. A rating of Fully Acceptable (FA) means that the actual performance of the employee in all respects meets the level of performance required under the fully acceptable standard for that element.

4. A rating of Partially Acceptable (PA) means that employee's actual performance does meet the requirements of the fully acceptable standard but, similarly, does not constitute unacceptable as described in the unacceptable performance standard.

5. A rating of Unacceptable (U) means that the employee's actual performance is at or below the performance described in the unacceptable performance standard.

C. Assign a rating for overall performance of critical elements based on the following criteria:

1. Outstanding (O). Indicates performance substantially exceeds fully acceptable performance in all of the critical elements.

2. Commendable (C). Indicates performance that exceeds fully acceptable, but which is below the outstanding level, in all of the critical elements.

3. Fully Acceptable (FA). Indicates performance which is fully successfully and meets the acceptable level of competence in all critical elements.

4. Partially Acceptable (PA). Indicates performance in one critical element > falls below the fully acceptable level but does not constitute unacceptable performance. An overall rating of partially acceptable shall be a basis for denial of a within-grade increase.

> 5. Unacceptable (U). Indicates performance which fails to meet the established performance standard in one or more critical elements. Unacceptable performance shall be the basis for denial of a within-grade increase, and may be a basis for reassignment, demotion, or removal from the Bureau.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that the provision is nonnegotiable because it interferes with its rights to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. The Union contends that the provision is negotiable because it only requires the Agency to provide certain information on the employees' appraisal forms.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Provision 6 would establish the number of rating levels for the appraisal of an employee's performance in each critical element and also for rating overall performance. It has essentially the same effect as the Union Proposal in American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 26 and U.S. Department of Justice, 13 FLRA 578 (1984), which also established the number of rating levels for the appraisal of an employee's performance in each critical element and for rating overall performance and therefore violated the agency's right to direct employees and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. For the reasons more fully set forth in U.S. Department of Justice, therefore, Provision 6 is outside the duty to bargain because it violates section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

V. Provision 7

Article 9, Section 4A:

> The employer will appoint a ranking panel consisting of three voting members, all of whom must be at or above the grade of the position to be filled. The selecting official > may not serve as a member of the panel. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the provision interferes with its right to assign work by placing a restriction on the selecting official. The Union contends that based on the explicit language of the provision, it is within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The provision would preclude the Agency from using certain supervisory personnel, i.e., the selecting official, on a ranking panel which conducts an evaluation of employees. As was stated previously with reference to Provisions 2-5, the Authority has held in Kessler Air Force Base, 16 FLRA 313 (1984), that proposals which designate a particular individual within the agency who would evaluate an employee's work performance are inconsistent with the agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Similarly, the Authority has consistently held that provisions which restrict management in the designation of particular employees to perform particular duties are likewise violative of management's right to assign work. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 19 FLRA No. 9 (1985) (Union Proposal 5). The Authority finds that Provision 7 constitutes an improper infringement on the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) because the provision would restrict the Agency in designating certain supervisory personnel to evaluate employees. Consequently, Provision 7 is not within the duty to bargain.

VI. Provision 8

Article 10, Section 1:

> The Employer agrees that an employee who is assigned to a position of higher grade for more that thirty (30) consecutive calendar days will be temporarily promoted and receive the rate of pay for the position to which he/she is temporarily promoted. The Employer further agrees to refrain from rotating assignments of employees solely to avoid compensation at the higher level. [Only the underlined portion of the provision is in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that this provision violates its right to assign employees by preventing management from freely assigning employees to details. The Union maintains that the provision would only prohibit rotating assignments solely to avoid compensation at the higher grade level and therefore is within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

This provision would preclude the Agency from rotating assignments of employees solely to avoid compensation at the higher level. It is to the same effect as Provision 2 in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 14 FLRA 243 (1984) which also precluded the agency from rotating assignments of employees solely to avoid compensation at the higher level. The Authority determined that the provision violated the agency's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute because, by barring management from rotating assignments for the purpose of avoiding the temporary promotion of employees, it would substantively restrict management's exercise of its right to assign those employees. Therefore, for the reasons more fully set forth in Internal Revenue Service, Provision 8 is also outside the duty to bargain under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute.

VII. Provision 9

Article 9, Section 2:

> The detailing of personnel to lower-graded positions is considered to be inconsistent with sound planning and management and will be kept to an absolute minimum. However, the Employer may use details under circumstances such as the following:
> 1. when a temporary shortage of personnel exists;
> 2. where an exceptional volume of work suddenly develops and seriously interrupts the work schedule;

3. to fill temporarily the positions of employees on extended leave with or without pay; or

4. other conditions of a special and temporary nature.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that the provision, by placing limitations on the Agency's decision to detail employees, is inconsistent with its right to assign employees. The Union contends that the provision is within the duty to bargain because it contains examples of occasions where detailing an employee to a lower graded position would not evidence poor planning or management.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The provision would require that the Agency restrict the detailing of employees to lower-graded positions. The Authority has consistently held that provisions which restrict management's assigning employees to details are violative of section 7106(a)(2)(A). See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 916 and Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma, 7 FLRA 292 (1981) (Provisions 1 and 2). We find that this provision violates section 7106(a)(2)(A) noting that the provision would allow management to detail under certain limited circumstances but would require management to keep such action "to an absolute minimum." The Authority has found proposals which contain similar qualifying language to be outside the duty to bargain because such language substantively interferes with management rights. See American Federation of Federal Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council and Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 16 FLRA 251 (1984) (Union Proposal 1) (in which the Authority determined that the inclusion of the qualifying phrase "[t]o the maximum extent possible" in an assignment of work proposal would subject management's right to assign work to arbitral review on the basis of whether the language of that qualifying phrase had been adhered to and therefore violated the agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A)) and American Federation of Federal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA 446 (1983) (Union Proposal 3) (in which the Authority determined that the inclusion of the qualifying phrase "[t]o the extent practicable" in a proposal concerning assignment of work and direction of employees would subject those management rights to arbitral review on the basis of whether the language of that qualifying phrase had been adhered to and therefore violated the agency's rights to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute). The provision here would subject management's decisions to detail employees to arbitral review with an arbitrator substituting his or her judgment for that of management as to the necessity of the detail, thus, substantively interfering with management's right to assign employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A). Therefore, Provision 9 is outside the duty to bargain.

VIII. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Judge found that the Respondent had engaged in certain of the unfair labor practices as alleged in the complaints in Case Nos. 5-CA-30118 and 5-CA-30091, and recommended that the Authority issue an appropriate order directing the Respondent to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices. The Judge further found that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-20338, or in certain of the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-30091, and he recommended dismissal of the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-20338 and of those portions of the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-30091. The Respondent filed exceptions to the violations found by the Judge, and the General Counsel and the Charging Party (the Union) filed exceptions to those portions of the Judge's decision in which he recommended a dismissal. The Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions and the Union filed an opposition to the Respondent's exceptions.

This proceeding involves three separate complaints which were consolidated solely for the purpose of the hearing. The Authority will consider separately the issues raised by the three complaints, in the order considered by the Judge.

Case No. 5-CA-30118

I. The Issue

The complaint in this case alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by unilaterally deciding to discontinue the payment of travel and per diem expenses to employees serving as Union negotiators while they were engaged in the negotiation of a new agreement between the parties.

II. Background

The Respondent and the Union were parties to a negotiated agreement whose term ended on June 21, 1981. The agreement also provided, however, that it would remain in full force and effect for up to one additional year from the time the parties signed off on ground rules covering the negotiation of a new agreement. On October 6, 1981, the parties executed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) setting forth the ground rules for their negotiation of a new agreement. The MOU provided that the MOU and the parties' existing agreement would continue for one full year, until October 6, 1982. In part, the MOU provided for the payment by the Respondent of the travel and per diem expenses of employees serving as the Union's negotiators. The Respondent contends that it had agreed to provide travel and per diem expenses for Union negotiators only because it was required to do so by the Authority's decision in Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979). On August 26, 1982, the Respondent advised the Union that it would withhold any further payment of travel and per diem expenses for Union negotiators because decisions in the United States Court of Appeals for the Second (involving a National Guard unit) and Eighth Circuits had put in question the validity of the Authority's position in Interpretation and Guidance, noted above.

III. The Judge's Decision

When the Judge wrote his decision, he had the benefit of the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983).

The Judge found that the Supreme Court had held in BATF that section 7131(a) of the Statute does not require the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators, and therefore concluded that the Respondent's discontinuance of such payments did not violate section 7116(a)(8) of the Statute. However, he also noted that the Supreme Court had additionally stated that Federal agencies were not precluded from making such payments, and had recognized that parties in the Federal sector may negotiate for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for union negotiators, citing 464 U.S. at 107, n. 17. He concluded that, as travel and per diem payments were bargained for and included in the parties' MOU, the Respondent could not unilaterally terminate such payments during the course of the agreement. He therefore concluded that the unilateral decision by the Respondent in this case to terminate the payment of travel and per diem expenses to Union negotiators pursuant to the MOU constituted a complete and unlawful rejection of the MOU in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The positions of the parties, as set forth in their exceptions and oppositions, essentially constitute disagreements as to whether the Judge correctly stated the findings of the Supreme Court's decision in BATF. The Respondent argues that the Supreme Court's statement with regard to bargaining on travel and per diem expenses was not a finding of the court because it was not an issue before the court. Further, it argues that, as the Respondent had initially agreed to pay such expenses only on the basis of the Authority's decision in Interpretation and Guidance, supra, which is no longer valid as a matter of law, the Respondent cannot be bound by the agreement it made in this regard. The Union, in its opposition to the Respondent's exceptions, argues that the Judge's interpretation and explanation of the Supreme Court's holding in BATF is essentially sound, and that his resulting conclusion is correct.

V. Analysis

Following the Supreme Court's BATF decision, the Authority recently decided in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 22, 1986), that a union proposal which would require an agency to pay the travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees while using official time pursuant to the parties' agreement concerned a condition of employment which is within the agency's administrative discretion, is not inconsistent with Federal law or Government-wide rules or regulations (including the Federal Travel Regulations), and therefore is within the duty to bargain. Since the parties' MOU in this case, insofar as it provided for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for Union representatives engaged in the negotiation of a renewed contract between the parties, similarly concerned a negotiable condition of employment, the Authority adopts the Judge's conclusion that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it unilaterally terminated and repudiated that agreement. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 88 (1985) and Great Lakes Program Service Center, Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 499 (1982).

VI. Conclusion

The Authority concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally repudiating its contract with the Union insofar as it provided for the payment of travel and per diem expenses for Union negotiators engaged in the negotiation of the parties' new collective bargaining agreement.

I. The Issue

The complaint in this case alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by declaring nonnegotiable and refusing to negotiate about a Union proposal to provide an alternative to the standard military uniform generally required to be worn by National Guard civilian technicians.

II. Background

The alleged violation in this case took place during the course of the parties' negotiations for a renewed contract (see "Background," under Case No. 5-CA-30118, above). The parties' expiring agreement provided that the Respondent's civilian technician employees might wear agreed upon standardized civilian attire if they received permission to do so by following a procedure set forth in the agreement. During the course of their negotiations for a new agreement (and during the year that the parties' contract was being kept in force and effect by the parties' MOU), the Union proposed that the clause in their expiring agreement which provided for the wearing of civilian attire be retained. The Respondent declared the subject nonnegotiable, and refused to consider the proposal on the basis that it involved a nonmandatory or "permissive" subject of bargaining. The Respondent recognized that Authority precedent at the time was to the contrary, but argued that, in view of pending cases before various courts of appeals calling that precedent into question, it was justified in such position.

III. The Judge's Decision

The Judge noted precedent which clearly held that proposals substantially identical to the one here are mandatorily negotiable. He found, however, that the Respondent had presented arguments in its post-hearing brief to support its position (ones not addressed in the Authority's decisions) that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians is a matter of "internal security" under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute, and a matter pertaining to the "technology, methods and means of performing work" under section 7106(b)(1) so as to permit the Respondent to refuse to bargain on the matter. He agreed with the Respondent's contentions that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians involves internal security matters and the technology, methods, and means of performing work. He therefore concluded that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when, upon the expiration of the parties' then current agreement, it declared the Union's proposal concerning the wearing of the military uniform nonnegotiable and refused to bargain about it. Therefore, he recommended dismissal of the complaint.

IV. Positions of the Parties

With respect to the Judge's findings and conclusions regarding the issue of internal security, the Respondent argues generally in support of the Judge. The General Counsel and the Union question whether the Judge was correct to consider the Respondent's arguments concerning internal security at all, as they contend that those arguments were raised for the first time in the Respondent's brief to the Judge. However, assuming that the matter was properly before the Judge, the General Counsel and the Union take issue with the Judge's finding that the facts presented by the Respondent support its position on the internal security matter, and they disagree with the legal conclusion the Judge reaches even if the facts were accurate. With respect to the Judge's findings and conclusions regarding the "technology, methods and means of performing work," the General Counsel argued that there was no evidence that the attire of these employees is not directly or integrally related to the accomplishment of their duties.

V. Analysis

After the Judge issued his Decision in this case, the Authority, on remand from the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, issued the first in a series of new determinations with regard to the negotiability of proposals concerning the wearing of civilian attire by National Guard civilian technicians. In Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York, 15 FLRA 288 (1984), affirmed sub nom. New York Council, Association of Civilian Technicians v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 757 F.2d 502 (2nd Cir. 1985), cert. denied, 106 S. Ct. 137 (Oct. 7, 1985), the Authority held that the requirement that civilian technicians wear military uniforms rather than civilian attire involves the methods and means of performing work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and therefore is a permissive rather than a mandatory subject of bargaining; that is, a subject which may be bargained, but only at the election of the agency. Further, the Authority has held that, while an agency acts at its peril when it refuses to negotiate on proposals similar to proposals previously found negotiable by the Authority, an unfair labor practice will not be found where subsequently established law supports the agency's position. See, for example, Department of Defense, Department of the Army, Headquarters XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg, Fort Bragg, North Carolina, 20 FLRA No. 101 (1985) and Office of Personnel Management, 17 FLRA 302 (1985).

VI. Conclusion

The Authority adopts the Judge's conclusion, consistent with its decisions and rationale in the above cited cases, that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged, by exercising its option under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and refusing to negotiate concerning the Union's proposal which would have extended the terms of the parties' expiring agreement that had permitted some civilian technicians the option of wearing other than the required military uniform. We shall therefore dismiss the complaint in this case. We also find, in view of this conclusion, that it is unnecessary to pass upon whether the Judge properly considered the Respondent's position with regard to internal security, or whether he was correct in his resolution of the factual disputes of the parties in this regard.

I. The Issue

The complaint in this case alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally terminating certain terms and conditions of employment incorporated in the parties' negotiated agreement when the then current agreement between the parties expired on October 6, 1982. Specifically, the complaint alleged that the Respondent violated the Statute by declaring that it (1) would no longer abide by the contractual procedure allowing civilian technicians the option of wearing standardized civilian attire, and (2) that in the future the processing of grievances and all disciplinary and adverse actions would have to be consistent with applicable National Guard regulations.

II. Background

As noted in the discussion of the prior two cases, the parties' then current contract was scheduled to expire on October 6, 1982. On August 26, 1982, the Respondent notified the Union that, in the event negotiations toward a new contract were not consummated by October 6, 1982, the Respondent would consider the then current agreement as having expired, and that employees would have to comply with all appropriate National Guard regulations. On September 30, 1982, the Respondent advised the Union that the specific areas in which National Guard regulations would supersede the parties' agreement included the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians, disciplinary and adverse actions, and grievance procedures. On October 7, 1982, the contract was terminated by the Respondent. The parties stipulated that 46 grievances concerning the wearing of civilian attire, all filed prior to October 6, 1982, were processed under the procedures of the expired agreement.

The parties stipulated that the expired agreement had specifically excluded from the grievance procedure those matters which could be heard under section 709(e) of the National Guard Technicians Act, and that the practice of the parties during the term of the agreement had been to exclude such matters. Section 709(e)(4) of the Technicians Act defines the coverage of 709(e) matters as including "a reduction in force, removal, or an adverse action involving discharge from technician employment, suspension, furlough without pay, or reduction in rank or compensation."

III. The Judge's Decision

The Judge noted Authority precedent holding that the terms and conditions of a collective bargaining agreement continue in full force and effect after the expiration of the agreement unless the parties mutually agree to do otherwise. He also noted Authority precedent holding that an agency may unilaterally change, upon the termination of an agreement, a term and condition of employment embodied in the expired agreement which involves a permissive subject of bargaining. He concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it refused to continue to adhere to the provisions of the parties' expired agreement dealing with the grievance procedure and the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions. However, he concluded that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it unilaterally required a return to adherence to National Guard regulations concerning the wearing of military uniforms, as he had concluded in Case No. 5-CA-20338 (above) that this involved a permissive subject of bargaining and therefore the Respondent was within its rights to make such a change at the termination of the parties' agreement.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent contends that the only condition of employment it changed on October 6, 1982, was the uniform wearing requirement. It asserts that the parties' then current agreement excluded by its own terms those matters which were subject to the disciplinary and adverse action procedures set forth in section 709(e) of the Technicians Act, and that grievances concerning subject matters which might properly have been filed pursuant to the grievance procedure contained in the parties' negotiated grievance procedure could still be resolved through that mechanism after the termination of the agreement. In support of that contention, the Respondent points out that the 46 grievances concerning uniform wearing, mentioned above, were processed subsequent to the cancellation of the agreement pursuant to the terms of the agreement, and that there is no evidence that any grievances properly subject to the negotiated procedure were or would have been refused proper processing.

In opposition to the Respondent, the Union contends that Congress intended, by virtue of section 7121 of the Statute, to offer employees a choice of alternative dispute mechanisms--either through a broad scope negotiated grievance procedure or through the procedure delineated in section 709(e) of the Technicians Act. It further contends that the Judge, relying on earlier Authority decisions, properly held that disciplinary actions should be subject to the negotiated grievance procedure. In essence, the Union argues that the parties' contractual provision excluding those matters subject to resolution pursuant to section 709(e) was meant only to exclude section 709(e) matters which were processed exclusively under that section, but was not meant to apply to such matters if initiated and pursued under the parties' contractual grievance procedure.

V. Analysis

As the Judge correctly found, the Authority has held that terms and conditions of employment which concern mandatory subjects of bargaining which are embodied in a collective bargaining agreement continue following the expiration of the agreement. The Authority has also held, since the issuance of the Judge's Decision, that once an agreement has expired, either party may elect to no longer be bound by provisions therein concerning "permissive" subjects of bargaining, but instead may reassert the right not to negotiate with regard to such permissive subjects of bargaining. See, for example, United States Department of Defense, Department of the Army, McAlester Army Ammunition Plant, 20 FLRA No. 73 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2815, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, No. 86-1004 (D.C. Cir. Jan. 3, 1986), and the cases cited therein.

As noted in the discussion of Case No. 5-CA-20338 above, subsequent to the issuance of the Judge's Decision, the Authority has held that the requirement that civilian technicians wear military uniforms rather than civilian attire is a permissive rather than a mandatory subject of bargaining. Accordingly, the Respondent was within its rights in notifying the Union that civilian technicians would be required to wear the military uniform upon the expiration of the parties' agreement. This conclusion is also consistent with the Authority's decision in an arbitration appeal involving the same parties which arose from the same facts and circumstances that led to the unfair labor practice allegations in this case. In The Adjutant General, State of Ohio and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals No. 127, Local 3470, 17 FLRA 957 (1985), the Authority upheld the arbitrator's finding that the technicians who had exercised their option to choose to wear standardized civilian attire prior to the expiration of the parties' agreement were entitled to continue to do so for the one year period provided for in the parties' agreement, but that the technicians who had submitted declarations electing to wear civilian attire after the agreement expired did not have such a right. In so concluding, the Authority noted that the requirement that civilian technicians wear military uniforms is a permissive rather than a mandatory subject of bargaining, and therefore could be terminated by either party after the agreement expired.

Also subsequent to the issuance of the Judge's decision, the Authority, in Department of Defense, Illinois Air National Guard, 182nd Tactical Air Support Group, Peoria, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 11 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. Illinois Air Chapter 34, Association of Civilian Technicians, Inc. v. FLRA, No. 85-1579 (D.C. Cir. Sept. 12, 1985), held that section 709(e) of the Technicians Act was the exclusive procedure for dealing with a matter involving an adverse personnel action against a National Guard technician. The Authority cited and relied upon the opinions of several Courts of Appeals to the effect that the Technicians Act was meant to be the exclusive procedure for all matters enumerated in and susceptible to resolution through the procedures outlined in section 709(e).

The General Counsel has not shown that the Respondent actually terminated any of the provisions of the parties' expired agreement pertaining to their grievance procedure or the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions under it. It appears rather that management was only reaffirming its own past view as to what matters with regard to the grievance/arbitration provisions of the parties' agreement had been excluded because of the exclusion of section 709(e) matters. In any event, as noted above, the Authority has held that such matters may not be included within the scope of a negotiated grievance procedure, and therefore the Respondent would not have committed an unfair labor practice by insisting that they be excluded even if they had been included in the past.

VI. Conclusion

The Authority concludes, consistent with its decision in McAlester Army Ammunition Plant, that the Respondent was within its rights under the Statute when it asserted, at the termination of the parties' then current agreement, that it would no longer be bound by the provision in the agreement that its civilian technician employees had the option of wearing standardized civilian attire and that such employees would henceforth be required to abide by National Guard regulations requiring the wearing of the military uniform. Therefore, the Respondent's actions in this regard did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5), as alleged, and we shall dismiss that allegation of the complaint.

The Authority also concludes, consistent with its decisions in Illinois Air National Guard and State of Ohio, above, that the Respondent was within its rights when it asserted that upon termination of the parties' agreement, the processing of all grievances and all disciplinary and adverse actions would have to be consistent with applicable National Guard regulations. Therefore, the Respondent's actions in this regard did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged, and we shall dismiss these allegations.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Terminating and repudiating the terms of an October 6, 1982 Memorandum of Understanding under which it had agreed to pay travel and per diem expenses, consistent with applicable Federal Travel Regulations, to the authorized representatives of the American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO, who were engaged in negotiating a new collective bargaining agreement between the parties covering the unit employees.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Pay travel and per diem expenses consistent with applicable Federal Travel Regulations to the authorized representatives of the American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO, who were engaged in negotiating a collective bargaining agreement pursuant to the parties' October 6, 1982 Memorandum of Understanding and make whole any representatives from whom such payments have been withheld.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Adjutant General, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-30118, insofar as it alleges any other violations of the Statute, be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the complaints in Case No. 5-CA-20338 and Case No. 5-CA-30091 be, and they hereby are, dismissed in their entirety.

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 30, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. @ 7101 et seq., 92 Stat. 1191 (hereinafter referred to as the Statute), and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA), 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, § 2410 et seq.

On September 27, 1982 American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guards Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO (hereinafter called the Union or AFGE Council 127) filed a charge in Case No. 5-CA-20338, alleging that Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio (hereinafter called Respondent or Ohio National Guard) had violated Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute by declaring a Union proposal concerning the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians non-negotiable, after such proposal had been previously found negotiable by the FLRA.

On December 9, 1982 the Union filed a charge in Case No. 5-CA-30091, alleging that Ohio Air National Guard had violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by unilaterally changing terms and conditions of employment of civilian employees by requiring them to wear the military uniform and to adhere to National Guard Regulations concerning the processing of grievances and disciplinary and adverse actions.

On December 30, 1982 the Union filed a charge in Case No. 5-CA-30118, alleging that Respondent had violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (7) of the Statute by discontinuing to pay travel and per diem expenses of Union negotiators while they were engaged in negotiating a collective bargaining agreement with Respondent, thereby repudiating a Memorandum of Understanding in which Respondent had agreed to pay such expenses. On January 19, 1983 the Union filed an amended charge in Case No. 5-CA-30118, in which it deleted the Section 7116(a)(7) allegation and alleged the stated facts therein to be violations of Sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.

On November 24, 1982, January 11, 1983 and February 15, 1983, Complaints and Notices of Hearing issued in Case Nos. 5-CA-20338, 5-CA-30091, and 5-CA-30118, respectively, alleging the violations alleged in said charges. Respondent filed Answers to the Complaints in Case Nos. 5-CA-20338, 5-CA-30091, and 5-CA-30118, denying that it had violated the Statute.[1] By Order dated February 16, 1983, these cases were consolidated for purpose of hearing.

A hearing in this matter was conducted before the undersigned in Columbus, Ohio. The Ohio Air National Guard, AFGE Council 127 and the General Counsel of the FLRA were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, to introduce evidence and to argue orally. The parties entered into extensive stipulations of fact. Post hearing briefs were filed and have been fully considered.

[1] On January 11, 1983 and February 4, 1983, Counsel for the General Counsel filed Motions for Summary Judgments in Case Nos. 5-CA-20338, 5-CA-30091, respectively. On February 11, 1983 Respondent filed a Response to the Motion for Summary Judgment in Case Nos. 5-CA-30091. By Orders dated February 2, 1983 and March 1, 1983 Counsel for the General Counsel's Motions for Summary Judgment were denied in Case Nos. 5-CA-20338 and 5-CA-30091, respectively.

Based upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the follwing:

Findings of Fact

In July 1971, the Union became the exclusive collective bargaining representative for a unit composed of all general schedule and wage board employees, including civilian technicians, of the Ohio Air National Guard, with certain exclusions, not here relevant. The Respondent and the Union became parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering civilian technicians, which expired in 1975 and then to a subsequent one which, by its terms, expired on June 21, 1981. This latter agreement provided that it would remain in full force and effect, during renegotiation of the agreement, for up to one additional year after the ground rules were signed.

On October 6, 1981 Respondent and AFGE Council 127 signed a Memorandum of Understanding, setting forth the ground rules for the negotiation of the new collective bargaining agreement and the parties agreed that the existing collective bargaining agreement would expire on October 6, 1982. The ground rules provided that official time and travel and per diem expenses would be authorized by Respondent for the members of the Union's negotiating committee during such times as they were engaged in negotiating the new collective bargaining agreement.

On March 17, 1981 the National Guard Bureau issued regulation TPR 302.7-6, Wearing of the Military Uniform, which provides that civilian technicians are to wear the military uniform while performing civilian technician duties, unless otherwise specifically excluded by a negotiated labor agreement. During the course of contract negotiations, the Union submitted the following proposal relative to the wearing of standardized civilian attire:

> ARTICLE XXVI. UNIFORMS
> Section 1. a. Ohio Air National Guard Technicians who are members of the Bargaining Unit, while performing their day-to-day duties shall have the option of wearing either: (1) The Miltiary Uniform; or (2) an agreed upon standardized civilian attire, without the display of military rank.

b. For those individuals electing to wear the standardized civilian attire, it is the individual's responsibility to procure, maintain, and pay for any and all expenses incurred for his attire.

c. Either attire must be clean, neat and good [sic] condition on a daily basis.

This proposal is identical to the provision contained in the expired collective bargaining agreement with respect to the wearing of standardized civilian attire. Prior to this most recently expired collective bargaining agreement the civilian technicians had always worn the miltiary uniform while performing day-to-day technician duties.

By letter dated August 26, 1982 the Adjutant General of Ohio advised AFGE Council 127, that if the parties had not concluded a contract by October 6, 1982 there would be no contract in effect on October 7, 1982 and that, accordingly, "all appropriate National Guard regulations shall be complied with during the remaining period of negotiation. This will include the return of all technicians to the wear of the military uniform." By Memorandum dated September 16, 1982 Respondent declared the Union's proposal, Article XXVI, Uniforms, non-negotiable, asserting that the wearing of the uniform by civilian technicians is not a proper subject for negotiation. Since September 16, 1982 Respondent has refused to negotiate concerning the Union's uniform proposal.

As of October 7, 1982 the Adjutant General of Ohio, Major General James C. Clem, ordered that all technicians comply with the uniform regulations, TPR 302.7-6 and that the processing of grievances and all disciplinary and adverse actions be in accordance with Air Force and National Guard regulations. Since October 7, 1982 Respondent has not permitted the filing of grievances under the contract grievance procedure.[2] On September 30, 1982 Respondent notified its supervisors and the Union that, effective October 7, 1982, the collective bargaining agreement would no longer be in effect and that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicans and the administering of all grievances and disciplinary and adverse actions would be in accordance with applicable Air Force and National Guard regulations.

[2] The parties stipulates:

Since October 6, 1982, the Ohio Air National Guard has accepted 46 grievances on the option of wear of standardized civilian attire which have resulted in two (2) arbitrations now in the process of resolution. The 46 grievances referred to above, all of which were filed on or before October 6, 1982, allege that Respondent violated Article XXIV, Section 2 of the collective bargaining agreement by refusing to continue to honor the written selections of individual employees to wear the military uniform or civilian attire which selections had not been in effect for the required one year period as of October 6, 1982.

Pursuant to the National Guard regulations, implemented on October 7, 1982 employees are required to wear the military uniform at all times while performing their civilian duties.

The Air Force and National Guard regulations so implemented do not provide for arbitration or advisory arbitration, as did the expired collective bargaining agreement. Rather the regulations provide that the final authority in the processing of a grievance is the Adjutant General.

By letter dated August 26, 1982, Respondent, by Major General James C. Clem, notified the Union that, in view of the denial of enforcement of FLRA Orders in two United States Courts of Appeals concerning the payment of travel and per diem expenses to Union negotiators. Respondent proposed to hold in abeyance any further payment of such expenses pending a decision by the United States Supreme Court on the issue. This proposal was not accepted by the Union.

Since August 26, 1982, Respondent has accepted and recorded, but has not processed and paid the travel vouchers submitted by Union negotiators for travel and per diem expenses arising out of their having negotiated with Respondent on the new collective bargaining agreement.

The primary mission of the Ohio Air National Guard is to provide trained, qualified, combat-ready forces in support of the active duty Air Force.

The military uniform involves safety shoes, wet weather gear, and non-static jackets and material and is therefore related to the safety of civilian technicians.

There is a 35 man base defense team that would be called in immediately for the security of the base. A person in uniform may reasonably be deemed more effective than a person in civilian attire, in enforcing security orders vis-a-vis a civilian non-employee.

Some aircraft were blown up at a facility controlled by the Puerto Rican Air National Guard.

Conclusions of Law and Discussion

The parties hereto stipulated that the issues raised herein are as follows:

Case No. 5-CA-20338

> Whether Respondent, in view of the pendency of requests for review of Authority Orders concerning the issue of the negotiability of the wearing of the military uniform before several United States Courts of Appeals, violated 5 USC 7116(a)(1) and (5), when it declared the Union's bargaining proposal, described above in paragraph 12, as non-negotiable and thereafter refused to bargain concerning said proposal by alleging it to be a permissive Management right and thus subject to withdrawal from the bargaining process.

Case No. 5-CA-30091

> Whether Respondent, upon the termination of the collective bargaining agreement on October 6, 1982, violated 5 USC 7116(a)(1) and (5) by declaring the uniform to be a permissive subject of bargaining and not an appropriate subject of bargaining and by thereafter refusing to adhere to the provisions of said agreement concerning the wearing of the military uniform, the grievance procedure and the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions.

Case No. 5-CA-30118

> Whether Respondent, by refusing to process and pay travel and per diem for the Union's duly designated negotiators for expenses arising out of their negotiations with Respondent toward a new collective bargaining agreement, thereby breached the Memorandum of Understanding described above in paragraph 10 and/or failed to comply with 5 USC 7121(a), in violation of 5 USC 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) even, though the exact issue is now pending before the United States Supreme Court.

A. Case No. 5-CA-30118

The FLRA has held that Section 7131(a) of the Statute requires an agency to pay employee representatives of an exclusive collective bargaining representative engaged in contract negotiations, the travel and per diem expenses of such representatives for the time engaged in negotiations. Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 265 (1979); Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Western Region, Department of the Treasury, San Francisco, California, 4 FLRA 288 (1980), enforced sub nom. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 672 F.2d 732 (9th Cir. 1982), enforcement denied and case reversed 52 USLW 4013, No. 82-799 (U.S. November 29, 1983) and Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, supra. But see, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, Albany, New York, 7 FLRA 458 (1981), reversed sub nom. Division of Military and Naval Affairs v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 683 F.2d 45 (2d Cir. 1982), U.S. Department of Agriculture, Science and Education Administration, Agricultural Research, North Central Region, Dakotas-Alaska Area, 6 FLRA 265 (1981), reversed sub nom. United States Department of Agriculture v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 1242 (8th Cir. 1982); and Florida National Guard, 5 FLRA 365 (1981) reversed sub nom. Florida National Guard and Department of Defense, v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 699 F.2d (11th Cir., 1983). The United States Supreme Court in the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, v. FLRA, supra, in reversing the FLRA held that the Section 7131(a) of the Statute does not require the payment of travel and per diem expenses to Union negotiators. Accordingly, I conclude Respondent did not, in this respect violate Section 7116(a)(8) of the Statute.

In the instant case, however, Respondent, in the ground rules, agreed to pay travel and per diem for the Union negotiators on official time. Such conduct by Respondent constituted a patent breach of a collective bargaining agreement and thus was in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Cf. Great Lakes Program Service Center, Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 499 (1982) and Internal Revenue Service, OALJ 81-37 (July 21, 1982). The subject case does not involve a dispute as to the meaning of the ground rules but rather a total rejection by Respondent of the ground rules term requiring payment of travel and per diem expenses. In this regard the Supreme Court specifically stated that Section 7131(a) of the Statute does not preclude an agency from paying the travel and per diem expenses and recognized that a Union and agency can negotiate and contract for such payments. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, supra, foonote 17. Such a case is the instant one.

B. Case No. 5-CA-30338

Respondent contends that the Adjutant General of Ohio is permitted to declare the wearing of a military uniform non-negotiable pursuant to Section 7106(a)(1)[3] of the Statute which provides that any management official may "determine the mission . . . internal security practices of the agency" and pursuant to 7106(b)(1) of the Statute which provides that nothing shall preclude any agency and any labor organization from negotiating . . . (1) at the election of the agency, . . . on the technology, methods and means of performing the work; . . ." Respondent contends that the Adjutant General of Ohio has determined that the use of a military uniform is necessary to carry out the mission of the agency and for internal security.

Respondent "urges that the military uniform, in a military facility, worn by personnel working on military equipment, when those personnel have a definite mission of defense of those facilities and equipment is well within the internal security practices to be determined by the Adjutant General."[4]

The Ohio Air National Guard's mission is to provide trained, qualified, combat-ready forces in support of the active duty Air Force, including the maintenance of aircraft, etc. It may be reasonably concluded that internal security would be enhanced, improved or better maintained if all civilian technicians were required to wear military uniforms while on duty. Such civilian employees would be easily identifiable, internal security forces can be more quickly mobilized and such civilian technicians, when in military uniform, would be more readily obeyed by civilians.

The General Counsel of the FLRA points out that, when various State National Guards have refused to comply with FSIP awards, the FLRA has ordered parties to adopt union proposals containing nearly identical to the language involved herein. See State of Nevada National Guard, 7 FLRA 245 (1981); Puerto Rico Air National Guard, 8 FLRA 480 (1982); Division of Military and Naval Affairs, State of New York, 8 FLRA 158 (1982), remanded sub nom. State of New York, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, (Albany, New York) and Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 696 F.2d 202 (CA. 202, 1982); Florida National Guard, 9 FLRA 347 (1982). Further once a determination of negotiability has been made by the FLRA concerning a proposal a subsequent declaration of non-negotiability by another party with respect to a similar proposal constitutes a refusal to bargain in good faith unfair labor practice, so long as no meaningful differences can be found between the two proposals. See Department of the Air Force, U.S. Air Force Academy, 6 FLRA 548 (1981); Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Regional Office, Buffalo, New York, 10 FLRA 167 (1982); Veterans Administration Medical Center, Northport, New York, 10 FLRA 675 (1982).

[3] Respondent's counsel specifically stated at the hearing that Respondent was arguing that the uniform issue was a permissive subject for bargaining under Section 7106(b)(1) not that it is forbidden to bargain about it under Section 7106(a) of the Statute. Tr. pp. 13-14. Respondent has apparently changed its position in its brief.

The FLRA, however, has never specifically addressed the question of whether the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians is a subject covered by Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute dealing with internal security or covered by Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute dealing with the technology and means of performing work. The General Counsel of the FLRA submits that it is implicit in the FLRA's findings of violation when National Guards have refused to adopt the work attire language ordered by FSIP, that work attire is a mandatory subject of bargaining. This argument is rejected. The decisions of the FLRA dealing with the FSIP, work attire awards did not discuss whether, in the circumstances and facts of those cases, the wearing of the uniforms was a matter within the purview of Section 7106(a) and (b) of the Statute and there is absolutely nothing in those decisions to indicate that the respondent National Guards made such a contention. Accordingly, these FLRA decisions are not dispositive of the questions presented herein.

It must be determined herein, therefore, whether the wearing of a military uniform by the civilians is a matter of "internal security" under Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute or "technology, methods and means of performing work" under Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute so as to permit Respondent to refuse to bargain about such matter.

Protecting its facilities and equipment, including planes, is clearly a responsibility of Respondent. It is noted that planes of the Puerto Rico National Guard have been destroyed. In such circumstances, a requirement that all civilian technicians must wear military uniforms can not be said to be an unreasonable security precaution. When wearing military uniforms, civilian technicians are easily identifiable, quickly mobilized for security purposes and more readily obeyed by non-employee civilians. Thus it is a reasonable internal security practice and Respondent is privileged under a Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute, to require the wearing of military uniforms by civilian technicians and to refuse to bargain about such determination. Cf. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 15, and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 2 FLRA 874 (1980).

Similarly, Respondent contends that the wearing of the military uniform involves the technology and method of performing the work. In this regard, Respondent states the use of safety shoes and non-static jackets and clothes are required for safety considerations and that military uniforms meet these requirements. A determination concerning appropriate safety equipment, assuming such determination is not totally unreasonable, comes within the purview of "the technology, methods, and means of performing work" as set forth in Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Accordingly, it is concluded that the wearing of the military uniform by civilian technicians is a safety determination by Respondent, pursuant to Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, about which at its own election, Respondent is not required to bargain.5/

It can be argued, with respect to both the internal security and "technology, methods and means of performing work" considerations, that how these considerations can be met or best accomplished should be negotiable. The entire thrust of Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute is that once a matter is determined6/ to be an internal security practice it is not negotiable, even though the Union might reasonably contend that the same end can be better achieved by utilizing other means. Similarly the thrust of Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute is that, once a matter is determined to be the "technology, methods, and means of performing work" Respondent, at its own election, need not negotiate concerning such matter, even though the Union might reasonably contend that the same objective could be better achieved by utilizing other means.7/

In light of all the foregoing, it is concluded that Respondent did not violate Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when, upon expiration of the then existing collective bargaining agreement, it declared the Union's proposal concerning the wearing of the military uniform non-negotiable and refused to bargain about it.

C. Case No. 5-CA-30091

This case deals with the contention that, after the termination of the collective bargaining agreement, Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to continue to adhere to

5/ This, of course does not mean Respondent is not required to bargain about the impact and implementation of such a determination. See Section 7106(b)(2) and (3) of the Statute.

6/ Of course such determinations must be reasonably related to internal security. An assertion that a matter is related to internal security, where such assertion is frivolous, would not invoke the operation of Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

7/ Of course such determination must be reasonably related to the technology of doing the work. A mere assertion of such, where frivolous, would not invoke the operation of Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

those provisions of the agreement concerning the wearing of civilian "uniform" by civilian technicians, the grievance procedure and the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions. It is contended that Respondent thereby unilaterally changed the terms and conditions of employment.

The FLRA holds that terms and conditions of employment, established by a collective bargaining agreement, continue in force and effect after the expiration of the agreement, unless the parties mutually agree otherwise. Cf. Department of the Air Force, 35th Combat Support Group (TAC), George Air Force Base, California, 4 FLRA 22 (1980), hereinafter called the George Air Force Base case; Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, Naval Ordnance Station, Louisville, Kentucky, 4 FLRA 760 (1980) and U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, 6 FLRA 18 (1981). In the George Air Force Base case, supra, FLRA specifically held that "negotiated grievance and arbitration procedures must continue as established upon the expiration of a negotiated agreement, absent express agreement by the parties to the contrary . . . ." An agency, may upon the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement, however, change provisions of the agreement concerning permissive subjects of bargaining. U.S. Naval Station, Mayport, Florida, 6 FLRA 133 (1981).

In light of the foregoing and having already determined that the determination that civilian technicians must wear military uniforms is covered by Sections 7106(a) and (b) of the Statute, it is concluded that Respondent was permitted, at the termination of the agreement, to unilaterally change the agreement's provisions and to unilaterally require civilian technicians to wear military uniforms. Accordingly, it is concluded, in this respect that Respondent did not violate Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Cf. U.S. Naval Station, Mayport, Florida, supra.

Respondent argues that, with respect to the grievance procedure or the procedure for the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions, the National Guard Technicians Act of 1968, Public Law 90-486, 32 U.S.C. 709, the Adjutant General is the final authority with respect to adverse actions affecting civilian technicians and is not, in this area, subject to the provisions of the Statute. Respondent relies upon New Jersey Air National Guard v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 677 F.2d 276 (3rd Cir. 1982); cert denied 103 S. Ct. 343 (1982).8/ The FLRA in dealing with the relationship of the Statute and the National Guard Technicians Act of 1968, however, specifically rejected the contention that Section 709(e) of the National Guard Technicians Act of 1968 requires the specific exclusion of adverse actions involving technicians from coverage under negotiated grievance procedures. Michigan Army National Guard, Lansing, Michigan, 11 FLRA 365 (1983), foonote on page 365 and the cases cited therein. See also NAGE Local R12-132 and California National Guard, 5 FLRA 201 (1981), reversed sub nom. California National Guard, v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 697 F.2d 874 ((9th Cir. 1983). I am constrained to follow the decisions of the FLRA and accordingly reject Respondent's contention that Section 709(e) of the National Guard Technicians Act of 1968 specifically reserves adverse actions to the Adjutant General and that in the case of adverse actions the Statute's mandates concerning negotiated grievance procedures and bargaining do not apply.

I therefore conclude that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when, at the termination of the collective bargaining agreement, it refused to continue to adhere to those provisions of the agreement dealing with the grievance procedure and the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions.

Having found and concluded that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, I recommend the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to Section 2423.23 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and Section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Failing and refusing to give effect to the agreement between American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO, which sets forth the collective bargaining ground rules and which provides payment of travel and per diem expenses to representatives designated by the Union for the time spent in collective bargaining negotiations.

   (b) Unilaterally changing the grievance procedure and the procedure for the processing of disciplinary and adverse actions or any other condition of employment without first notifying AFGE Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO, and giving it an opportunity to bargain about any such change.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Provide representatives designated by American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO, with necessary travel and per diem expenses, for the time spent in contract negotiations, in compliance with the ground rules and make whole representatives for such travel and per diem expenses which they have not been paid.

(b) Reinstate the grievance procedure and the procedure for processing disciplinary and adverse actions as provided in the expired collective bargaining agreement with American Federation of Government Employees, Ohio Council of Air National Guard Locals, Council 127, AFL-CIO.

(c) Post at its various installations of the Ohio Air National Guard wherein unit employees are located copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations AUthority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by an authorized representative of the Respondent and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and all other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said Notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other materials.

(d) Pursuant to Section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED, that the complaints in all other aspects are hereby dismissed.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority pursuant to the Union's request for reconsideration of the Authority's Order of March 6, 1985, dismissing the Union's application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petitions for Clarification of Unit. For the reason set forth below, the Union's request must be denied.

The Regional Director's Decision and Order in this case was dated and issued on December 31, 1984. Therefore, under section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and as stated in the Regional Director's Decision and Order, the application for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on March 1, 1985. However, the application for review was not filed until March 4, 1985, and was dismissed as untimely.

In its request for reconsideration, the Union recognizes that its application for review was untimely filed under the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations. However, it requests reconsideration of the dismissal action on the ground that its application was deposited with the U.S. Postal Service on February 28, 1985, for guaranteed next day delivery to the Authority by Express Mail. The Union asserts that it should not be penalized because of the failure of the Postal Service to deliver the application as promised.

While the Union's arguments are well-taken, the Authority has previously held that the date a document is deposited with the U.S. Postal Service is not controlling in timeliness determinations under the Authority's existing Rules and Regulations. While the Union may have had reason to believe that is application for review would be timely delivered by the Postal Service, the Authority has also previously held that the failure of the Postal Service to deliver a document by a certain date is not an "extraordinary circumstance" within the meaning of section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3896 and U.S. Department of Education, Region V, Chicago, Illinois, 11 FLRA 89 (1983), request for reconsideration denied, 12 FLRA 756 (1983); and Bremerton Metal Trades Council, United Association, Local 631 and Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, 7 FLRA 787 (1982), request for reconsideration denied, 9 FLRA 1094 (1982). Further, in spite of the Union's equitable argument, the Authority has determined in sections 2422.17 and 2429.23(d) of its regulations that the time limit involved in this case may not be waived, and we are without authority to modify our existing Rules and Regulations by merely issuing a decision. See 2 K. Davis, Administrative Law Treatise, § 7.29, at 155-156 (2d Ed. 1979).

In this case the Union's application was not timely filed, and in view of applicable regulations */ and clear Authority precedent, the Authority must conclude that the Union has failed to establish an extraordinary circumstance warranting reconsideration of the Authority's Order of dismissal dated March 6, 1985. Accordingly, the Union's request is hereby denied.

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when, contrary to a valid provision in the parties existing agreement, the agency unilaterally ceased payment of travel and per diem expenses to union representatives on official time. The agency initiated its action based on an apparent misinterpretation of the requirements of the Travel Expense Act [5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq.]. Because the Travel Expense Act does not specifically address payment of travel expenses incurred by employees engaged in labor-management activity, the Authority found that it has jurisdiction to consider the issues raised in the complaint. Moreover, since the matter involves an alleged repudiation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement, unfair labor practice proceedings are appropriate. While § 7131(a) does not entitle employees on official time to the payment of travel and per diem expenses, parties may mutually decide what labor relations activities are sufficiently within the interest of the United States so that payment of travel and per diem expenses may be made. Since provisions authorizing the payment of travel and per diem expenses had been negotiated by the parties and incorporated into the terms of their agreement, the parties were obligated to adhere to those provisions.

DIGEST NOTES

A provision is nonnegotiable that requires the agency to grant employees 10 days advance notice in writing of a disciplinary action resulting in removal of the employee. Under 5 U.S.C. § 7513(b)(1), the usual thirty-day advance notice of an intent to take an action against an employee is suspended when there is reasonable cause to believe that employee has committed a crime punishable by imprisonment. In such circumstances the agency may immediately remove that employee. The failure of the proposal to acknowledge management's authority in this situation substantively interferes with management's rights to take appropriate disciplinary action, and to remove employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). Moreover, during the prescribed ten additional workdays, management has no effective method of holding those employees accountable for their failure or refusal to carry out assigned work. Thus the provision interferes with management's rights to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A). Finally, since such employees could refuse, with impunity, to carry out their assignments, there is an adverse affect on the effective and efficient conduct of Government operations. That is, employees involved are to be separated for "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service," 5 U.S.C. § 7513(a), yet the provision requires their retention in a paid status for ten addition days after the termination decision has been reached. (provision 1)

A provision is nonnegotiable that lists situations in which employees may be detailed. FPM Ch. 300, Subch. 8-3.a authorizes details in other circumstances than those included on the list. Because the proposal is intended to circumvent management's ability to detail employees, the provision is inconsistent with management's right to assign employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). (provision 2)

A provision authorizing travel and per diem payments to union representatives engaged in labor-management relations activities is negotiable. Such provisions concern conditions of employment and are consistent with the Travel Expense Act and the Federal Travel Regulations. Also, because the agency did not substantially demonstrate that the provision would result in a significant and unavoidable increase in costs, not offset by compensating benefits, the Authority did not sustain the agency's argument that the provision would interfere with its right to determine its budget under § 7106(a)(2)(A). (provision 3)

A provision is negotiable that requires the granting of administrative leave or excused absences after the agency has decided to close temporarily the installation for circumstances beyond the its control such as snow storms, floods, lack of heat or electricity. The provision does not apply to circumstances where laying off employees would be the appropriate course of action in accordance with applicable regulatory requirements. Nor would the provision require that employees be excused from work. Accordingly, the provision does not interfere with management's rights to layoff, assign, or direct employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A). (provision 4)

DIGEST NOTES

Where the union provided a satisfactory statement of the proposals' meaning in the completion of its appeal which was served on the agency head, the petition for review was not deficient.

Disputes of factual issues are not properly appealed to the Authority under its negotiability procedures and § 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E); rather such issues should be resolved in other appropriate proceedings. Thus the Authority did not consider in its negotiability proceedings issues concerning whether or not there was a duty to bargain (1) based on the applicability of provisions in an expired national agreement which had not been renegotiated; (2) based on a dispute of whether or not a proposal relates to a change in working conditions; (3) based on the agency's allegation that there was not a change in working conditions relating to a proposal.

Proposals are nonnegotiable that effectively nullify management's decision to establish a new tour of duty. The proposal interfere with management's elective right under § 7106(b)(1) to determined the "number, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty". (proposals 1 and 4)

A proposal that seeks to staff a new tour of duty established by the agency with volunteers, is a negotiable procedure under 7106(b)(2). (proposal 2)

A proposal is negotiable that sets out the time frame within the hours of a new shift established by management, in which employees will take their unpaid half-hour lunch break. (proposal 5)

A proposal is negotiable that requires the agency to provide government vehicles to employees who are required to travel from one work site to another during their established tours of duty. The proposed transportation is unrelated to the performance of the agency's work and therefore does not concern the technology, methods or means of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1). (proposal 6)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that requires the agency to give employees time during their hours of duty to clean up and change uniforms prior to starting work. The proposal interferes with management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B) because it would preclude the assignment of other types of work during the specified period. (proposal 7)

DIGEST NOTES

Proposals concerning reductions in space; space allocation; the arrangement of space; the furniture and equipment to be utilized by employees, are matters that principally relate to conditions of employment. The agency did not allege that any of these proposals were contrary to applicable law, rule or regulation and, hence, were nonnegotiable. Rather, the agency's sole contention was that the implementation of GSA space reduction regulation [FPMR Temporary Reg. D-71, 41 C.F.R. § 101-17 (1985) at 333] would have no material effect or substantial impact on conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The effect of the agency's actions on conditions of employment is a factual matter. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties concerning the duty to bargain in specific circumstances of the case, such issues should be raised in other appropriate proceedings. As to the negotiability of the proposals, the parties have the burden of creating a record upon which the Authority can make a negotiability determination. Since the agency did not claim that the proposals were contrary to applicable law, rule or regulation, and it is not otherwise apparent, the Authority found the proposals to be within the duty to bargain. (proposals 1-16, 18, 19 and 21-24)

Proposals are nonnegotiable that require adjustments to performance standards as a result of the adverse impact on performance by a reduction in space. Proposals directly addressing the content of performance standards interfere with management's right to assign work and direct employees under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). (proposals 17 and 20)

and Case No. 31-CA-40176

OVERSEAS EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority based on the Regional Director's "Order Transferring Case to the Authority" in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The complaint alleged that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by repudiating the parties' collective bargaining agreement which provides for payment of certain travel and per diem expenses, thereby failing to bargain in good faith with the Charging Party.

II. Background

The parties' collective bargaining agreement, which was negotiated in 1977 and continues in full force and effect, contains the following provisions relating to the payment of travel and per diem expenses which are the subject of this case:

> Article 10 - Association Management Deliberations
> The (Union's) Area Director shall be in duty status during such deliberations in accordance with Article 8, Section 2 and shall receive transportation and per diem at government expense in accordance with the JTR. The Area Director may be accompanied and assisted for such deliberations by no more than three teachers in duty status and receiving transportation and per diem at government expense in accordance with the JTR.

Article 13 - Grievance Procedure[1]

All participants, including witnesses, in the hearing shall be in a duty status and, in the event the hearing is not held at a site within commuting distance, participants, including witnesses, shall be provided transportation in accordance with the JTR, Vol. II.

Under these provisions, the Respondent paid the travel and per diem expenses of its employees who were the Charging Party's representatives at deliberations and of bargaining unit employees at arbitration hearings. This practice existed since at least 1977. On February 21, 1984, the Respondent notified the Charging Party that effective on March 10, 1984, it would no longer make the payments for travel and per diem expenses required by Articles 10 and 13 of the parties' agreement. This action was based upon the Respondent's view that Articles 10 and 13 were not in compliance with law and that decisions concerning whether or not to pay travel and per diem expenses would be made solely by management.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent argues that the Authority lacks jurisdiction to resolve the issues raised in the complaint because reimbursement for travel and per diem expenses is covered by § 5702 of the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq., not the Statute; that implementation of the United States Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), on the matter of payment for travel and per diem expenses, as applicable to this case, is subject to the parties' contractual grievance procedure and not to the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute; and that there can be no repudiation of contractual rights or privileges where none exist,/which is the case here. The

[1] This provision addresses attendance at arbitration hearings. Although it does not specifically reference payment of per diem expenses, the parties' stipulation indicates that such payment is encompassed by the provision.

Respondent further argues that the mere announcement of an intention to no longer pay travel and per diem expenses without any actual denial of such payments is not a violation of the Statute, and that it did not unlawfully refuse to bargain.

The General Counsel's position, as set forth in the complaint, is that the Respondent unilaterally repudiated the parties' collective bargaining agreement and thereby failed and refused to negotiate in good faith with the Charging Party.[2]

IV. Analysis

As to the Respondent's first contention to the effect that the Authority lacks jurisdiction under the Statute to address payment of travel and per diem expenses, the Authority notes its recent decision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). In that case, the Authority found that the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq., does not specifically address payment of travel expenses incurred by employees engaged in labor-management activity. Therefore, the Respondent's contention that the Authority lacks jurisdiction to resolve the issues raised in the complaint because they are covered by the Travel Expense Act is without merit.

The answer to the Respondent's second contention, that the issues raised in this case are subject to the parties' contractual grievance procedure rather than to the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute, is that we are here presented with an alleged repudiation of the agreement rather than with differing and arguable interpretations of that agreement. It is entirely appropriate to resolve this issue in an unfair labor practice proceeding. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 88 (1985). As to the substantive issues raised by the complaint and the Respondent's further contentions addressing those issues, the Authority concludes that the announced intention to no longer make payments of travel and per diem expenses was an unlawful repudiation of the parties' agreement, as explained below.

As already noted, the parties had negotiated for the payment of travel and per diem expenses and had included those provisions in their collective bargaining agreement. Under these provisions, payment of travel and per diem expenses was made by the Respondent for its employees who represented the Charging Party at deliberations with Agency management, as well as for bargaining unit employees at arbitration hearings. At the time that the Respondent notified the Charging Party that the payments would no longer be made under the terms of the agreement but would be based solely upon a decision by management, the United States Supreme Court had rendered its decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), finding that section 7131(a) of the Statute did not entitle employees on official time to the payment of travel and per diem expenses. However, the Court added in footnote 17 of its decision that "unions may presumably negotiate for such payments in collective bargaining as they do in the private sector." 464 U.S. at 107. Following that decision, the Authority decided in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, supra, that a union's proposal which would require an agency to pay travel and per diem expenses incurred by employees using official time, while not an entitlement under the Statute, is within the duty to bargain as it is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. In reaching its decision, the Authority found that agencies have discretion to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds and, further, that the exercise of such discretion is subject to negotiation. Therefore, parties may mutually decide what labor relations activities are sufficiently within the interest of the United States so that payment of travel and per diem expenses may be made. Within these negotiated parameters, however, determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and per diem expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation would have to be made on a case-by-case basis.[3]

In this case, the provisions authorizing the payment of travel and per diem expenses had been negotiated by the parties and incorporated into the terms of their agreement. The parties therefore were obligated to adhere to those provisions during the term of their agreement which, as previously noted, the parties stipulated has continued in full force and effect. Internal Revenue Service, 17 FLRA 731, 734 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, No. 85-1361 (D.C. Cir. June 14, 1985). The Respondent has not shown that the provisions of Articles 10 and 13 are inconsistent with law and regulation; rather, we note that payment for travel and per diem expenses is within the duty to bargain. The Respondent's announced intention to no longer make payments for travel and per diem expenses in accordance with the contractually agreed-upon provisions therefore constituted a repudiation of the agreement which was inconsistent with the Respondent's good-faith bargaining obligation in violation of the Statute. See Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 124 (1986).

V. Conclusion

The Authority finds that the Respondent repudiated the parties' collective bargaining agreement providing for payment of travel and per diem expenses, and thereby failed to bargain in good faith with the Charging Party in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. To remedy this unfair labor practice, we shall order the Respondent to abide by the terms of the 1977 agreement and to pay travel and per diem expenses to all bargaining unit employees who submit or previously submitted appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of Articles 10 and 13 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Of course, such payments must be consistent not only with the terms of the parties'

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the Department of Defense Dependents Schools System shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Repudiating the terms of Articles 10 and 13 of the 1977 collective bargaining agreement negotiated with the Overseas Education Association, the exclusive representative of its employees, which provides for the payment of travel and per diem expenses, thereby failing and refusing to bargain in good faith with the Overseas Education Association.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply with the 1977 collective bargaining agreement negotiated with the Overseas Education Association, which provides in Articles 10 and 13 for the payment of travel and per diem expenses to representatives of the Overseas Education Association at deliberations, and unit employees at arbitration hearings.

(b) Pay travel and per diem expenses to all bargaining unit employees who submit or previously submitted appropriate claims for such payments under the terms of Articles 10 and 13 of the 1977 collective bargaining agreement, to the extent that such payments are consistent with the terms of the collective bargaining agreement and law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations.

4/ We note in this regard that the language of Articles 10 and 13 reference that payment will be in accordance with the Joint Travel Regulations.

(c) Post at its facilities where bargaining unit employees represented by the Overseas Education Association are located, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Director, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of a single Union Proposal.

II. Union Proposal

> The employer will pay travel and per diem for all union employee negotiators.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

> 1. It does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

2. it is inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulation; and

3. the demand for travel and per diem to employee/negotiators is not limited to those employee/negotiators who are receiving official time.

In its response, the Union states that the proposal "must conform to the Travel Act--a point we do not contest . . . ." See Union Response at page 4. Finally, the Union maintains that its proposal is intended to provide travel and per diem reimbursement only to unit employees authorized to be at the bargaining table on official time.

B. Analysis

1. "Conditions of Employment"

The Agency makes an essentially identical "conditions of employment" argument to that made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appeal docketed sub nom. Department of Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, Case No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service and it is rejected here for the same reasons set forth in that case.

2. Inconsistent with Federal Law and Government-wide Rules or Regulations

The Agency contends, in essence, that under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, a determination as to whether an employee is on "official business" is dependent on the particular facts involved in each individual situation. Consequently, such a determination is not a matter of unlimited discretion on the part of the Agency.

For reasons set forth in our decision in Customs Service, the Authority has found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business and, hence, to pay for resulting appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion was held to be subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that the proposal does not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. There is no indication in the record that the Union intends the proposal to be applied contrary to the Federal Travel Regulations. On the contrary, we note that the Union's Response indicates that the proposal is to be read to be in conformity with the Travel Act. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons fully expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's assertion that the proposal is inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

3. Limited to Those Employee/Negotiators Who Are Receiving Official Time

The Agency contends that the proposal would entitle employee/negotiators who are not receiving official time to travel and per diem. However, in our view the proposal does not necessarily require payment of travel and per diem to those employee/negotiators who are not receiving official time. Indeed, the Union, as previously noted, interprets the proposal to limit travel and per diem reimbursement to only unit employees authorized to be at the bargaining table on official time. We adopt the Union's interpretation of its proposal for purposes of our decision noting, in any event, that nothing in our analysis in Customs Service indicates that travel and per diem payments depend upon a contemporaneous grant of official time under section 7131. Instead, the negotiability of travel and per diem is based on consideration of whether the travel involved is in the primary interest of the Government so as to constitute "official business". Consequently, we find the Agency's contention not to be supported.

C. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the proposal concerns a condition of employment which is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, the proposal is within the duty to bargain.*/

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning the Union Proposal.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

These cases are before the Authority because of negotiability appeals filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concern the negotiability of four Union provisions disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute. One of these disapproved provisions, Provision 3, concerns the payment of travel and per diem to employees engaged in various labor-management relations activities. The Union appealed the Agency head's determination on two parts of that provision in Case No. O-NG-746 and the remaining three parts of that provision in Case No. O-NG-748 along with the other three provisions. In these circumstances, the Authority deems it appropriate to consolidate the two cases in the interest of expeditious handling and conservation of resources.

II. Provision 1

> Article 13, Section 6b. Any disciplinary action resulting in removal shall not be effected against the employee for at least ten (10) working days from the receipt of the letter from the deciding official.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that under 5 U.S.C. § 7513(b)(1) it has the right to remove immediately an employee where there is reasonable cause to believe that such employee has committed a crime for which a sentence of imprisonment may be imposed. By mandating a ten-day delay in such removal action, Provision 1 directly interferes with the Agency's right to discipline under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. The Agency contends further that, since the imposition of a ten-day delay in effecting a removal action results in the Agency being required to assign such employee to perform regular duties or to administrative leave, Provision 1 also violates the Agency's right to assign under section 7106(a)(2)(A).

The Union argues that the provision is a negotiable "procedure" pursuant to section 7106(b)(2) and furthermore is an appropriate arrangement, under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, for an employee adversely affected by the exercise by management of its right to remove.

B. Analysis

1. Management Rights

Under 5 U.S.C. § 7513(b)(1) the usual thirty-day advance notice of an intent to take an action against an employee is suspended when there is reasonable cause to believe that employee has committed a crime punishable by imprisonment. In such circumstances an agency may immediately remove that employee. Provision 1, however, does not make an exception for such a situation, nor does the Union indicate that application of the provision would be suspended in such circumstances. Consequently, it must be concluded that the provision contravenes the clear legislative mandate that employees reasonably believed to have committed certain crimes be terminated without delay. The failure of the provision to acknowledge management's authority in that situation substantively interferes with management's rights to take appropriate disciplinary action against, and to remove employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Thus, Provision 1 does not constitute a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F. 2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982).

Of equal significance, in the Authority's view, is the impact of the provision upon management's rights to direct employees and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Management, at least in part, exercises its authority to assign work and to direct employees by holding them accountable for meeting the standards set by management for the performance of their work. Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council and Navy Public Works Center, Norfolk, Virginia, 15 FLRA 343, 344 (1984).

In the circumstances addressed by Provision 1, the concerned employees are on notice that management has decided, after all avenues of appeal have been followed, to terminate them and that their separation date has been fixed. Consequently, in such circumstances, management would have no effective method of holding those employees accountable for their failure or refusal to carry out assigned work during the prescribed period of ten additional workdays.

Further, since such employees could refuse, with impunity, to carry out their assignments, the adverse affect on the effective and efficient conduct of Government operations is a major consideration. That is, employees involved are to be separated for "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service," 5 U.S.C. § 7513(a), yet the provision requires their retention in a paid status for ten additional days after the termination decision has been reached. The provision, therefore, must be considered inimical to the effective conduct of public business.

Turning now to whether Provision 1 constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, the Union asserts that the provision's purpose is "that an employee be given ten working days following a letter informing him/her of the employer's final decision to separate him/her, to clear any work on his/her desk and get personal affairs in order before the separation is effective." Union Petition for Review at 1. The provision, therefore, would ameliorate, to a very limited degree, the adverse affect on employees of management's exercise of its statutory right to remove employees for cause. On balance however, the significant deleterious affect on management's rights to impose disciplinary actions including removing employees, to direct employees, and to assign work, and on the efficiency and effectiveness of Government operations is disproportionate to the limited benefit employees would receive from the proposed arrangement. See National Labor Relations Board Union and National Labor Relations Board, Office of the General Counsel, 18 FLRA No. 42 (1985).

C. Conclusion

Consequently, as Provision 1 excessively interferes with management rights, it does not constitute either a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) or an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). Provision 1 is therefore outside the duty to bargain.

III. Provision 2

> Article 19, Section 10a. DETAILS, manner: In the interests of effective employee utilization, details to positions or work assignments requiring higher or different skills will be based upon bona fide needs and will be consonant with the spirit and intent of this Article, applicable regulations, and the merit system. Details may be used to meet emergencies or situations occasioned by abnormal workload, changes in mission or organization, or absences of personnel.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Provision 2 is inconsistent with its rights, pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute, to assign personnel and work.

The Union maintains that the provision, in effect, only requires adherence to law and regulations in detailing employees and thus is a procedure to be followed by management in exercising its authority under the Statute. The Union further states that the list of circumstances in the provision "is not exhaustive, but neither is it exclusive." Union Reply Brief at 3.

B. Analysis

The Union's assertion that the part of the provision listing the situations where details may be appropriate is not intended to be "exclusive" is inconsistent with the express language of the provision. That is, if the Union's intent was to limit the resort to details to those circumstances authorized by regulations, the list of circumstances in the provision would have been unnecessary. Mere reference to the applicable regulations would have sufficed. However, the Union chose to incorporate a list of situations in which details "may be used," stating that such a list is consistent with "the spirit and letter" of Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Chapter 300, Subchapter 8. Reference to the cited part of the FPM reveals that details are authorized in other circumstances not listed in the provision. Specifically, FPM Chapter 300, Subchapter 8-3.a authorizes details for the following additional purposes: special projects or studies, pending official assignment, pending description and classification of new position, pending security clearance, and for training purposes. The omission of these circumstances, while including others listed in the FPM compels the conclusion that the provision is intended to circumscribe management's ability to detail. Therefore the proposal is in conflict with management's rights to assign employees and to assign work.

C. Conclusion

The Authority concludes, based on the reasoning set forth above, that Provision 2 is inconsistent with rights reserved to management by section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and, consequently, is outside the duty to bargain.

IV. Provision 3

> In addition, necessary travel and per diem expenses to the following proceedings will be borne by the Employer:
> a. Basic negotiations
> b. Impact and implementation bargaining sessions.
> c. Mid-term contract bargaining sessions.
> d. Impasse proceedings (including mediation)
> e. FLRA proceedings (i.e., ULP hearings).[1] [Footnote added.]

[1] The Petition for Review in Case No. O-NG-746 sought review of the Agency's disapproval of parts a and c of

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues generally that all existing contractual provisions authorizing travel and per diem payments to union representatives engaged in labor-management relations activities should be declared null and void in view of the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), invalidating the basis on which such payments were found to be negotiable.

The Agency specifically contends that Provision 3 is not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

(a) It does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

(b) it is inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations;

(c) it interferes with the Agency's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1), and its right to assign under section 7106(a)(2)(A);

The Union asserts that the provision concerns conditions of employment and addresses a matter over which agencies have administrative discretion. The Union also contends that a finding that the provision is negotiable would be "wholly consistent" with the Supreme Court's holding in BATF. Further, the Union explains that Provision 3, by its terms, would only require the payment of "necessary" per diem and travel expenses. Finally, the Union argues that the potential increase in costs resulting from the provision does not, per se, make it nonnegotiable as a violation of the Agency's right to determine its budget.

Provision 3. Authority review of the Agency's disapproval of parts b, d and e of the provision was sought in Case No. O-NG-748.

B. Analysis

1. Enforcement of Travel and Per Diem Provisions in Existing Collective Bargaining Agreements

No claim is made that Provision 3 is improperly before the Authority. Thus, the present negotiability appeal is the appropriate vehicle to determine its negotiability. While the Agency argues that all existing contractual provisions concerning travel and per diem payments to union representatives should be declared null and void, it adverts to no existing contractual provisions against which such declaration could be made in the context of this negotiability appeal. Moreover, the question of enforcement of any existing contractual provisions concerning travel and per diem payments to union representatives should be raised in appropriate proceedings other than a negotiability appeal. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984).

2. Conditions of Employment

The Agency involved in this case makes an essentially identical "conditions of employment" argument to that made by the Agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service and it is rejected here for the same reasons as set forth in that case.

3. Inconsistent with Federal Law or Government-wide Rules or Regulations

The Agency contends, in essence, that under the Travel Expense Act and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs) an "official business" determination is dependent on the particular facts involved in each individual situation. Consequently, such a determination is not a matter of unlimited discretion on the part of the Agency.

For reasons set forth in its decision in Customs Service, the Authority has found that agencies have discretion, under the Travel Expense Act and implementing regulations, to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business and, hence, pay for resulting appropriate expenses from Federal funds. The exercise of that discretion is subject to the negotiation process. The Agency here makes no specific argument that the provision does not meet the statutory and regulatory standards discussed in Customs Service. Moreover, as noted in the Union's position, the provision envisions case by case determinations as to appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulation. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's contention that the provision is inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

4. Conflict with Management Rights

The Agency's position that the provision interferes with management rights, specifically including "the right to assign," is unpersuasive. The provision is not concerned with authorization of travel or absence from the workplace, but, rather, concerns the payment of travel and per diem expenses for travel in connection with the collective bargaining relationship.

The Agency also contends that management decisions on travel and per diem are determinations of priorities affecting the Agency's mission. The Agency explains that granting travel and per diem expenses for labor-management relations activities makes that much less money available for mission-related activities. While the Agency characterizes this argument as concerning other management rights, the Authority finds this contention is actually directed at budgetary issues.

The Authority stated, however, in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), that a "budget" argument must be supported by a substantial demonstration that a significant and unavoidable increase in costs, not offset by compensating benefits, will result from implementation of the disputed proposal. Here, no such demonstration has been proffered. To the contrary, it would appear from the record in this case that no significant and unavoidable increase would result from the provision, particularly in light of the Agency's argument that the provision is unnecessary because travel would not be required in the conduct of labor-management relations. Hence, based on Customs Service, the Agency's argument cannot be sustained.

5. Compelling Need

While the Agency states that a compelling need determination is not necessary because Provision 3 is inconsistent with applicable law and Government-wide regulations the Agency does claim that a compelling need exists for its travel regulations. As to such regulations, the Agency argues that a compelling need exists under criterion (c) of section 2424.11 of the Authority's regulations because its travel regulations implement a nondiscretionary mandate to the Agency under law and Government-wide regulations. However, those arguments are based essentially on the Agency's view that, since its travel regulations parallel applicable law and Government-wide regulations which it contends bar negotiation of Provision 3, its regulations must also bar negotiation of Provision 3. The Agency has provided no other basis to support its conclusion that a compelling need exists for its regulations. Thus, in view of the decision that Provision 3 is consistent with applicable law and Government-wide regulations the Authority finds that the Agency has not sustained its compelling need contention.

C. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, and based especially on the findings contained in the Decision and Order on Remand in Customs Service, the Authority finds Provision 3 to be within the Agency's duty to bargain.

V. Provision 4

> Article 25, Section 5 ADMINISTRATIVE LEAVE OR EXCUSED ABSENCE: . . . Excused absence shall be authorized when the activity shuts down due to circumstances beyond the agency's control for a short period of time. Instances involving snow storms, floods, lack of heat or electricity and similar events are covered by this type of excused absence.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that Provision 4 is of "questionable legality," and interferes with its reserved rights under section 7106(a)(2) to elect to furlough or lay off employees and to assign them and direct their work under section 7106 (a)(2)(A) and (B).

The Union's position is that there is no material difference between Provision 4 and the proposal held to be within the duty to bargain in Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Long Beach, California and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers Local 174, AFL-CIO, 7 FLRA 362 (1981).

B. Analysis

The record in this case clearly indicates that this provision was not intended to apply to circumstances where laying off of employees would be the appropriate course of action in accordance with applicable regulatory requirements. Thus, the Agency's arguments to the contrary cannot be sustained. Nor does the provision require that employees be excused from work. Rather, the provision only requires the granting of administrative leave or excused absences after management has decided to close temporarily the installation for any of the enumerated reasons.

In the Authority's view, Provision 4 is to the same effect as the proposal requiring the granting of 4 to 5 days administrative leave during a curtailment of agency operations held to be within the duty to bargain in Long Beach Naval Shipyard. In that case, the Authority held that the granting of administrative leave for the short period in question (4 to 5 workdays) affected the working conditions of unit employees and was a matter within the agency's discretion under applicable Government-wide regulations. Since it was not shown that the exercise of such discretion by means of the collective bargaining process was barred by law or regulation, the proposal was held to be negotiable. Therefore, based on the reasoning more fully explained in Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Provision 4 is likewise within the duty to bargain.

C. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that Provision 4 concerns a condition of employment which is within the Agency's administrative discretion and that the provision is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, the provision is within the duty to bargain.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review, as it relates to Provisions 1 and 2, be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Provisions 3 and 4 which were bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.2/

Case No. 0-NG-814

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
U.S. CUSTOMS SERVICE

Agency

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of seven Union Proposals.

II. Procedural Issues

The Agency contends that the Union's petition for review should be dismissed because the Union failed to furnish an explicit statement of the proposals' meaning as required by section 2424.4(a)(2) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and because the Union failed to serve a copy of its petition on the Agency head as required by section 2424.4(b) of the Rules. However, the Union provided a satisfactory statement of the meaning attributed to the disputed proposals in its completion of the appeal. In addition, while the initial petition was served on the Agency official who alleged that the proposals were nonnegotiable, the completion of the appeal was served on the Agency head's designee. Thus, the Union's petition for review is properly before the Authority.

III. Background

It appears from the record that the disputed proposals in this case respond to the Agency's announced plan to establish a new tour of duty for its employees at several locations within the Baltimore District. The current tour of duty extends between 8:00 a.m. and 5:00 p.m. The new tour, beginning at 11:00 a.m. and ending at 8:00 p.m., was to be established, as explained by the Agency, to service flights arriving at Baltimore-Washington International Airport in the late afternoon and early evening with the result being that such service could be provided without personnel receiving overtime pay, as had been the prior practice.

IV. Duty to Bargain

The Agency did not contest the negotiability of the proposals in this case but only contended that it had no duty to bargain on them. Specifically, the Agency argues that it has no duty to bargain on Proposals 1, 3, 4, 5 and 6 essentially because the matters sought to be bargained are covered by provisions pertaining to shift changes in an expired national agreement between the parties which provisions must be maintained pending renegotiation. The Agency also contends it has no duty to bargain on Proposal 2 because the subject matter sought to be bargained is not related to the Agency's decision to create a new tour of duty. Finally, the Agency argues that because Proposal 7 addresses matters which were not substantially changed by the decision to create a new tour of duty, it has no obligation to bargain on such matters.

The Authority will decide only the negotiability issues presented under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute. To the extent there are factual issues in dispute between the parties in the circumstances of a case, such issues should be resolved in other appropriate proceedings. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Thus the Agency's position on these proposals cannot be sustained.

V. Union Proposals 1 and 4

Proposal 1

No change, the Customs Service has failed to support any need to establish the new tour of > duty. In addition, the change is an abuse of discretion, mismanagement and a gross waste of funds. Furthermore, the change has the effect of seriously impacting upon the Baltimore area economy.

> The Customs Service agrees that the established tour of duty shall be 11:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m.

A. Position of the Union

According to the Union, at the time the new tour of duty was announced, there existed no regularly scheduled work at the airport to warrant the assigning of personnel after 5:00 p.m. The Union asserts that flight records indicate the absence of any work on at least two days each week after 5:00 p.m. for employees on the new tour of duty. As a consequence, the Union contends Customs House brokers and importers would be without sufficient Agency employees between 8:00 a.m. and 11:00 a.m. to permit release of their imported cargoes.

As to Proposal 4, the Union asserts that such proposal is consistent with other established tours of duty within the region of the Agency.

B. Analysis

Although not expressly addressed by either party, the issue with respect to Union Proposals 1 and 4 is whether, under the Statute, the Union may seek by negotiation to nullify management's decision to establish the new tour of duty. It is well established that the decision to establish a shift or tour of duty involves the "numbers, types, and grades of employees or positions assigned to any organizational subdivision, work project, or tour of duty" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute and, thus, is negotiable only at the election of an agency. See, for example, Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, 16 FLRA 1104 (1984) and U.S. Customs Service, Region V, New Orleans, Louisiana, 9 FLRA 116, 118 (1982).

Because Proposals 1 and 4 effectively nullify management's decision to establish a new tour of duty, they also fall within the compass of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute.

This view is not altered by the Union's argument that the Agency's new tour of duty is unnecessary or that Proposal 2 is consistent with tours of duty which exist elsewhere in the Agency. Such arguments concern only the desirability of the proposals and not whether the proposals are within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, therefore, based on the reasoning and cases cited in Lowry Air Force Base and in U.S. Customs Service, Region V, that Union Proposals 1 and 4 are not within the Agency's duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 2

> The initial staffing at the various Baltimore District facilities will be made utilizing volunteers among qualified employees.

A. Position of the Union

The Union asserts that the proposal establishes a procedure for the initial staffing of the new tour of duty.

B. Analysis

Based on the record, the new tour of duty was intended to be implemented at some, but not all, of the Agency's work stations. Since the proposal has the objective, as explained by the Union, of accomplishing the staffing of the new tour with volunteers, it is to the same effect as the proposal found negotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Social Security District Office Locals and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 15 FLRA 545 (1984). The proposal in that case required that positions in a particular organizational element first be filled by volunteers qualified for the positions. Noting that the proposal in that case left management with the discretion to determine the qualifications required in filling the positions and to decide upon the occupational types required to perform the work, the Authority concluded that the proposal constituted a negotiable procedure, within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

C. Conclusion

Accordingly, based on the reasons and case cited in Social Security Administration, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 2 constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

VII. Union Proposal 3

> Every effort shall be made to insure uniformity in assignment of personnel to inspectional activities and tours of duty.

A. Position of the Union

The Union asserts that the intent of this proposal is to assure that shift assignments among qualified employees will be made in a uniform manner. Further, according to the Union, the proposal is consistent with Agency regulations.

B. Analysis

Based on the express language of the proposal itself, and the Union's explanation thereof, it is determined that Union Proposal 3 is to the same effect as Union Provision 1 found negotiable in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1622 and Department of the Army, Headquarters, Vint Hill Farms Station, Warrenton, Virginia, 16 FLRA 578 (1982). Provision 1 in that case required that certain details to positions affording qualifying experience or to those of a higher grade "be rotated among qualified employees to the fullest extent feasible." The Authority noted that the cited provision did "not in any way limit management's discretion to establish the particular qualifications and skills needed to perform the work . . . or limit management's judgment in determining whether a particular employee meets those qualifications . . . ." The Authority concluded that, as the provision "established a general, nonquantitative standard by which the Agency's exercise of its reserved authority to assign employees could be evaluated in a subsequent grievance," it did not interfere with management's right to assign employees, under section 7106(a)(2)(A).

C. Conclusion

Because Union Proposal 3 in this case likewise establishes a general, nonquantitative standard, specifically "uniformity," in making assignments to new shifts, it is, based on the reasons and cases cited in Vint Hill Farms Station, within the duty to bargain.

VIII. Union Proposal 5

> In the alternative, the established tour of duty shall be from 11:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. with a lunch break between the hours of 3:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m.

A. Position of the Union

The Union asserts that, "consistent with workload requirements," under the proposal employees will not be scheduled to work during lunch periods unless otherwise compensated. The Union also states that the proposal is not intended to abridge management's section 7106(a) rights under the Statute.

B. Analysis

It appears from the record that the Agency has misinterpreted the proposal. That is, this proposal has nothing to do with the starting and ending times of a shift. Rather, the proposal is consistent with the Agency's decision to establish an 11:00 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. shift and only sets out the time frame within that shift when employees' unpaid half-hour lunch breaks will be taken.

The Authority has previously determined that the time at which breaks and lunch may be observed within the workday (and not the length of the breaks, lunch or workday themselves) is a matter within an agency's duty to bargain. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 19 FLRA No. 123 (1985).

C. Conclusion

Based on the reasoning and cases cited in Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Union Proposal 5 is within the duty to bargain.

IX. Union Proposal 6

> Any employee subsequently assigned from his/her duty station to the BWIA (Baltimore-Washington International Airport) shall be provided with a government vehicle.

A. Position of the Union

The Union states that the national agreement provides that employees are responsible for transportation to their regular duty stations, but does not concern transport to subsequent work sites. Consequently, the Union seeks to have furnished government vehicles for travel to subsequent assignments. The Union asserts that the Agency has vehicles available for such purposes.

B. Analysis

In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and United States Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61 (1982), the Authority decided that Proposal 1, requiring the transportation by shuttle bus of employees to and from research facilities in connection with the performance of their duties, was within the duty to bargain. In so deciding, the Authority noted that the proposed transportation was unrelated to the performance of the agency's work and therefore did not concern the technology, methods or means of performing such work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. Rather, the Authority found that the proposal concerned a matter "which principally affects working conditions of employees who would be adversely impacted by relocation; such transportation would be only incidental to the performance of the Agency's work." In like manner, the instant proposal is concerned only with furnishing transportation for employees who are required to travel from one work site to another during their established tours of duty.

C. Conclusion

Hence, based on Board of Immigration Appeals, and the reasons and cases cited therein, Union Proposal 6, concerning the transportation of employees from one work site to another, is also within the duty to bargain.

X. Union Proposal 7

> All employees affected by this change and agreement shall be afforded a reasonable amount of personal time for washing up and changing uniforms.

A. Position of the Union

The Union contends that this proposal will preserve the professional image of the Agency because employees' appearance will be enhanced when dealing with passengers at the airport.

B. Analysis

Proposal 7 expressly would require the Agency to give employees time during their hours of duty to clean up and change uniforms prior to starting work at the airport. This proposal is to the same effect as Union Proposal 1 found nonnegotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2094, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, New York, New York, 19 FLRA No. 120 (1985). Proposal 1 in that case sought to provide employees with 15 minutes prior to the end of their shift to be used for personal hygiene and changing clothing. The Authority found that Proposal 1 interfered with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute because it would preclude the assignment of other types of work during the specified period.

C. Conclusion

Based on reasons and cases cited in Veterans Administration Medical Center, Union Proposal 7 violates the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and is outside the duty to bargain.

XI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review as it relates to Union Proposals 1, 4, and 7 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain on Union Proposals 2, 3, 5 and 6.*/

Agency

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents issues concerning the negotiability of twenty-four Union proposals. These proposals are set forth in an Appendix to this decision.

II. Background

The Union submitted the proposals at issue to the Agency in response to the Agency's announcement of its intention to implement a space reduction plan in compliance with a General Services Administration (GSA) space reduction regulation. This regulation is GSA Federal Property Management Regulation (FPMR), Temporary Regulation D-68, which was originally effective from March 9, 1983, until January 31, 1984, and was extended until May 15, 1985. However, it has been superseded by FPMR Temporary Regulation D-71, effective July 1, 1985, to June 30, 1987. 41 C.F.R. § 101-17 (1985) at 333.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency does not argue that any of the twenty-four disputed proposals is inconsistent with applicable law, rule or regulation and, hence, is nonnegotiable. Rather, the Agency's sole contention in this case is that it has no duty to bargain on the proposals under the circumstances because its implementation of the GSA space reduction regulation will have no material effect or substantial impact on conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The Agency argues that in these circumstances a requirement to bargain on the Union's proposals would be inconsistent with the mandate of section 7101(b) that the Statute "be interpreted in a manner consistent with the requirement of an effective and efficient Government." In support, the Agency relies on the Seventh Circuit's decision in Internal Revenue Service v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 717 F.2d 1174 (7th Cir. 1983), denying enforcement of Internal Revenue Service, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 648 (1982).

According to the Union, the disputed proposals are clear as written. The Union did not file a Reply Brief.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

A. Duty to Bargain

The Agency's reliance on Internal Revenue Service, 717 F.2d 1174 (7th Cir. 1983), is misplaced as that decision concerned whether an agency's failure to bargain in the circumstances of that case constituted an unfair labor practice and not whether particular matters sought to be bargained are consistent with applicable law, rule and regulations. When a union files a negotiability appeal under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Statute, section 7117(c) entitles it to a decision on the negotiability issues in the appeal. To the extent that there are factual issues in dispute between the parties concerning the duty to bargain in the specific circumstances of the case, such issues should be raised in other appropriate proceedings. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 (1984). Hence, the Agency's contention that, under the circumstances, it has no duty to bargain on the disputed proposals, is not relevant in the context of a negotiability dispute.

B. Proposals 1-16, 18, 19, 21-24

It is well established that the parties bear the burden of creating a record upon which the Authority can make a negotiability determination. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 681 F.2d 886, 891 (D.C. Cir. 1982), aff'g

National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574 (1981). A party failing to assume the burden acts at its peril. Proposals 1-16, 18, 19 and 21-24 generally concern reductions in space, space allocation, the arrangement of space, the furniture and equipment to be utilized by employees and information related to those matters requested by the Union for use in negotiations. The Authority has held that such matters principally relate to the working conditions of employees and are within the duty to bargain unless an agency demonstrates that the proposals are inconsistent with applicable law or regulation. See, for example, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2477 and Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 578, 583 (1982), enforced sub nom. Library of Congress v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 699 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1983) in which various proposals concerning bookshelf and file cabinet space, office partitions, office doors, shower and locker facilities were found to be within the duty to bargain because the agency did not establish that the selection of furniture, equipment or office design had, as claimed, a technological relationship to accomplishing or furthering the performance of the agency's work with which the particular proposals interfered. Compare American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2910 and Library of Congress, 19 FLRA No. 130 (1985), in which proposals concerning employee seat assignments were found to concern the methods and means of performing work within the meaning of 7106(b)(1) and outside the duty to bargain because the agency made the proper showings.

The Agency in this case has made no claim whatever, and it is not otherwise apparent, that the disputed proposals are inconsistent with law, Government-wide rule or regulation or with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Hence, the Authority is constrained to find Proposals 1-16, 18, 19 and 21-24 to be within the duty to bargain.

C. Union Proposals 17 and 20

Union Proposal 17 provides that the "adverse impact of space change on performance" will be reflected by certain specific adjustments in performance standards. Proposal 20 provides that productivity levels will be established prior to the space changes and that they will be measured and reduced at intervals after the changes. These proposals are to the same effect as Union Proposal 2 found nonnegotiable in National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated SSA Locals and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 17 FLRA 657 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration v. FLRA, No. 85-1601 (4th Cir. June 19, 1985). In that case, the proposal provided that time limits for certain tasks would "be adjusted to take into consideration the additional research and development time needed." The Authority held that as the proposal directly addressed the content of performance standards by requiring that time limits be adjusted, management's authority to establish these performance standards was substantively restricted. Thus, the Authority concluded in Department of Health and Human Services that the proposal interfered with the agency's right to assign work and direct employees pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Hence, for the reasons and cases cited in Department of Health and Human Services, Union Proposals 17 and 20 interfere with the rights to assign work and direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and are outside the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review as it relates to Union Proposals 17 and 20 be, and it hereby is, dismissed. IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union Proposals 1-16, 18, 19 and 21-24.*/

Issued, Washington, D.C., May 30, 1986.

APPENDIX

LOCAL 12 PROPOSALS TO ADDRESS THE ADVERSE IMPACT OF THE LMSA SPACE REDUCTION PROGRAM

1. Space changes in LMSA will not be implemented until full and final consultation and negotiations have occurred between the Department and the union.

2. Management will provide all information requested before completing negotiations with the union.

3. LMSA will limit its space reduction in fiscal 1984 to a 10% reduction by September 1984, as provided in GSA Regulation D-68.

4. In reducing space, the current individual space tables will be followed by LMSA (see below). Where there must be a reduction in individual allocations the space provided for higher grades (supervisors-managers-executives) will be reduced to meet the goals along with their adjoining reception areas and foyers. In no case will individual space below 150 square feet be reduced.

SPACE CATEGORIES	GSA ALLOWANCE (D) PER PERSON	(E) TOTAL SQ. FT.
I. OFFICE TYPE SPACE		Sq. Ft.
OFFICE USE SPACE
1. GS 1-06		60
2. GS 7-11 SUPERVISORY		100
3. GS 7-11 NON-SUPERVISORY		75
4. GS 12-13 SUPERVISORY		150
5. GS 12-13 NON-SUPERVISORY		100
6. GS 14-15 SUPERVISORY		225
7. GS 14-15 NON-SUPERVISORY		150
8. GS 16-17-18		300

Space for special equipment, files, reference books, door swing space and other special items is not included in this allowance.

5. To further the stated LMSA goal "THAT SPACE OCCUPIED BY LMSA EMPLOYEES SHALL BE ARRANGED AND MAINTAINED SO AS TO ASSURE A QUALITY WORKING ENVIRONMENT" the following measures are proposed:

   a) windows will not be blocked by private offices.

   b) the "executive core" approach will be followed with private offices located on the inner core.

   c) window space will be occupied by non-supervisors.

   d) space not by a window will be 10% greater to provide for an "equalization of desirability."

   e) meeting areas will not be included inside private offices and all meeting areas will be useable by all employees on a reservation basis.

   f) in every office a number of common areas will be provided for small meetings with clients, contractors, task forces, colleagues, or for collating.

   g) space for clericals or anyone whose space is not defined by walls or partitions will be shown on the plans by dotted lines and marked on the floor at the corners with carpet tacks in the rug.

   h) the practice of placing clericals in what are essentially passageways will not be followed.

6. Employees may choose whether they wish to have open space or closed space where these choices are posed. Employees will not be limited in their use of partitions in open space. Clericals may elect to have partitions.

7. Reasonable official time will be authorized for the Steward Committee to meet with employees in each office (space) to review management plans and solicit comments and develop alternatives, if appropriate.

8. In each office, after management has prepared a plan, copies will be provided the union and all employees.

9. Management will cancel unnecessary movement of offices from one location to another when the current office space is adequate to accomplish the mission.

10. Management will provide the union copies of all floor plans for changes at least 30 days prior to implementation of a space change. If floor plans are changed this will initiate another 30 day period.

11. Employees will be provided a written notice at least 10 working days in advance of a move. Packing boxes used to relocate employees, will be provided at least 5 working days in advance of the actual move.

12. In making plans, the prints will show space allowed for coat racks, special equipment, xerox machines, library shelves and other fixtures that are a part of the office.

13. The Labor Management Relations Committee will study the sound and ventilation problems of smaller space, including, but not limited to, the use of "white sound," sound deadening materials, drapes, comparative partitions and so forth.

14. The new space arrangements will include self-determination in each office space for smoking rules. Such rules may be initiated by the union or by the supervisor and will be established to the greatest extent possible by consent of all in the space and in the framework of Article 4, Sections 2 and 4. The right of any employee to a smoke free environment will be so addressed.

15. LMSA will provide Local 12 with an office for the use of the Steward Committee and bargaining unit employees.

16. New furniture, drapes, rugs and decorations will not be selected until the union has been provided catalogs and/or samples.

17. Adverse impact of space change on performance will be reflected in appropriate adjustments in performance standards, including a 25% increase in deadlines and a 25% reduction in objective minimum standards such as "correct 85% of the time."

18. Dividers will be noiseproof.

19. White sound will be re-introduced.

20. Current productivity levels will be established prior to space changes and will be again measured 1 year and 2 years after space changes. All productivity expectations and standards will be reduced accordingly.

21. New furniture selections will not be made until choices and catalogs are made available to the union and to employees.

22. No reduction in space will be implemented until new furniture is available.

23. Space changes in LMSA will be implemented gradually as need for moves and reorganizations occur.

24. All prints will show the number of square feet (by number) for each individual's space and be a clear copy.

8. In each division, after management [illegible] plan [illegible] will [illegible]

ORDER DENYING APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

On April 10, 1986, the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3614, AFL-CIO (AFGE) filed a timely application for review pursuant to section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Clarification of Unit in the above-named case. In its application for review, AFGE contends that compelling reasons exist within the meaning of section 2422.17(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for granting the application.*/

The Regional Director, citing Headquarters, Space Division, Air Force Systems Command, Department of the Air Force, Department of Defense, 9 FLRA 885 (1982) and Department of Treasury, Bureau of the Mint, U.S. Mint, Denver, Colorado, 6 FLRA 52 (1981), dismissed this petition without prejudice on the ground that the job classification sought to be clarified became vacant effective at the close of business on January 31, 1986.

> (c) The Authority may grant an application for review only where it appears that compelling reasons exist therefor. Accordingly, an application for review may be granted only upon one or more of the following grounds:

In its application for review, AFGE contends in essence that the Authority should change its policy of not clarifying a unit with respect to a vacant position because it allows an agency to control the timing of a clarification of unit determination by either making or keeping the position in question vacant. The Authority has consistently held, starting with Bureau of the Mint cited by the Regional Director, that it will not make eligibility determinations concerning positions which are vacant. As referenced by the Regional Director, the Authority has found that it can make an eligibility determination only by having before it record testimony by the incumbent or the incumbent's supervisor as to what duties actually are performed by the incumbent.

Upon consideration of AFGE's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application. Rather, the application in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on precedent and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

(1) That a substantial question of law or policy is raised because of (i) the absence of, or (ii) a departure from, Authority precedent;

(2) That there are extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration of an Authority policy;

(3) That the conduct of the hearing held or any ruling made in connection with the proceeding has resulted in prejudicial error; or

(4) That the Regional Director's decision on a substantial factual issue is clearly erroneous and such error prejudicially affects the rights of a party.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Clarification of Unit be, and it hereby is, denied.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Ronald Hoh filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

Evidence: Regional Director's Burden of Developing a Full and Complete Record

DIGEST NOTES

An agency's determination that an employee is a management official for purposes of coverage under the "merit pay" provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 has no impact on such employee's inclusion in or exclusion from a unit of exclusive recognition under § 7112. Accordingly, the Authority denied the activity's application for review of a FLRA Regional Director's determination that certain employees were not management officials within the meaning of § 7103(a)(11) to the extent that the activity alleged that the employees were management officials based on their merit pay status.

A hearing officer who is inquiring into representational matters must obtain a full and complete record upon which the Authority can make an appropriate decision. Where a factual record is deemed to be incomplete by the Regional Director, thus precluding a determination of one or more of the issues presented, it is incumbent upon the Regional Director to reopen the record for the purpose of obtaining the necessary evidence. Thus, the Authority viewed the Regional Director as having been in error when he failed to obtain sufficient facts in order to make a unit determination concerning whether or not certain individuals were supervisors. Accordingly, the Authority granted an application for review and remanded the case to the Regional Director for appropriate action.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator stated that the issue in the case was whether a prior interest arbitration award concerning nonproduction time for work-related travel was final and binding. He found that the interest arbitration award was not precluded by § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) and that the interest arbitration award was also final and binding because exceptions were not timely filed under § 7112(b). Accordingly, the arbitrator sustained the grievance and ordered that the agency "honor and implement" the disputed portion of the prior interest arbitration award.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(a) because the award was based on a disputed provision that was not negotiable and therefore not enforceable. The Authority has consistently ruled that negotiability disputes which arise between an agency and an exclusive representative under § 7117(c) must be resolved by the Authority as required by § 7105(a)(2)(E). An interest arbitrator is without authority to resolve such duty-to-bargain issues. Neither may an arbitrator resolve such issues in the guise of a grievance under the negotiated grievance procedure. Since the arbitrator resolved an issue relating to the obligation to bargain under the Statute, the award was deficient to that extent.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the second arbitration award was deficient because the prior interest arbitration award could not be enforced under § 7122(b) since it was contrary to § 7106(a). The agency did not dispute that exceptions to the interest arbitration award were not timely filed with the Authority and that the award was final and binding under the terms of § 7122(b). Instead, the agency asserted that a final award is enforceable under the Statute only to the extent it is consistent with law. Arguing that the disputed provision of the interest arbitration award was inconsistent with § 7106(a), the agency maintained that consequently it was unenforceable. However, the Authority concluded that the agency's second exception failed to establish that the award was deficient. It is well established that where a party seeks to challenge the propriety of an arbitration award, the appropriate mechanism for doing so is the filing of exceptions to that award under § 7122(a). Under § 7122(b), the interest arbitration award became final and binding when the agency failed to file timely exceptions and the agency was unequivocally obligated to take the actions required by that award. Thus in directing on the basis of § 7122(b) that the agency "honor and implement" the disputed portion of the interest arbitration award, the second award was fully consistent with law, and there was no basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator found that there was no specific reference to assignment of clean-up duties of the flight line area, the disputed matter, in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. However, the arbitrator found that management previously had agreed, in settlement of an unfair labor practice charge, to limit participation of civilian employees in picking up debris. Therefore the arbitrator sustained the grievance and directed the activity to limit the assignment of such work to civilian personnel.

As its exception, the agency contended that the award violated management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). The Authority has previously held in negotiability disputes that proposals which would prohibit management from assigning employees duties not related to their jobs, such as grounds maintenance work, are violative of § 7106(a)(2)(B). In this case, the Authority set aside the award as contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B).

A proposal that management will encourage employee and union representatives to work with supervisors to identify job performance elements and to set performance standards is negotiable. While a proposal requiring negotiations to establish performance standards and critical elements is outside an agency's duty to bargain because it directly interferes with the exercise of management's right to direct employees and to assign work under § 7106(A)(2)(A) and (B), a union must be given the opportunity to be represented at certain meetings between management and employees relating to the development and implementation of performance appraisal systems. Further, proposals which require the opportunity for union comment on proposed changes in performance standards and critical elements are within an agency's duty to bargain. In this case, the proposal as stated was ambiguious as to whether negotiation or merely an opportunity for union comment was required. However, since the record showed that the union, in its request for assistance to the Panel, explained that the proposal would only commit the agency to solicit "input" from employees and Union officials and specifically disclaimed "an attempt for such participation to preclude the supervisor from making final determinations relative to elements and standards, the Judge concluded that the proposal, in these circumstances, did not require negotiations on performance elements and standards but only required an opportunity for union comment. (proposal 1)

A proposal that the union will be provided copies of all standards in a manner which will allow sufficient time for review and discussion with employees, if such is warranted in the opinion of the union is negotiable. While a union's request for such information does have Privacy Act considerations, in such situations where, as here, the information sought is necessary and relevant to perfecting the union's representational responsibilities, the union's statutory right and need for the information substantially outweighs an employee's loss of privacy. Thus, the proposal does not violate the Privacy Act, as contended by the agency. (proposal 2)

A proposal that provides that details be given "equitable and proportionate weight" in performance ratings and that employees detailed or assigned to another position be given no less than 30 days of training before they can be evaluated or required to meet the standards for the position is negotiable. That portion of the proposal requiring equitable and proportionate weight for details in performance ratings, on its face, prescribes an arrangement which is fully consistent with and implements 5 C.F.R. 430.20(q) and (r) (1985), which provide that a performance rating must take into account an employee's performance on a detail which occurs during a rating period. The benefit to employees would simply be that their annual appraisal would include consideration of all the work they had done during the appraisal period. The agency still retains its management right to detail, to determine the length of the detail, to assign work on the current job or the detail, and to determine the priority of the work assigned. Nor does the proposal preclude management from evaluating employees or from setting particular standards for the work assigned. Therefore, the Authority concluded that the first paragraph of the proposal is a negotiable appropriate arrangement as any burden on management in these circumstances is unsubstantial in comparison to the benefit afforded to the affected employees. In respect to the second portion of the proposal, it has the same effect of delaying application of performance requirements for a period during which an employee is performing duties of a new position which has been previously found to be negotiable. (proposal 6).

A proposal that the union will be allowed participation on any committee and/or process established to select recipients for awards is nonnegotiable. The term "any committee and/or process" could include any committee or process established to select employees for performance based awards, and to that extent, the proposal is nonnegotiable. Thus, under existing precedent, it directly interferes with management's reserved rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B), even if the union's role is limited in observation. (proposal 7)

A proposal that an employee with a minimally acceptable rating or higher will be screened for basic promotion eligibility involves only the screening of employees and is, therefore, negotiable. If the proposal required selection based on the lower standard, it would have been inconsistent with management rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Here, the proposal only proposes a procedure that the agency will use when it determines which employees are eligible for promotion, but will not compel the agency to promote such employees. (Proposal 8)

A proposal that seeks to restrict management's ability to remove or demote an employee is nonnegotiable. The union's intent here was to include "all employees." Since it is clear that the proposal would include within the parties' negotiated grievance procedures those disputes regarding the termination of probationary employees, the entire proposal is, thus, outside the duty to bargain. (proposal 9).

A proposal that forms documenting ratings of unacceptable but not accompanied by a demotion or removal recommendation will be kept for one year then destroyed is negotiable. Since there was no basis, alleged or established, for finding the proposal nonnegotiable, it was an otherwise negotiable procedure which management is to use when an employee receives an unacceptable rating. (proposal 10)

A proposal that an employee who believes any performance standard does not meet the criteria contained in this agreement may file a grievance under the parties collective bargaining agreement is nonnegotiable. Since the union's intent with regard to the proposal was to provide the union and/or employee an opportunity to challenge the validity of performance standards, rather than of their application, through the negotiated grievance procedures, the proposal was outside the duty to bargain. (proposal 11) Accordingly, the Authority, having found that union proposals 1, 2, 6, 8 and 10 were negotiable, concluded, as did the Judge, that the agency's implementation of Air Force Regulation 40-452 (AFR 40-452) without bargaining, as requested, violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5). The Authority also adopted the Judge's conclusion that a status quo ante remedy was not warranted in this case upon weighing the nature and circumstances of the violation against thge degree of disruption in the agency's operations.

The compelling need for an agency's rule or regulation may be decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding. The agency had alleged that the proposals conflicted with AFR 40-452, raising a regulatory bar to negotiating on the union's proposals, However, it did not raise or argue the existence of a compelling need for AFR 40-452 as a reason for refusing to bargain with the union or as a defense to the unfair labor practice allegations in this case. While the Judge found that compelling need could only be resolved by the Authority in a negotiability proceeding, he held that as one of the union's proposals conflicted with Air Force Regulation 40-452, it was therefore nonnegotiable. The Authority concluded that since the agency never even asserted a compelling need existed for AFR 40-452 so as to excuse it from the duty to bargain, such obligation existed unless there was merit to any of the agency's other defenses.

A failure or refusal to negotiate in violation of the Statute assumes that there was a proper request to negotiate. An agency's mere knowledge of the union's modified proposals is not a sufficient basis to find a violation; there must be a clearly communicated request to bargain and a refusal to do so. In this case, prior to the agency's implementation of AFR 40-452, the union requested assistance from the Federal Services Impasses Panel (Panel) concerning the disputed proposals. The union, in its reply to agency's position submitted to the Panel, amended the language of proposals 3 and 5. Although the agency was served with the union's reply which was submitted to the Panel, it was never asked by the union to bargain over these proposals. After the Panel declined to assert jurisdiction over the instant matter, the union, months after the agency's implementation of AFR 40-452, requested the agency's position on the modified proposals. Thus, the Authority concluded that, in these circumstances, there was never a timely request to bargain concerning the modified proposals and therefore that portion of the complaint relating thereto was dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the activity had just and sufficient cause for the disputed 3-day suspension of the grievant. However, he found that the grievant's rights were violated when the grievant's request for administrative time to prepare his case was denied. The arbitrator found that the negotiated grievance procedures of the parties' agreement covered all matters grievable under § 7121 and provided that employees would be allowed a reasonable amount of official time to present their grievances. The arbitrator concluded that the subject matter of the dispute met the broad definition of "grievance" under § 7103(a)(9) for which official time was allowable under the agreement. As a remedy, the grievant was awarded four hours of pay.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

In its exceptions, the agency contended that the award of four hours pay was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, because it, in effect, required the retroactive payment of four hours of overtime pay to the grievant and the findings necessary for such a payment under the Back Pay Act were not made. The agency also argued that the award was contrary to § 7131(d) because official time can only be granted in circumstances where the employee would otherwise be in a duty status and the grievant in this case performed the case preparation work on his own time during nonduty hours.

The Authority found that the agency failed to establish that the award was deficient. Where official time, authorized by provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with § 7131(d), is wrongfully denied and the covered activities are thereafter performed on nonduty time, § 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. Also, the Authority has previously determined that performance of representational activities on nonduty time is not overtime work. Therefore, the Authority concluded, contrary to the agency, that since the grievant's performance on nonduty time of case preparation work for which official time should have been granted under § 7131(d)(2) was not overtime work, the arbitrator did not award retroactive overtime pay and his award was not contrary to the Back Pay Act. Finally, the Authority held held that § 7131(d), unlike § 7131(a), (b) and (c), does not require that an employee would otherwise have been in a duty status in order to be entitled to official time.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator ruled that the grievance was not arbitrable under the terms of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure and that the merits of the grievance would not be considered. In its exception, the union contended that the award was deficient because it was incomplete, ambiguous, and contradictory so as to make implementation impossible. The Authority has previously held that to find an award deficient on this basis, there must be a showing that the award is ambiguous or contradictory, or that implementation is impossible, because of the award being unclear in its meaning and effect or because of the award being too uncertain in its effect to be sustained. In this case, the union failed to make the necessary showing. Instead, the union's exception constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's determination that there had not been compliance with the procedural requirements of the negotiated grievance procedure of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Such disagreement does not provide a basis for finding an award deficient.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT

ORDER DENYING IN PART AND GRANTING IN PART THE ACTIVITY'S APPLICATION FOR REVIEW

On April 1, 1986, the U.S. Department of Energy, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (Activity), filed a timely application for review, pursuant to section 2422.17(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, seeking to set aside in part the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Clarification of Unit in the above-named case. In support thereof, the Activity contends that compelling reasons exist within the meaning of section 2422.17(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for granting the application with regard to the Regional Director's determination that 40 employees should be included within the unit and his refusal to pass on the unit status of 6 disputed individuals on the basis that the record contains insufficient evidence as to the duties they perform.

Upon consideration of the Activity's application for review, including all arguments in support thereof, the Authority concludes that no compelling reason exists for granting the application with respect to the 40 employees that the Regional Director found should be included in the unit.[1] The 40 employees included 27 alleged to be management officials, 10 alleged to be confidential employees or engaged in personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity, and 3 alleged to be supervisors. With respect to those employees alleged to be management officials, the Activity argues that extraordinary circumstances exist here because the Regional Director's ruling that certain employees are not management officials within the meaning of section 7103(a)(11) of the Statute will affect their merit pay status. This argument is without merit. As the Authority ruled in December 1980, an agency's determination that an employee is a management official for purposes of coverage under the "merit pay" provisions of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978 has no impact on such employee's inclusion in or exclusion from a unit of exclusive recognition under section 7112 of the Statute. Interpretation and Guidance, 4 FLRA 754 (1980). The application as to all of the included employees in essence expresses mere disagreement with the Regional Director's findings which are based on Authority precedent and have not been shown to be clearly erroneous or to have prejudicially affected the rights of any party.

[1] As the Activity in its application for review does not seek review of the Regional Director's findings that 35 employees should be excluded from the bargaining unit, these findings are not at issue and have not been considered herein.

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2422.17(f)(3) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the application for review of the Regional Director's Decision and Order on Petition for Clarification of Unit, to the extent that it challenges his inclusion of 40 employees in the unit, be, and it hereby is, denied.

However, the Authority finds that a compelling reason exists because of a departure from Authority precedent within the meaning of section 2422.17(c)(1) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations for granting review of that part of the Activity's application for review which challenges the Regional Director's failure to rule on the alleged supervisory status of six named individuals due to insufficient record evidence as to the duties they perform.[2] The Authority, in section 2422.16 of its Rules and Regulations, has specifically provided that in representation cases such as the one involved here, "the Regional Director shall issue a Decision and Order determining the appropriate unit, directing an election or dismissing a petition, or making other disposition of the matters before the Regional Director." Further, section 2422.9(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides: "[I]t shall be the duty of the Hearing Officer to inquire fully into all matters in issue and the Hearing Officer shall obtain a full and complete record upon which the Authority can make an appropriate decision. . . ." Section 2422.9(b) further provides in part that "[h]earings under this section are considered investigatory and not adversary. Their purpose is to develop a full and complete factual record[.]" These provisions codify the well-established principle that the purpose of representation proceedings such as this one is to resolve the issues presented in a non-adversary environment where no party has the burden of proof but where all evidence necessary and relevant to the disposition of the issues must be developed in the record. The Authority has emphasized many times the need for development of a full and complete record in order to decide disputed factual issues. See, for example, the Authority's orders remanding similar cases to Regional Directors for that purpose in Department of Health and Human Services, Region IV, Atlanta, Georgia, Case No. 4-CU-30009 (March 30, 1984), and Red River Army Depot, Texarkana, Texas, Case No. 6-RO-30007 (April 6, 1984).

[2] As set forth in the Regional Director's Decision (note 14), the six individuals are: Anthony R. Jiorle, Financial Analyst, GM-01160-14, George Shriver, III, Financial Analyst, GM-01160-14, Chester F. Maruszewski, Staff Accountant, GM-00510-14, Jeanne M. Zabel, Public Utility Specialist, GM-01130-14, Russell R. Glasgow, Jr., Regulatory Gas Utility Specialist, GM-01101-14, and Richard J. Marek, Regulatory Gas Utility Specialist, GM-01101-14.

The responsibility for resolving these issues has been entrusted to the Authority's Regional Directors, whose representatives, the Hearing Officers in particular representation proceedings, have the duty to obtain the evidence necessary to enable the Regional Directors to decide the issues presented. Where a factual record is deemed to be incomplete by the Regional Director, thus precluding a determination of one or more of the issues presented, it is incumbent upon the Regional Director to reopen the record for the purpose of obtaining the necessary evidence. The Regional Director may not simply dismiss the petition for lack of evidence. Thus, the Authority views the Regional Director's failure to obtain sufficient facts in order to make a unit determination as to the six individuals at issue to be in error.

Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the Activity's application for review, to the extent that it challenges the Regional Director's failure to rule on the supervisory status of six named individuals, is granted, and such matters are remanded to the Regional Director for appropriate action and determinations consistent with the above.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 2, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Robert Bennett Lubic filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerns the Agency's refusal to comply with a portion of an interest arbitration award of Arbitrator Jerome Ross (Ross award). The portion of the Ross award in dispute directed that a provision for nonproduction time for work-related travel be included in the parties' Memorandum of Understanding on the impact and implementation of a relocation of professional employees. The Ross award also directed that the provision be included in the parties' existing collective bargaining agreement and incorporated into the parties' next collective bargaining agreement. The Agency had contended that such a provision was not within the duty to bargain because it interfered with management rights and the Agency had filed exceptions to the Ross award with the Authority. The Agency's exceptions, however, were dismissed by the Authority as untimely filed. Patent and Trademark Office and Patent Office Professional Association, 14 FLRA 61 (1984). Subsequently, the Union filed the grievance that was submitted to arbitration protesting the Agency's refusal to comply with the Ross award. Arbitrator Lubic stated the essential issue to be whether the disputed portion of the Ross award was final and binding. He ruled that the disputed provision was final and binding because contrary to the arguments of the Agency, the provision was not precluded by management's right in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to establish performance standards. The Arbitrator additionally ruled that the Ross award was final and binding under the terms of the Statute. He noted under section 7122(b) that when exceptions are not timely filed to an arbitrator's award, the award is final and binding and that "[a]n agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award." The Arbitrator explained that what this meant in this case was that the Agency was to take the actions required by the disputed portion of the Ross award. Accordingly, as his award, Arbitrator Lubic sustained the grievance and directed that the Agency "honor and implement" the disputed portion of the Ross award.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency essentially contends that to the extent the award of Arbitrator Lubic is based on the disputed provision of the Ross award being negotiable, the award is contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute. In support, the Agency primarily argues that contrary to the determination of Arbitrator Lubic, the disputed provision is not negotiable and is not enforceable. The Agency further maintains that arbitrators are not authorized under the Statute to resolve issues concerning the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has consistently ruled that negotiability disputes which arise between an agency and an exclusive representative under section 7117(c) of the Statute must be resolved by the Authority as required by section 7105(a)

(2)(E). Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio and American Federation of Government Employees, Council of Locals, No. 214, 18 FLRA No. 81 (1985); Louis A. Johnson Veterans Administration Medical Center, Clarksburg, West Virginia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2384, 15 FLRA 347 (1984). Thus, the Authority has held on this basis that an interest arbitrator acting pursuant to a direction of the Federal Service Impasses Panel is without authority to resolve such duty-to-bargain issues. AFLC, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base. The Authority has also held that such issues likewise cannot be resolved by an arbitrator in the guise of a grievance under the negotiated grievance procedure of the collective bargaining agreement between the exclusive representative and the agency. Federal Correctional Institution, Texarcana, Texas, Federal Prison System and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2459, Texarcana, Texas, 19 FLRA No. 26 (1985); Louis A. Johnson VA Medical Center. In this case, by finding the disputed provision of the Ross award to be final and binding because he determined contrary to the arguments of the Agency that the provision was negotiable, Arbitrator Lubic necessarily resolved an issue relating to the obligation to bargain under the Statute. However, with the Agency having consistently objected to this provision as not being negotiable by reason of section 7106(a) of the Statute, Arbitrator Lubic was not authorized under the Statute to resolve such an issue and his award is deficient to the extent that such resolution constitutes the basis for his award that the Ross award was final and binding.*/ See Federal Correctional Institution, Texarcana, Texas; Department of Housing and Urban Development and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 476, AFL-CIO, 18 FLRA No. 95 (1985).

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency argues that the award is also deficient to the extent the Ross award was enforced on the basis of section 7122(b) of the Statute. The Agency does not dispute that exceptions to the Ross award were not timely filed with the Authority and that the award is final and binding under the terms of section 7122(b) of the Statute. Instead, the Agency asserts that a final award is enforceable under the Statute only to the extent it is consistent with law. Arguing that the disputed provision of the Ross award is inconsistent with section 7106(a) of the Statute, the Agency maintains that consequently it is unenforceable.

*/ In determining that Arbitrator Lubic was without authority to decide the negotiability issue in this matter, the Authority makes no determination on whether the disputed provision of the Ross award interferes with management rights under the section 7106(a) of the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that the Agency's second exception fails to establish that the award is deficient. Contrary to the argument of the Agency, it is well established that where a party seeks to challenge the propriety of an arbitration award, the appropriate mechanism for doing so, as Congress clearly intended, is the filing of exceptions to that award under section 7122(a) of the Statute. United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 15 FLRA 151 (1984), aff'd sub nom. Department of the Air Force v. FLRA, 775 F.2d 727 (6th Cir. 1985). As the Authority recognized in AFLC, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, 15 FLRA 151, when a party fails to timely file exceptions to an arbitration award, the award becomes final and binding and the agency must take such actions as are required by the award. As explained by the court in Department of the Air Force, "[s]ince the award becomes final and must be implemented if the parties fail to file an exception within the required period, the necessary implication is that a party can no longer challenge the award by any means. It has become final for all purposes." 775 F.2d at 735. In this case, under the terms of section 7122(b), the Ross award became final and binding and the Agency for all purposes was unequivocally obligated to take the actions required by that award. Thus, in directing on the basis of section 7122(b) of the Statute that the Agency "honor and implement" the disputed portion of the Ross award, the award of Arbitrator Lubic is fully consistent with law, and no basis is provided in this respect for finding the award deficient.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the award is modified to provide as follows:

> The grievance in this matter is sustained. As a result of section 7122(b) of the Statute, the Agency shall honor and implement Section II of the Ross award.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Robert H. Mount filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator arose when management directed certain civilian employees to pick up debris from the flight line area. The Activity claimed that the task was an important safety measure to protect aircraft and lives and, moreover, was provided for in the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Union claimed that the performance of the clean-up task by the employees involved was unnecessary and was also contrary to the parties' agreement. The Arbitrator found that there was no specific reference to the task in the parties' collective bargaining agreement and that the parties disagreed as to the intent of their agreement with respect to the task. However, the Arbitrator further found that management previously had agreed, in settlement of an unfair labor practice charge in 1981, to limit participation of civilian employees in picking up debris. The Arbitrator essentially concluded that management was still bound by the settlement. The Arbitrator therefore sustained the grievance and directed the Activity to limit assignment of the work in question for civilian personnel.

III. EXCEPTION

As its exception, the Agency contends that the award violates management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSION

The Authority has repeatedly recognized that the plain language of section 7106 provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70, 79 (1981), aff'd sub nom. AFGE Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F. 2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Therefore, the Authority has consistently held that an arbitration award may not interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under section 7106 or result in the substitution of the arbitrator's judgment for that of the agency in the exercise of those rights. U.S. Customs Service, Laredo, Texas and Chapter 145, National Treasury Employees Union, 17 FLRA 68 (1985); American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3258 and U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, 21 FLRA No. 56, slip op. at 4 (1986). Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, in particular, reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. Encompassed within this right is the discretion to determine the particular employees to whom work will be assigned. Department of the Air Force, Carswell Air Force Base and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1364, 19 FLRA No. 51, slip op. at 2 (1986); Marine Corps Logistic Base, Albany, Georgia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2317, 19 FLRA No. 72, slip op. at 2 (1985). Futhermore, the Authority has held in negotiability disputes that proposals which would prohibit management from assigning employees duties not related to their jobs, such as grounds maintenance work, are violative of section 7106(a)(2)(B). Association of Civilian Technicians and State of Georgia National Guard, 2 FLRA 581 (1980).

In this case, the Authority similarly finds that the award conflicts with management's right to assign work. By precluding the assignment of debris pick-up duties to civilian employees, the Arbitrator has substituted his judgment for that of management as to whom that work will be assigned. Therefore, the Authority finds that the award is deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, based on the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is set aside.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 4, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions and cross-exceptions filed to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The complaint alleged that the Respondent, Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute[1] by failing and refusing to negotiate in good faith with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214 (Union), its employees' exclusive representative, by declaring nonnegotiable certain Union proposals regarding the implementation and impact of Air Force Regulation 40-452 (AFR 40-452), entitled "Performance Appraisal System," and by unilaterally implementing that regulation on or about July 1, 1981, without bargaining with the Union concerning eleven (11) specific proposals which the General Counsel alleges to be negotiable. The Respondent asserts that the proposals are nonnegotiable for a variety of reasons as set forth in the Judge's Decision. The Judge found several of the proposals to be negotiable and therefore concluded that the refusal to bargain and unilateral implementation of a performance appraisal system in the circumstances violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

[1] Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) provides:

§ 7116. Unfair labor practices

(a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--

(1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;

. . . .

(5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter[.]

II. Facts

From March 4 to March 17, 1981,[2/] the Respondent and the Union met several times in negotiations concerning proposals relating to the impact and implementation of AFR 40-452. The parties submitted proposals and counter-proposals, and met with a mediator. On March 17, the parties reached impasse on 15 Union proposals. On March 27, the Union submitted a request for assistance to the Federal Service Impasses Panel (the Panel). On this same date, the Respondent sent the Union a letter stating that "[b]ecause of the statutory requirements that the Performance Appraisal System be fully implemented by 1 October 1981, we intend to begin implementing our final offer on 1 June 1981. Between now and 1 June 1981 we will train supervisors and managers. On 1 June or later we will begin implementation with bargaining unit employees in accordance with our final offer." The parties stipulated that the Respondent began implementation on July 1 or later.

During its initial investigation into the parties' impasse, the Panel asked the Respondent to state, in writing, its position on why there was an impasse. The Respondent declared that the parties had reached impasse because the 15 Union proposals were nonnegotiable, citing a different rationale for each. On May 13, in a brief to the Panel, the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE), on behalf of the Union, replied to the Respondent's allegations of nonnegotiability. In its reply, AFGE amended the language of Union Proposals 3 and 5, and modified the stated intent of other proposals. Although the Respondent was served with AFGE's reply which was submitted to the Panel, it was never asked by AFGE or the Union to bargain over these modified proposals. On June 5, the Panel declined to assert jurisdiction because the Respondent had raised a "threshold" question involving negotiability.

2/ All references are to 1981 unless otherwise indicated.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that six of the proposals over which the Respondent refused to negotiate were negotiable, and therefore concluded that the refusal to bargain and subsequent unilateral implementation violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. He also denied the Union's request for a status quo ante remedy. The Judge recommended that the Respondent be ordered to cease and desist from the unfair labor practices found, and to take certain affirmative action, including negotiation with the Union, upon request, over the proposals found to be negotiable.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent asserted that the proposals over which it refused to bargain are nonnegotiable on the basis of various arguments discussed below. It also contended that some of the proposals conflict with an agency regulation, but has not raised or argued that a compelling need exists for the regulation alleged to conflict with the proposals. The Respondent also alleged that its unilateral implementation of changes in its performance appraisal system pursuant to its last best offer before impasse was appropriate and necessary to be accomplished by a specific date, and that it could delay no longer.

The General Counsel excepted to the findings of the Judge that certain Union proposals were nonnegotiable.

V. Analysis

A. Union Proposals 3 and 5

As noted above, the complaint listed 11 of the 15 Union proposals as being negotiable. The complaint asserted as unfair labor practices the Respondent's refusal to bargain over these 11 proposals including Union Proposals 3 and 5 as modified by AFGE in its May 13 submission to the Panel. The question here is whether the Respondent violated the Statute by failing to negotiate over certain Union proposals with respect to the procedures which the Respondent would observe in exercising its authority with regard to changes in its performance appraisal system and its implementation of such performance appraisal system on or about July 1. A failure or refusal to negotiate in violation of the Statute assumes that there was a proper request to negotiate. As to Proposals 3 and 5, the Authority finds, contrary to the Judge, that the Respondent's mere knowledge of the Union's modified proposals is not a sufficient basis to find a violation; there must be a clearly communicated request to bargain and a refusal to do so. The record is clear that the Respondent never was requested to negotiate over the two modified Union proposals before it implemented its last best offer on or about July 1. Thus, the modifications were made when AFGE submitted them to the Panel on May 13 during the Panel's initial investigation of the case (over which it ultimately declined to assert jurisdiction). Only after the Respondent implemented its modified performance appraisal system did AFGE on September 14 ask the Respondent for its position on the negotiability of the modified proposals. Under these circumstances, the AFGE's submission of the modified proposals to the Panel in May did not constitute a request that the Respondent negotiate over the modified proposals. As to the AFGE's request for a negotiability determination on September 14, such request was made months after the Respondent's implementation of the revised performance appraisal system and, therefore, if considered a request to bargain, came after the alleged unfair labor practice occurred in this case. Thus, in these circumstances, it cannot be considered a timely request to bargain.[3] Therefore, the Authority shall dismiss those portions of the complaint dealing with Union Proposals 3 and 5 which never were properly before the Respondent for negotiation as it relates to the complaint in this case.

[3] The evidence shows that, after the Panel refused to assert jurisdiction on June 5, the local parties resumed negotiations over AFR 40-452 in an effort to overcome the negotiability questions, but were unable to reach any significant agreement. In a September 4 letter to AFGE, the Union president stated, "[W]e were unable to reach any significant agreement on the outstanding issues and as a result we are in the same position as when these issues were submitted to FSIP." (Emphasis added.) The Union president further added that "[t]he issues remain essentially the same

B. Compelling need

1. The Judge's Decision

In deciding whether Union Proposals 8 and 10 were negotiable, the Judge considered whether they conflicted with an agency rule or regulation (in this case AFR 40-452), and determined that Proposal 8, susceptible to varying interpretations, was not incompatible or irreconcilable with the regulation, but that Proposal 10 was incompatible and irreconcilable with the regulation. He therefore found Proposal 8 to be negotiable on the merits, and found Proposal 10 to be nonnegotiable because it conflicted with AFR 40-452. In neither case did the Judge consider whether there was a compelling need for the regulation asserted to be incompatible with the Union proposal, although he noted that agencies are not obligated to bargain over matters encompassed by their regulations unless it is first determined under section 7117(b) of the Statute[4] that no compelling need exists for the regulation. In this regard, he noted that the Authority had not yet addressed whether a compelling need issue could be resolved in an unfair labor as outlined in those documents submitted to your office . . . by letters of transmittal dated March 31, 1981 and April 30, 1981." Thus, it appears that the local parties were still bargaining over the unmodified proposals after implementation, and the record further indicates that the Respondent was not requested to bargain over the modified proposals, which are the subject of the complaint in this case, inasmuch as the issues remained essentially the same on September 4 as prior to the May 13 AFGE submission.

> . . . . .
> (b)(1) In any case of collective bargaining in which an exclusive representative alleges that no compelling need exists for any rule or regulation referred to in subsection (a)(3) of this section practice proceeding, but concluded that absent the Authority's resolution of that question his opinion was that compelling need could be resolved by the Authority only in a negotiability proceeding. The record indicates, as noted below, that the Respondent did not argue the existence of a compelling need for the regulation to the Judge.

2. Subsequent case law

After the Judge issued his Decision in this case, the Authority determined that a compelling need issue can be decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding. Defense Logistics Agency (Cameron Station, Virginia) et al., 12 FLRA 412 (1983).[5] Thus, agency management may raise compelling > which is then in effect and which governs any matter at issue in such collective bargaining, the Authority shall determine under paragraph (2) of this subsection, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Authority, whether such a compelling need exists.

> (2) For the purpose of this section, a compelling need shall be determined not to exist for any rule or regulation only if--
> (A) the agency, or primary national subdivision, as the case may be, which issued the rule or regulation informs the Authority in writing that a compelling need for the rule or regulation does not exist; or

[5] The United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit affirmed the Authority's interpretation of the Statute, but remanded the matter to the Authority for the sole purpose of permitting the petitioners to present evidence as to whether there existed a compelling need for the particular regulation at issue. Defense Logistics Agency, et al. v. FLRA, 754 F.2d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1985). On April 22, 1985, the Authority remanded the proceeding to the Chief Administrative Law Judge for disposition consistent with the direction of the court. Thereafter, on March 31, 1986, the complaint was withdrawn.

need for an agency regulation as an affirmative defense to an allegation that it unlawfully refused to bargain before implementing its new or revised regulation. In addition, the agency raising compelling need as an affirmative defense is required to come forward with affirmative support for such assertion, just as it would have the burden of establishing compelling need in a negotiability proceeding. See Aberdeen Proving Ground, Department of the Army, 21 FLRA No. 100 (1986).[6]

3. Discussion of compelling need in this case

The record discloses that the Respondent did not raise or argue the existence of a compelling need for AFR 40-452 as a reason for refusing to bargain with the Union or as a defense to the unfair labor practice allegations in this case. Rather, the Respondent consistently asserted that since it had claimed the proposals were nonnegotiable because they conflicted with AFR 40-452, raising a regulatory bar, it was up to the Union or the General Counsel to assert and establish the absence of a compelling need. The Respondent contends that it needs only to show a conflict between the proposal and the regulation, and that the burden of proof is on the General Counsel to show that a proposal is negotiable. The Authority disagrees. Section 2424.11 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations states that "[a] compelling need exists for an agency rule or regulation concerning any condition of employment when the agency demonstrates that the rule or regulation meets one or more of the . . . criteria[.]" (Emphasis added.) Thus, as the Respondent never even asserted that a compelling need existed for AFR 40-452 so as to excuse it from the duty to bargain, such obligation existed unless there is merit to any of the Respondent's other defenses.

[6] The Authority notes that the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit recently reversed an Authority decision on this same issue, U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 13 FLRA 707 (1984), reversed sub nom. United States Army Engineer Center v. FLRA, 762 F.2d 409 (4th Cir. 1985), rehearing denied (July 26, 1985). In the Authority's Supplemental Decision and Order in that case, U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 19 FLRA No. 92 (1985), the Authority stated it "accepts the Court's opinion as the law of the case and, consistent with that opinion, shall order that the complaint in Case No. 3-CA-20133 be dismissed." Slip op. at 2.

C. Analysis of Negotiability Issues

The Authority adopts the Judge's conclusion that Union Proposals 1 and 2 are negotiable, and that Proposal 4 is nonnegotiable, all for the reasons he stated. We will now address the negotiability of the remaining disputed proposals.

Proposal 6.[7]

> Details shall be given equitable and proportionate weight in the overall performance rating as work performed in the employee's actual position. When an employee has been officially detailed to another position, the employee's performance on the detail shall be appraised in writing so that the employee's records reflect this annual appraisal. Details of six months or more will be given equal weight in the overall rating. Accordingly, details of a lesser period will be given an equitable, proportionate amount of weight in the overall rating.
> Employees who are detailed or assigned to another position will not be required to meet the standards of this position until they have received the necessary training, guidance, and etc. This training period will be for no less than 30 days. An employee's evaluation will only commence after the training period and the supervisor has fully discussed the performance standards, critical elements, and the performance expected of the employee.

The first paragraph of Union Proposal 6 would, under existing precedent, substantively interfere with management's right to direct and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute.[8] See American

[8] Section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) provides:

§ 7106. Management rights

Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 26 and U.S. Department of Justice, 13 FLRA 578 (1984). However, the Union has argued that this proposal was intended to provide an "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute for employees whose annual performance rating would be affected because of details during their rating period. In its recent decision in National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986), the Authority adopted an "excessive interference" test for dealing with proposed appropriate arrangements and addressed the factors it would consider in making its determination. We find that the proposal here, on its face, clearly prescribes an arrangement for employees being appraised who have been detailed during their rating period. We find that the proposal only provides that details be given "equitable and proportionate weight" in the performance ratings. It appears that the proposal is fully consistent with and implements 5 C.F.R. 430.204(q) and (r) (1985), which provide that a performance rating must take into account an employee's performance on a detail which occurs during a

> Agencies shall provide written critical elements and performance standards to employees as soon as possible but no later than 30 calendar days after the beginning of a detail or temporary promotion within the same agency when the detail or temporary promotion is expected to last 120 calendar days or longer. Performance ratings on critical elements must be prepared for these details and temporary promotions and must be considered in deriving an employee's next annual performance rating.
> When an employee is or had been detailed or temporarily assigned outside of the agency, an annual performance rating must be prepared if the employee has served for the minimum appraisal period inside the agency.
> (1) If an employee has not served in the agency for the established minimum appraisal period, but has served for the minimum appraisal period in another organization, the agency must make a reasonable effort to obtain appraisal information from the other organization sufficient to prepare an annual performance rating.

10/ See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2849 and Office of Personnel Management, New York Regional Office, 7 FLRA 571 (1982), wherein the Authority found negotiable a proposal that would require an employee's performance standard to be consistent with the employee's duties.

management right to detail, to determine the length of the detail, to assign work on the current job or the detail, and to determine the priority of the work assigned. Nor does the proposal preclude management from evaluating employees or from setting particular standards for the work assigned. Therefore, the Authority concludes that the first paragraph of Union Proposal 6 is a negotiable appropriate arrangement as any burden on management in these circumstances is unsubstantial in comparison to the benefit afforded to the affected employees. In conclusion, the Authority finds that it does not excessively interfere with management rights.

Turning to the second paragraph of Union Proposal 6, the Authority finds this portion of the proposal negotiable. In this regard, it has the same effect of delaying application of performance requirements for a period during which an employee is performing duties of a new position as the proposals the Authority found negotiable in American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, Local 2910, AFL-CIO and Library of Congress, 15 FLRA 541 (1984) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated SSA Locals and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 17 FLRA 657 (1985) (Union Proposal 1), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration v. FLRA, No. 85-1601 (4th Cir. June 19, 1985). Therefore, for the reasons set forth in those cases, the proposal is negotiable.

Proposal 7.

> The union will be allowed participation on any committee and/or process established to select recipients for awards.

The Authority finds that Union Proposal 7 would, under existing precedent, directly interfere with management's reserved rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute, even if the Union's role is limited to observation. See Department of the Navy, Northern Division, Naval Facilities Engineering Command, 19 FLRA No. 86 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1430 v. FLRA, No. 85-1648 (D.C. Cir. October 9, 1985). Thus, the term "any committee and/or process" could include any committee or process established to select employees for performance based awards, and to that extent the proposal is nonnegotiable.

Proposal 8.

> An employee with a minimally acceptable rating or higher will be screened for basic promotion eligibility.

The Authority finds Proposal 8 to be negotiable since it only involves the screening of employees. If the proposal required selection based on the lower standard, it would have been inconsistent with management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and, thus, nonnegotiable. The proposal here only proposes a procedure that the Respondent will use when it determines which employees are eligible for promotion, but will not compel the Respondent to promote such employees. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 72 and Internal Revenue Service, Austin Service Center, 11 FLRA 271 (1983) (Union Proposal 2).

Proposal 9.

> Under no circumstances will an employee be demoted or removed without the following steps being taken by the employer:
> 1. The agency shall direct maximum efforts to improve an employee's performance through counselling, training, reassignment, job restructuring, development of suitable incentives and setting short term specific goals to be accomplished within a set time limit before considering whether to initiate procedures to demote or separate the employee.
> 2. Following the above, and after a reasonable amount of time has been given to demonstrate acceptable performance and the employee has not improved further action might be warranted. A "reasonable amount of time" is to be defined on a case-by-case basis by the supervisor, employee and union steward. The supervisor at all times should assist the employee in improving his or her performance.

The Union's intent with regard to Proposal 9 was to include "all employees" under its provisions. The Union would not agree with management's counterproposal to change the word "employee" to "non-probationary employees." Since it is clear that the provisions of Proposal 9 would include within the parties' negotiated grievance procedures those disputes regarding the termination of probationary employees, the Authority finds the entire proposal nonnegotiable. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Immigration and Naturalization Service Council and U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 8 FLRA 347 (1982), rev'd sub nom. U.S. Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service v. FLRA, 709 F.2d 724 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Further, as this proposal arose in an unfair labor practice proceeding, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon whether the provisions of Proposal 9 would be negotiable for non-probationary employees.

Proposal 10.

> Forms documenting ratings of unacceptable but not accompanied by a demotion or removal recommendation will be kept for one year then destroyed.

Since no issue has been raised as to whether there exists a compelling need for AFR 40-452, as noted above, and no other basis for finding the proposal nonnegotiable has been alleged or established, the Authority finds Proposal 10 to be negotiable inasmuch as it relates to a procedure which management is to use when an employee receives an unacceptable rating.

Proposal 11.

> An employee who believes any performance standard does not meet the criteria contained in this agreement may file a grievance under Article 6 of the MLA.

The negotiability of this proposal hinges on the Union's intent. The question is whether it meant to authorize employees to grieve the performance standards themselves or only their application. Relying on the Union's intent at the time the parties were at impasse,[11] the Authority finds the Union's intent with regard to this proposal was to provide "the union and/or employee an opportunity to challenge the validity of performance standards through the negotiated grievance procedure." As the proposal would authorize grievances concerning the standards themselves rather than their application, the Authority concludes that Proposal 11 is nonnegotiable. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981), affirmed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 461 U.S. 926 (1983).

[11] Any other explanation of intent occurring after the Union's submission to the Panel is not germane to this proceeding. The AFGE's May 13 submission was not a proper bargaining request to the Respondent in terms of its modified Proposals 3 and 5, as discussed earlier, or in terms of its change of intent with regard to the Union's proposals.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties[12] and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order as consistent with this decision.

Therefore, having found that Union Proposals 1, 2, 6, 8 and 10 are negotiable, the Authority concludes that the Respondent's implementation of AFR 40-452 without bargaining on these proposals as requested, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. See Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Regional Office (Buffalo, New York), 10 FLRA 167 (1982).

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to meet and negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214, the employees' exclusive representative, over negotiable proposals with respect to the procedures which the Agency will observe in exercising its authority with regard to any change in the Agency's performance appraisal system and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of any right assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214, the employees' exclusive representative, meet and negotiate with such representative concerning any of the proposals found negotiable herein, submitted in connection with implemented changes in the Agency's performance appraisal system.

(b) Post at all of its facilities where bargaining unit employees are located copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Commander, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with the Order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegation of the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-20018 relating to the Respondent's refusal to negotiate over those proposals found nonnegotiable be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon an unfair labor practice charge filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO (the Union herein), on October 13, 1981 against the Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio (Respondent herein), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region 5, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging Respondent refused to bargain with the Union by declaring various of the Union's bargaining proposals to be nonnegotiable and thereafter implementing regulations concerning a performance appraisal program without bargaining with the Union on the procedures, impact and implementation of the regulations.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted on March 9, 1982 in Dayton, Ohio, at which time all parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine, and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were filed by all parties.

Upon the entire record in this matter, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law and recommendations.

Chronology of Events

At all times material herein the Union has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of approximately 70,000 of Respondent's employees nationwide. In early November 1980 Respondent provided the Union with copies of Air Force Regulation (AFR) 40-452, dated October 1, 1980, which dealt with Department of the Air Force policy and procedures for appraisal and rating Air Force employees and offered to bargain with the Union on the impact of the regulation. The regulation implemented the provision of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, 5 U.S.C. § 4302, which provided for the establishment of performance appraisal systems, including critical elements and performance standards, by each agency and required that all performance appraisal systems be put into effect by October 1, 1981. The Union made a request to bargain on the regulation and the parties agreed to begin negotiations after the first of the year. In mid-January 1981 the Union sent Respondent various proposals dealing with the regulation. On March 4, 1981 when the parties met for the first time to discuss the proposals, Respondent submitted its counter-proposals to the Union.

The parties continued negotiations on March 5, 6, 8, and 9, 1981. On March 9 the Union submitted its second set of proposals to Respondent. These proposals, consisting of eight pages, addressed ten general topics under the following titles: general information, definitions, purpose of performance appraisal system, identifying job performance elements and performance standards, performance appraisal discussion, details, basic probation requirements, using the results of performance appraisal, record keeping, and rights of parties. On March 10 management presented the Union its second set of counter-proposals, consisting of five pages, which covered the same general topics raised by the Union. Thereafter, the parties met on March 11, 12, and 15 to discuss the proposals.

Although agreement was reached on numerous matters, the parties were unable to agree on 15 Union proposals and impasse was declared. Accordingly, on March 27 the Union requested the assistance of the Federal Service Impasses Panel and indicated to the Panel the areas of impasse and the areas of agreement and provided a summary of positions. On that same date Respondent notified the Union, in writing, that due to statutory requirements that the Performance Appraisal System be fully implemented by October 1, 1981, it intended to begin implementing its final offer to the Union. Respondent advised the Union that it would immediately commence with training its supervisors and managers, and on June 1 or later, it would begin implementation with bargaining unit employees.

By letter to the Impasses Panel dated April 22, 1981 the Union, inter alia, provided the Panel an amendment to supplement its March 27 statement of position on three of its proposals. A copy of this letter was sent to Respondent.

On April 29, 1981 Respondent notified the Impasses Panel of its position that the Union's proposals upon which impasse had occurred were nonnegotiable. Respondent set forth reasons for its conclusions and indicated that fact-facting by the Panel would be a likely course of action to follow to reach a settlement of the dispute.

The Impasses Panel apparently telephonically requested the national office of AFGE to respond to Respondent's allegations of nonnegotiability. Accordingly, by letter dated May 13, 1981 to the Panel, a copy of which was sent to Respondent and AFGE Council 214, the AFGE national office set forth its position and intent regarding each of the Union's proposals Respondent declared nonnegotiable. That letter also explicitly revised two of the Union's specific proposals which Respondent had previously declared to be nonnegotiable.

On June 5, 1981 the Impasses Panel notified the parties that it was declining to assert jurisdiction in the case since Respondent raised threshold questions concerning its duty to bargain with respect to a substantial portion of the Union's proposals.

The process of implementing AFR 40-452 included: instructing supervisors in the procedure; developing a work plan by supervisors which encompassed the identification of critical elements and performance standards of each employee; meeting with each employee to review and discuss the work plan; revision and final drafting of each work plan; and presenting the final work plan to each employee. Around July 1, 1981 AFR 40-452 was implemented with regard to Respondent's supervisors meeting with employees to discuss specific critical elements and performance standards. The process described above was completed by October 1.

On Septemter 14, 1981 AFGE national office wrote Respondent, on behalf of its ". . . constituent, National Council of AFLC (Air Force Logistics Command) Locals," requesting Respondent's position on its claim of nonnegotiability on the Union's March 9, 1981 proposals (above) "as modified in (the national office's) submission to the Federal Service Impasses Panel on May 13, 1981." The letter indicated that the information would be used in connection with a negotiability appeal to the Authority. Respondent replied on September 21 by providing a copy of the document it previously sent the Impasses Panel on April 29 (above) which set forth its reasons for claiming nonnegotiability. The response made no reference to the May 13 letter of AFGE national office revising two of the Union's earlier proposals but, rather, addressed only the Union's March 9 proposals.

On October 8, 1981 the AFGE national office, "on behalf of its constituent Council 214" filed an negotiability appeal with the Authority. On October 13 the present unfair labor practice charge was filed and on November 2 the AFGE national office requested that the Authority hold in abeyance its negotiability appeal and the matter thereafter proceeded to complaint.

The Proposals

The specific proposals at issue herein are as follows:[1]

> (1) Management will encourage employee and union representatives to work with supervisors to identify job performance elements and to set performance standards.
> (2) The union will be provided copies of all standards in a manner which will allow sufficient time for review and discussion with employees, if such is warranted in the opinion of the union.

[1] Proposals 3 and 5 appear as revised by the AFGE national office in its May 13, 1981 letter to the Impasses Panel, a copy of which was received by Respondent.

(4) All efforts should be made so that standards reflect expectations of the average employee working a reasonable, normal rate.

(5) The agency shall make every effort to remove whatever obstacles there may be in the job environment, such as excessive paperwork, physical hazards to health and safety, insufficient freedom to exercise initiative, and lack of direction, which makes it difficult for an employee to do the best work.

(6) Details shall be given equitable and proportionate weight in the overall performance rating as work performed in the employee's actual position. When an employee has been officially detailed to another position, the employee's performance on the detail shall be appraised in writing so that the employee's records reflect this annual appraisal. Details of six months or more will be given equal weight in the overall rating. Accordingly, details of a lesser period will be given an equitable, proportionate amount of weight in the overall rating.

Employees who are detailed or assigned to another position will not be required to meet the standards of this position until they have received the necessary training, guidance, and etc. This training period will be for no less than 30 days. An employee's evaluation will only commence after the training period and the supervisor has fully discussed the performance standards, critical elements, and the performance expected of the employee.

(7) The union will be allowed participation on any committee and/or process established to select recipients for awards.

(8) An employee with a minimally acceptable rating or higher will be screened for basic promotion eligibility.

(9) Under no circumstances will an employee be demoted or removed without the following steps being taken by the employer:

1. The agency shall direct maximum efforts to improve an employee's performance through counselling, training, reassignment, job restructuring, development of suitable incentives and setting short term specific goals to be accomplished within a set time limit before considering whether to initiate procedures to demote or separate the employee.

2. Following the above, and after a reasonable amount of time has been given to demonstrate acceptable performance and the employee has not improved further action might be warranted. A "reasonable amount of time" is to be defined on a case-by-case basis by the supervisor, employee and union steward. The supervisor at all times should assist the employee in improving his or her performance.

(10) Forms documenting ratings of unacceptable but not accompanied by a demotion or removal recommendation will be kept for one year then destroyed.

(11) An employee who believes any performance standard does not meet the criteria contained in this agreement may file a grievance under Article 6 of the MLA.

Discussion

Proposal 1 - "Management will encourage employee and union representatives to work with supervisors to identify job performance elements and to set performance standards."

Respondent contends that this proposal requires negotiations with the Union in identifying job performance elements and setting performance standards and is therefore nonnegotiable. I find the proposal to be negotiable.

The Authority held in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2849 and Office of Personnel Management, New York Regional Office, 7 FLRA 571 (1982), that a proposal requiring negotiations to establish performance standards and critical elements to be outside an agency's duty to bargain.[2] Prior thereto, the Authority held nonnegotiable a similar proposal requiring the establishment of performance standards "through collective bargaining" in that such negotiations would directly interfere with the exercise of management's right to direct employees and to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784 at 787-789. However, the Authority stated in that case, ". . . an exclusive representative must be given the opportunity to be represented at certain meetings between management and employees relating to the development and implementation of performance appraisal systems . . ." Further, the Authority noted in a subsequent case that proposals which require the opportunity for union comment on proposed changes in performance standards and critical elements are within an agency's duty to bargain under the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3656 and Federal Trade Commission, Boston Regional Office, 5 FLRA No. 70 at p.3.

[2] The requirement for negotiations was actually stated as "meeting and conferring."

In the case herein the proposal as stated is ambiguous as to whether negotiation or merely an opportunity for Union comment is required. Respondent asserts that the following unrebutted testimony of Respondent's negotiator, relating what the Union's negotiator stated concerning the meaning of the proposal during bargaining, demonstrates that "negotiation" was envisioned by the proposal:

> "Q. What did Mr. Ketcherside tell you that proposal meant, Mr. Mullen?
> "A. This proposal was explained to me that the supervisor, the union representative and the employee would sit down and identify job performance elements, set the performance standards, and that they would reach agreement. And I pursued that, the requirement for the agreement, with the question of what would happen if there was no agreement. It was explained that there would be. The people working at the first level supervisor level in the shops knew the jobs, knew each other, and that there shouldn't be too much of a problem with that."

I find this testimony still leaves a measure of doubt as to the meaning of the proposal. However, subsequent to the bargaining session which produced the above comments, the Union, in its March 27, 1981 request for assistance from the Federal Service Impasses Panel explained that the Union's proposal would only commit the employee to solicit "input" from employees and Union officials and specifically disclaimed "an attempt for such participation to preclude the supervisor from making final determinations relative to elements and standards." Therefore, in the circumstances herein I find that the proposal does not require negotiations on performance elements and standards but only requires the opportunity for Union comment. Accordingly, I conclude the proposal is negotiable. Federal Trade Commission, Boston Regional Office, supra, and Respondent's refusal to negotiate on this proposal violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 9 FLRA 909 (1982).

Proposal 2 - "The union will be provided copies of all standards in a manner which will allow sufficient time for review and discussion with employees, if such is warranted in the opinion of the union."

Respondent contends that this proposal would require Respondent providing the Union with copies of impending final job performance elements and standards prior to implementation, including the completed work plan for each individual employee. Respondent argues that such a procedure would violate the Privacy Act, 5 U.S.C. 552(a), and is therefore nonnegotiable.

I find the proposal to be negotiable. While AFR 40-452 provides that the Privacy Act is applicable to matters concerning performance appraisal programs developed thereunder, the Authority, as stated above, has held that an agency is obligated to bargain over a proposal providing a union with an opportunity to comment on proposed changes in performance standards and critical elements. Federal Trade Commission, Boston Regional Office, supra. That being the case, it is difficult to imagine how the Union herein could make meaningful comments regarding performance standards and critical elements as applied to a particular employee's job unless the information sought and an opportunity for review and discussion is provided. Further, when considering the application of the Privacy Act in situations where, as here, the information sought by an exclusive representative is necessary and relevant to perfecting its Statutory rights and fulfilling its obligations, the Authority has frequently held that a union's Statutory right and need for the information sought substantially outweighs an employee's loss of privacy which might occur. Veterans Administration Regional Office, Denver, Colorado, 7 FLRA 629 at 635, 640 (1981) and cases cited therein. Accordingly, I find and conclude that the proposal is negotiable and reject Respondent's contention regarding the application of the Privacy Act.

Proposal 3 - "Critical Element: a job element which is of such importance that if it is not performed adequately, acceptable performance of the job as a whole is not possible."

"Performance Standards: Statements of objective requirements measuring various levels of achievement for critical and non-critical elements. All performance standards must be fair, equitable, objective, valid, reliable, and job-related."

Proposal 3 encompassing definitions of critical elements and performance standards, herein, was one of the two proposals which were revised by the AFGE national office in its submission to the Impasses

Panel on May 13, 1981. Respondent argues that no request to bargain on this proposal as amended was ever made since AFGE national had not participated in negotiations prior to impasse. Therefore, Respondent reasons, procedurally no unfair labor practice violation can lie.

Respondent's procedural argument is rejected. Respondent, by receiving a copy of AFGE national's communication to the Impasses Panel was made aware that AFGE national, on behalf of Council 214, was revising the proposal. It did not object nor indicate any confusion by the revision. Rather, Respondent chose to stand by its last submission to the Impasses Panel re nonnegotiability and indeed, made no comment when responding to AFGE national's September 14, 1981 request for its position on negotiability wherein it specifically noted the proposals had been "modified." Thus, I find it was clear to Respondent that the Union's proposals were revised by AFGE national, on behalf of Council 214, the revision was timely made since the matter was still before the Impasses Panel for consideration, and Respondent's conduct constituted affirmation of its prior contention of nonnegotiability.

With regard to the negotiability of the proposal, Respondent asserts that no duty to bargain on the proposal exists since AFR 40-452 sets forth the definitions of a critical element and a performance standard and the proposed definitions of critical element and performance standards conflict with the regulatory definitions.

Under section 7117(a)(2) and (3) of the Statute, an agency or a primary national subdivision of an agency is not obligated to bargain with a union regarding matters encompassed by their regulations unless a union represents the majority of employees in the agency or primary national subdivision or unless the Authority has determined, under section 7117(b) of the Statute, that no compelling need exists for the regulation in effect. The Department of the Air Force is a primary national subdivision of the Department of Defense and, Respondent reasons, since the Union does not represent a majority of Department of the Air Force employees, and the Authority has not determined that no compelling need exists for the regulation, no obligation to bargain exists regarding the Union's proposal.

The Authority has not yet addressed the question of whether a compelling need issue may be resolved in an unfair labor practice proceeding before an Administrative Law Judge. However, I have previously addressed this issue in Boston District Recruiting Command et al., Case Nos. 1-CA-206, et al., OALJ-81-023 (December 22, 1980). In that case I held that the legislative history and the language of the Statute and Regulations require a conclusion that the compelling need procedures envisioned by section 7117 of the Statute apply generally to all situations where an agency genuinely defends against a demand to negotiate on a matter by interposing the existence of an appropriate regulation. In rejecting a position propounded by counsel for the General Counsel in that case I stated:

> Counsel for the General Counsel also suggests, as an alternative argument, that if the agency regulation stands as a bar to negotiations, then the proceeding herein served to put the issue of compelling need before the Authority for determination. In my view neither the Statute nor the Authority's regulations appear to envision this approach. Indeed, section 7117(b)(3) of the Statute provides that where a hearing is held to make a determination of compelling need, it ". . . shall not include the General Counsel as a party" (Footnote omitted). Accordingly, to combined a compelling need determination with an unfair labor practice proceeding, where the General Counsel has the responsibility of presenting the evidence in support of the complaint and carries the burden of proving the allegations of the complaint, would run contrary to Statutory prohibition. Therefore, Counsel for General Counsel's contention is rejected."

Judge Francis E. Dowd also addressed this issue in Defense Logistics Agency, et al., Case No. 1-CA-213, OALJ-81-131 (July 7, 1981), and Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency, et al., Case Nos. 3-CA-664 et al., OALJ-81-133 (July 10, 1981). In those cases Judge Dowd similarly found that an agency regulation was a bar to negotiations absent a finding of no compelling need made directly by the Authority in a negotiability context. Judge Dowd based his conclusion not only on a literal reading of the Statutory language but also on the apparent Statutory scheme for resolving such matters.

In the case herein, "critical element" is defined in AFR 40-452 as follows:

> "d. Critical Element. A job performance element of an employee's job of sufficient importance that performance below the minimum performance standard established by management requires remedial action and denial of merit pay or a within-grade increase, and may be the basis for removing, reassigning, or demoting the employee. Such action may be taken without regard to performance on other job performance elements."

I find the definition of "critical element" as proposed by the Union, supra, is at substantial variance and therefore incompatible or irreconcilable with the definition contained in the regulation. Accordingly, I conclude that AFR 40-452 is a bar to negotiations on this proposal. Cf. Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., supra.

With regard to "performance standard," it is defined in AFR 40-452 as follows:

> "f. Performance Standard. A description of the minimum level of accomplishment necessary for satisfactory performance. Performance standards are expressed in terms of qualitative or quantitative objectives, specific actions, project assignments, or other requirements related to job performance elements. There may be more than one standard set for a single job performance element."

I similarly find the definition of "performance standard" as proposed by the Union, supra, is, taken as a whole, at substantial variance and therefore incompatible or irreconcilable with the definition contained in the regulation. Accordingly, I conclude that AFR 40-452 is a bar to negotiations. Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C. supra.

Proposal 4 - "All efforts should be made so that standards reflect expectations of the average employee working a reasonable, normal rate."

This proposal would limit Respondent in setting performance standards to the "expectations" of the average employee. Thus, the expectations of such an employee would be the determinative element for management in initially establishing performance standards and management would be precluded from exercising its independent judgment in making the determination. Therefore, the proposal goes to the content of the performance standard and if a grievance were to be decided concerning the application of a performance standard, questions of whether "all efforts" were made and the underlying standard actually reflected the expectations of the average employee would be open for determination by an arbitrator who might well substitute his judgment for that of the agency. Such action would impermissibly restrict Respondent's decision and directly interfer with management's right to direct its employees and assign work under section 7106(a) of the Statute. Accordingly, I find the proposal to be nonnegotiable. Cf. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980); aff'd, No. 80-1895 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 12, 1982); Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., supra; National Treasury Employees Union and Department of Health and Human Services, Region 10, 7 FLRA 727 (1982); and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1437 and U.S. Army Armament Research and Development Command, Dover, New Jersey, 8 FLRA 414 (1982).

Proposal 5 - "The agency shall make every effort to remove whatever obstacles there may be in the job environment, such as excessive paperwork, physical hazards to health and safety, insufficient freedom to exercise initiative, and lack of direction, which makes it difficult for an employee to do the best work."[3]

Respondent contends, inter alia, that the above proposal violates management's right to direct employees and assign work under 7106(a)(2), and is therefore nonnegotiable. I agree.

The Authority has held that a proposal to "tailor" or redesign a position in a particular manner conflicts with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and is therefore nonnegotiable. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1624 and Air Force Contract Management Division, Hagerstown, Maryland, 3 FLRA 142 (1980) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 at 620-622. The proposal herein, encompassing such matters as reducing "paperwork" and providing better "direction" and "freedom to exercise initiative," clearly requires restructuring duties to provide a job which does not make it "difficult for an employee to do the best work." Accordingly, I find the proposal to be nonnegotiable.

Proposal 6 - "Details shall be given equitable and proportionate weight in the overall performance rating as work performed in the employee's actual position. When an employee has been officially detailed to another position, the employee's performance on the detail shall be appraised in writing so that the employee's records reflect this annual appraisal. Details of six months or more will be given equal weight in the overall rating. Accordingly, details of a lesser period will be given an equitable, proportionate amount of weight in the overall rating."

"Employees who are detailed or assigned to another position will not be required to meet the standards of this position until they have received the necessary training, guidance, and etc. This training period will be for no less than 30 days. An employee's evaluation will only commence after the training period and the supervisor has fully discussed the performance standards, critical elements, and the performance expected of the employee."

With regard to the first part of this proposal, Respondent argues that by "dictating" to appraising officials the weight accorded detail duties in the overall rating, management's rights to direct and assign work under section 7106(a)(2) of the Statute are abridged. I find this part of Proposal 6 to be negotiable.

[3] Proposal 5 appears as revised in the AFGE national office submission to the Impasses Panel on May 13, 1981.

In my view that part of the proposal concerning the weight given to details deals primarily with procedures for the implementation of performance standards and does not infringe on management's section 7106(a) rights. Indeed, the Authority specifically indicated in Bureau of the Public Debt, supra at 780, that the manner in which the performance of employees on detail will be appraised was an example of ". . . the wide range of employee participation possible through negotiations . . ." relative to performance standards.[4]

Turning now to the second part of Proposal 6 dealing with training detailed employees prior to requiring them to meet the standards of the position they have been assigned to, I find this proposal to be nonnegotiable. A very similar proposal was found to be outside an agency's duty to bargain in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3004 and Department of the Air Force, Otis Air Force Base, Massachusetts, 9 FLRA 723 (1982). In that case the essence of the proposal provided that employees would not be evaluated on assigned duties which were outside their position description until management provided, and the employee completed, a formal training program in these duties. The Authority, citing numerous cases, held that determining which employee duties would be included in a performance appraisal is a management's right to direct and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and therefore, management was not required to negotiate proposals relating to the substance of such determinations. The Authority specifically stated:

> "Furthermore, proposals which would contractually obligate an agency to provide formal training, to periodically assign employees to specific types of training programs, and to make specific training assignments upon employee requests are outside the duty to bargain because the assignment of training under such circumstances constitutes an assignment of work the negotiation of which is inconsistent with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B)." (Citations omitted).

Thus, I conclude the second part of Proposal 6 is outside Respondent's duty to bargain.[5]

[4] The second sentence of the first portion of Proposal 6 dealing with an employee being provided a written appraisal while on detail is not alleged by Respondent to be nonnegotiable. In any event I would find such proposal to be clearly negotiable.

[5] Cf. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1923 and Department of Health and Human Service, Social Security

Proposal 7 - "The union will be allowed participation on any committee and/or process established to select recipients for awards."

Respondent contends it has no bargaining obligation regarding this proposal arguing that regulation AFR 40-470 controls the subject of awards and no changes in the awards program encompassed by AFR 40-470 occurred to require negotiations thereon.

I find that the change which occurred in Respondent's basic system of employee appraisal opened for bargaining the performance awards program under the new appraisal system. AFR 40-452 section 5-3 [6] states, inter alia, that "(e)mployees who get excellent or superior ratings should be considered for some kind of official honorary or monetary recognition." The regulation further treats the variety of awards available and circumstances for granting them, noting, "(m)ost employees covered by this regulation are eligible for awards covered by AFR 40-470."

The current AFR 40-470 [7] recognizes, under section 4A, inter alia, that appraisals given under AFR 40-452 are the basis for granting performance recognition. The regulation also provides under section 4D for an "interim measure" to permit granting performance recognition until employees covered by AFR 40-452 have been given an earned performance rating under that regulation. Section 4D reveals that the interim measure was to expire September 30, 1982.

AFR 40-470 also indicates that union representation on Incentive Awards Committees covering civilian performance awards programs is acceptable. Thus, section 6 of that regulation provides, inter alia: "Both supervisory and nonsupervisory military and civilian personnel may be represented on or participate in the committee's work including civilian personnel representation resulting from local negotiated agreements."

Accordingly, in the circumstances herein wherein a new appraisal system was adopted, that new system envisions awards, the regulation relating to the performance awards program was obviously amended to apply to appraisals under the new program, and the regulation controlling performance awards programs does not preclude union participation in the awards process, I find and conclude that Union Proposal 7 is negotiable.

[6] Chapter 5 of the regulation is entitled: "Using the Results of Performance Appraisal."

[7] Although a copy of this regulation was not offered in evidence, I hereby take administrative notice of its content.

Proposal 8 - "An employee with a minimally acceptable rating or higher will be screened for basic promotion eligibility."

Respondent contends that this proposal is nonnegotiable in that it conflicts with section 5-5 of AFR 40-452.

Section 5-5 of AFR 40-452 provides, in relevant part:

"The extent of consideration an employee receives for merit promotion purposes will be determined by the performance appraisal. An employee with a fully successful rating or higher will be screened for basic merit promotion eligibility."

Respondent argues that the impact of the second sentence of the quoted portion of section 5-5 is to set the minimum rating required for screening for promotion. However, I find that section 5-5 is open to another interpretation whereby the Union's proposal would not be in conflict with the regulation. Thus, if the section were read to mean that all employees with a fully successful rating or higher must be considered for promotion eligibility, such would not preclude others, namely employees with a minimally successful ratings, from also receiving consideration. This construction is supported by the fact that section 5-5 does not state that only employees with a fully successful rating would be screened. Accordingly, I find that section 5-5 is susceptible of varying interpretations and the Union's proposal is not incompatible or irreconcilable with the regulation Cf. Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., supra. I therefore conclude the proposal is negotiable. Such finding and conclusion is in accord with congressional intent that management rights be treated narrowly as an exception to the general obligation to bargain.

Proposal 9 - "Under no circumstances will an employee be demoted or removed without the following steps being taken by the employer:

"1. The agency shall direct maximum efforts to improve an employee's performance through counselling, training, reassignment, job restructuring, development of suitable incentives and setting short term specific goals to be accomplished within a set time limit before considering whether to initiate procedures to demote or separate the employee.

"2. Following the above, and after a reasonable amount of time has been given to demonstrate acceptable performance, and the employee has not improved further action might be warranted. A "reasonable amount of time" is to be defined on a case-by-case basis by the supervisor, employee and union steward. The supervisor at all times should assist the employee in improving his or her performance."

Respondent raises a variety of arguments to support its contention that Proposal 9 is nonnegotiable, including conflict with regulations[8/] and impermissable restricting of management rights set forth in 7106(a) of the Statute.

Section 4302(b)(3) of the Civil Service Reform Act (CSRA) requires that performance appraisal systems provide for "assisting employees in improving unacceptable performance" and providing "an opportunity to demonstrate acceptable performance "before management reassigns or take an adverse action against an employee whose performance is deemed unacceptable. However, Union Proposal 9, Section 1, requires management to engage in a training program and job restructuring for an employee whose performance is unacceptable before considering whether to demote or separate the employee from service.

Clearly, Proposal 9, Section 1, goes substantially beyond the requirements of the CSRA. Indeed, as stated above regarding Proposal 5, the Authority has held that a proposal to redesign or restructure a particular job conflicts with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. Air Force Contract Management Division, supra, and Air Force Logistics Command, supra. Further, a similar proposal relative to demoting employees was construed by the Authority to improperly establish a condition upon an agency's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the State to remove or reduce in grade employees and assign employees. American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760 and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Northeast Program Service Center, 9 FLRA 1025 (1982).

With regard to the requirement that an employee not be demoted or removed from service without first receiving "training" to improve performance, as stated above regarding the second portion of Proposal 6, the Authority has held that "proposals which would contractually obligate an agency to provide formal training, to periodically assign employees to specific types of training programs, and to make specific training assignments upon employee requests . . . are inconsistent with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B))." Department of the Air Force, Otis Air Force Base, supra; see also National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and Department of Transportation, Federal [8/] As a part of this position Respondent strongly argues that the proposal does not differentiate between the treatment of probationary and nonprobationary employees as required by 5 U.S.C. 4303 and AFR 40-452.

Aviation Administration, 6 FLRA 588 (1981) and cases cited in footnote 5 herein. Accordingly, in these circumstances I conclude that Proposal 9, taken as a whole, is nonnegotiable.[9]

Proposal 10 - "Forms documenting ratings of unacceptable but not accompanied by a demotion or removal recommendation will be kept for one year then destroyed."

Respondent takes the position that section 6-2 of AFR 40-452 conflicts with this proposal and therefore should be declared nonnegotiable. I agree.

Section 6-2 of AFR 40-452 provides:

> "a. Forms documenting ratings of superior, excellent, fully successful, or minimally acceptable, or an unacceptable rating not accompanied by a demotion or removal recommendation, will be kept for 5 years and then destroyed."

Proposal 10 limits retention of the designated unacceptable ratings for one year while the regulation specifically requires retention for five years. The proposal and the regulation are clearly incompatible and irreconcilable. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth above with regard to my conclusions regarding Union Proposal 3, I conclude Proposal 10 is nonnegotiable.

Proposal 11 - "An employee who believes any performance standard does not meet the criteria contained in this agreement may file a grievance under Article 6 of the MLA."

Respondent bases its contention that this proposal infringes upon the Respondent's right to direct employees and assign work on the "intent and the plain and clear language of the proposal."

With regard to the intent of the proposal, the Union in the attachment to its March 27, 1981 submission to the Impasses Panel, supra, explained that the proposal ". . . provides the union and/or the employee an opportunity to challenge the validity of performance standards through the negotiated grievance procedure." When the national union made its

[9] Section 2 of Proposal 9 is designed to take effect only after the procedures set forth in section 1 have been exhausted. Since section 1 is nonnegotiable, obviously the elements of section 2 cannot be implemented and no independent negotiability determinating of this proposal need be made herein.

May 13, 1981 submission to the Impasses Panel it indicated that the intent of the proposal was not to violate management's right to direct and assign work. The national office further stated that, as used in the proposal, grievance meant ". . . grievance consistent with the Federal Labor Relations Authority decision that performance standards are grievable only after they are applied", citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, St. Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA No. 14 (1981), aff'd, No. 81-1274 (D.C. Cir. Oct. 12, 1982). In the cited case the Authority interpreted a union proposal that the grievance procedure therein extended to any action taken as a result of a performance appraisal to mean any action taken as a result of the application of critical elements and performance standards to an employee covered by the procedure. Id. at p. 11. This interpretation reflects the Authority's holding in Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., supra, at 789-794 that a proposal which establishes a "general, nonquantitative requirement by which the application of critical elements and performance standards . . . may subsequently be evaluated in a grievance . . . is within the duty to bargain.

In all the circumstances herein I find Proposal 11 does not infringe upon management's right to direct employees or assign work. In my view, the statements of intent by the Union and the Union's national office do not help to clarify the meaning of the proposal. However, the express language used in the proposal merely implies that performance standards will comport with whatever "criteria" is ultimately contained in the parties collective bargaining agreement. One must assume that nonnegotiable or unlawful "criteria" will not be "contained in (the) agreement." That is what these proceedings, in part, are intended to assure. Accordingly, I find the proposal to be negotiable.

Summary and Remedy

I have found that Union Proposal 1, Proposal 2, Proposal 6, first paragraph, Proposal 7, Proposal 8, and Proposal 11 are negotiable.[10] Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent's refusal to bargain on these proposals, and subsequent unilateral implementation of a performance appraisal system on July 1, 1981 in these circumstances, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Cf. Veterans Administration, 1 FLRA 888 (1979) and Internal Revenue Service, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 648 (1982).

The Union requests as a remedy a return to the status quo ante.[11]

[10] In finding that these proposals are within the duty to bargain I make no judgment as to their merits.

In Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982), the Authority held that in cases involving a violation of the duty to bargain over "impact and implementation", the appropriateness of the status quo ante remedy will be determined "on a case-by-case basis, carefully balancing the nature and circumstances of the particular violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by such a remedy." The Authority went on to list five factors it considered important in making a status quo ante determination through "balancing the equities." See also Internal Revenue Service, Chicago, Illinois, supra at 651.

In the case herein negotiations between the parties produced agreement on numerous items. However, 15 of the Union's proposals were declared nonnegotiable by Respondent and the General Counsel issued a complaint alleging Respondent illegally refused to bargain on 11 of the Union's proposals. I find herein that Respondent was obligated to bargain on five Union proposals and a portion of a sixth.

Respondent began to implement its new performance appraisal program in the collective bargaining unit on July 1, 1981 and by October 1, 1981, work plans encompassing performance standards and critical elements for some 70,000 employees were established. Within-grade pay increases to employees based upon the new appraisal system began to occur in February 1982 and continue at a rate of 25,000 a year.[12] Effective October 1982, promotions of employees will relate to appraisals received under the new appraisal system.

In the circumstances herein, and applying the standards set by the Authority in Federal Correctional Institution, supra, I conclude that a status quo ante remedy requiring Respondent to withdraw the new performance appraisal system and invalidating all personnel actions taken in accordance thereunder, reinstituting the performance appraisal program which was in effect prior to October 1, 1981 and appraising all employees and effectuating any personnel actions in conformance therewith, is not warranted. Rather, I conclude that requiring Respondent to bargain on the proposals found negotiable herein and subsequently putting into effect the performance appraisal program as negotiated would best effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute and comply with the Authority's direction to balance the nature and circumstances of the violation against the degree of disruption in government operations that would be caused by such a remedy.

Accordingly, in view of the entire foregoing and having concluded that Respondent has violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, I recommend the Authority issue the following:

[12] Between October 1981 and February 1982 Respondent gave "presumptive" satisfactory ratings to employees eligible for within-grade increases.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.20 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of the Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting any change in the Performance Appraisal Program without affording the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, the opportunity to bargain with respect to the procedures which the agency will observe in exercising its authority with regard thereto and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change.

(b) Failing and refusing to negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, to the extent consonant with law and regulation, concerning any change in the Performance Appraisal Program.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Upon request of the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, meet and negotiate with respect to the proposals previously submitted by the Union and found negotiable herein, to the extent consonant with law and regulation, concerning changes in the Performance Appraisal Program.

(b) Post at all of its facilities where bargaining unit employees are located copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander and shall be posted and maintained by him/her for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The Commander shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region 5, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 175 West Jackson Boulevard, Suite A-1359, Chicago, Illinois 60604, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Charles N. Carnes filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator arose when the Activity proposed to suspend the grievant for 14 days for continuing to work on a particular project after being instructed by his supervisor to stop. The Activity's notice of proposed suspension advised the grievant, among other things, that he would be granted a reasonable amount of official time to review the materials upon which the proposed action was based and to present a reply. The grievant's request for eight hours of "administrative time" to prepare his reply was denied by the Activity's Personnel

Office on the ground that there was no provision in the parties' collective bargaining agreement for granting any time at that stage of the proceeding. The grievant then prepared his reply to the notice of proposed action on his own time after duty hours. The grievant eventually was suspended for three days and filed the grievance before the Arbitrator in this case. The grievance contested the merits of the suspension action and also raised a number of procedural issues, including the Activity's denial of the grievant's request for time to prepare his case.

As to the merits, the Arbitrator determined that the Activity had established just and sufficient cause for the 3-day suspension. As to the pertinent procedural issue, however, the Arbitrator found that the grievant's rights were violated when his request for time to prepare his case was denied. The Arbitrator noted that the Activity had promised the grievant a reasonable amount of official time for that purpose and was obligated to keep its promise. The Arbitrator also found that the negotiated grievance procedures of the parties' agreement cover all matters grievable under section 7121 of the Statute and provide that employees will be allowed a reasonable amount of official time to present their grievances. The Arbitrator concluded that the subject matter of the dispute before him met the broad definition of "grievance" under section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute for which official time was allowable under the agreement. The Arbitrator further concluded that in the circumstances involved the grievant should have been granted four hours of official time to prepare his case. As a remedy, the Arbitrator awarded the grievant four hours of pay.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award of four hours pay is contrary to law. More specifically, the Agency argues that the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, because it in effect requires the retroactive payment of four hours of overtime pay to the grievant and the findings necessary for such a payment under the Back Pay Act were not made. The Agency also argues that the award is contrary to section 7131(d) of the Statute because official time can only be granted in circumstances where the employee would otherwise be in a duty status and the grievant in this case performed the case preparation work on his own time during nonduty hours.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as alleged. In a recent decision, American Federation of Government Employees and Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 14 (1986), the Authority reiterated its previous indications that section 7131(d) of the Statute*/ expressly authorizes parties to negotiate for the granting of official time for the performance of specified activities and that the Statute effectively provides a remedy when official time under section 7131(d) is wrongfully denied. Thus, where official time, authorized by provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with section 7131(d) of the Statute, is wrongfully denied and the covered activities are thereafter performed on nonduty time, section 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. In this case, while the grievant was not engaged in union representational activities, section 7131(d)(2) of the Statute expressly provides for official time for bargaining unit employees "in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter." The Arbitrator found the dispute was a "grievance" covered by the Statute and the parties' agreement and that under the agreement the grievant was entitled to four hours of official time. Thus, the Arbitrator effectively found that the conditions of section 7131(d) had been met.

With regard to the Agency's specific contentions, the Authority first finds that the Agency's argument that the

*/ Section 7131(d) provides:

> (d) Except as provided in the preceding subsections of this section--
> (1) any employee representing an exclusive representative, or
> (2) in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter, any employee in an appropriate unit represented by an exclusive representative,
> shall be granted official time in any amount the agency and the exclusive representative involved agree to be reasonable, necessary, and in the public interest.

Arbitrator's award is contrary to the Back Pay Act because the Arbitrator awarded the grievant retroactive overtime pay without making the necessary findings for such an award is without merit. The Authority has determined that performance of representational activities on nonduty time (outside regular working hours) is not overtime work. See Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1164, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 4 (1985); National Treasury Employees Union v. Gregg, No. 83-546, slip op. at 4-5 (D.D.C. Sept. 28, 1983). The Authority therefore concludes, contrary to the Agency's contention, that since the grievant's performance on nonduty time of case preparation work for which official time should have been granted under section 7131(d)(2) was not overtime work, the Arbitrator did not award retroactive overtime pay and his award is not contrary to the Back Pay Act. With regard to the Agency's argument that under section 7131(d) of the Statute an employee must "otherwise be in a duty status" in order to be eligible to receive official time, such argument is also without merit. While subsections (a), (b) and (c) of section 7131 are explicit in regard to requiring an employee to be in a duty status in order to receive official time, subsection (d) is silent in that regard. In interpreting that subsection, the Authority has clearly indicated that it is not required that an employee would otherwise have been in a duty status in order to be entitled to official time under section 7131(d). See Local 1164, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Social Security Administration, Boston Region, 19 FLRA No. 110 (1985). The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has also failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7131(d) of the Statute as alleged.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Jean Wilcox filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance over the removal of the grievant was submitted to arbitration at which a preliminary issue was presented of whether the grievance initiated by the Union directly with Commander of the Activity complied with the requirements of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure. The Arbitrator determined that the grievance in this case was not the type of grievance properly filed directly with the Commander and that consequently the Union had failed to comply with the requirements of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure in filing the grievance. Accordingly, the Arbitrator ruled that the grievance was not arbitrable and that the merits of the grievance would not be considered.

III. EXCEPTION

The Union contends that the award is deficient because it is incomplete, ambiguous, and contradictory so as to make implementation impossible.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

With respect to the Union's contention, the Authority has advised that to find an award deficient on this basis, there must be a showing that the award is ambiguous or contradictory, or that implementation is impossible, because of the award being unclear in its meaning and effect or because of the award being too uncertain in its effect to be sustained. Veterans Administration Hospital, Newington, Connecticut and National Association of Government Employees, Local R1-109, 5 FLRA 64 (1981). In this case the Union fails to establish that the Arbitrator's finding the grievance nonarbitrable and refusing to consider the merits is in any manner unclear in its meaning and effect or too uncertain in its effect to be sustained. Instead, this exception constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's determination that there had not been compliance with the procedural requirements of the negotiated grievance procedure of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In this respect, the Authority has consistently and repeatedly held that such questions are for resolution by the arbitrator and are not subject to review or challenge before the Authority. Headquarters, Fort Sam Houston, Department of the Army and Local 2154, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 974 (1984). Consequently, the Union's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient.

*/ Although the issue has not been raised by the parties, the Authority confirms its jurisdiction to resolve the Union's exception. Because the Arbitrator's award pertained solely to the question of whether the grievance in this case was filed in accordance with the terms of the parties' agreement, it is not apparent that the award relates to a removal action within the meaning of section 7121(f) and section 7122(a) of the Statute. ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority on a request filed by the Union seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of April 21, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award.

In its decision, the Authority held that the provisions in the Arbitrator's award which directed the Agency to promote the grievant retroactively with backpay were contrary to the Back Pay Act and section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute because the Arbitrator had not made the findings necessary for such an award. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award by striking the provisions found deficient. In its request for reconsideration, the Union argues that the Authority's decision should be reconsidered because it is based on an apparent misreading of the Arbitrator's findings.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Union in support of its motion essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision that the Arbitrator's award was deficient.

Accordingly, the Union's request for reconsideration is denied.*/

SUBJECT MATTER INDEX ENTRIES	STATUTE
Unfair Labor Practice Union Violations Picketing Activity	7116(b)(7)(A)

DIGEST NOTES

Picketing of an agency in a labor-management dispute is a violation of § 7116(b)(7) if it "interferes, with an agency's operations." The question of when such picketing "interferes with an agency's operations" under the Statute is one of first impression for the Authority. An examination of the legislative history of section 7116(b)(7) shows that Congress intended to prohibit only picketing that actually interferes with an agency's operations; indeed, Congress chose not to enact language passed by the Senate which would have prohibited picketing that "interferes or reasonably threatens to interfere with an agency's operations." Instead, Congress adopted the language of the House Substitute bill, which did not contain the "reasonably threatens to interfere standard. Thus, since picketing is an unfair labor practice only if it interferes with an agency's operations, it must be determined in each case whether the picketing actually caused "interference."

The focus of inquiry must be to determine whether the inconvenience or disturbance to particular agency operations resulting from the picketing constitutes an unfair labor practice. The picketing in each case must be considered in terms of such factors as the government interest involved, the sensitivity of the function and its purpose, the location of the picketed operation, the duration of the picketing, and the number and conduct of the pickets. In each case the Government interest to be protected is related to the mission of the agency involved. Thus, an operation of high sensitivity such as one involving national security or with critical functions related to health or safety, could justify a relatively high degree of restraint of even First Amendment-related activities such as picketing. In such cases, even a relatively brief and minor disruption could in some circumstances justify a finding of unlawful interference. On the other hand, in an operation involving a relatively lower degree of sensitivity, the same picketing activities might not be found to be unlawful interference.

In this case, the purpose of the agency's operation is to process various Social Security claims, which includes both interviews and processing paperwork. While the agency, in anticipation of the picketing, changed the work assignments of its employees and increased their interviews with claimants while decreasing paper work for that one day, which represented adjustments in the agency's operation, it had not been shown that these changes were necessary to the continued functioning of the agency's operations or that the result of increased interviews and decreased paperwork had any appreciable negative impact on the accomplishment of the mission of the picketed operation. Nor did the record support a conclusion that the picketing appreciably delayed processing of claims. Further, the number and conduct of the pickets and the duration of their picketing in this case demonstrated that the picketing did not interfere with the agency operations. Approximately ten pickets demonstrated silently in a 17 x 70 foot public waiting room of a Social Security District Office, causing no disturbance. Some employees peered over a partition as they passed, several supervisors checked on the picketing and one security guard who normally would not be in the reception area joined the one who was routinely assigned there for the ten minutes during which the picketing occurred. Thus, the number and conduct of the pickets, as well as the location of the picketing in a public area, accessible even to individuals who have no business with the agency, could not be said to have caused interference with agency operations in any real sense. The Authority, therefore, concluded that the picketing here did not "interfere" with agency operations within the meaning of § 7116(b)(7)

The continuing jurisdiction of the arbitrator was invoked when the grievant disagreed with the reappraisal of her performance that management performed in response to the earlier arbitration award. On review of this performance appraisal, the arbitrator determined that the rating was arrived at arbitrarily. He further ruled that the appraisal contained numerous contradictions, misstatements of fact, assessments of fault which did not lie with the grievant, and references to performance occurring outside the period stipulated to and designated by the parties to serve as the basis for her appraisal. As his award, the arbitrator ordered that the grievant be given a rating of "outstanding".

In its exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). The Authority has previously held that an arbitrator may determine that management applied its established performance standards in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate, nonquantitative review criterion, and the arbitrator to that extent may sustain a grievance. In sustaining such a grievance, the arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management or, where appropriate, that the grievant's work product as appraised by management be granted the rating to which entitled under the establish elements and standards. However, the Authority has cautioned that an arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's performance under the elements and standards established by management and may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what that employee's evaluation and rating should be.

In this case, the Authority concluded that the reappraisal of the employee was not the type that would permit an arbitrator in an objective, nondiscretionary, and essentially mechanistic manner to determine without an independent evaluation that an aggrieved employee was entitled to a different rating under the established standards. Although the arbitrator could have ordered the grievant reevaluated, he instead independently determined what that rating would have been. Consequently, the Authority found that the award was contrary to § 7106(a).

DIGEST NOTES

In settlement of several unfair labor practice charges, the parties agreed that procedures involving the granting of official time contained in "management advisories" used by supervisors as guidance in their related actions, could be grieved by the union and submitted to arbitration. In a subsequent dispute that was submitted to arbitration, the arbitrator stated that the issue was whether management advisories could properly require union officials and stewards to obtain permission in order to perform union representation functions. The arbitrator determined that such a requirement was neither consistent with the parties' agreement nor past practice. The past practice was for union officials and stewards to inform their supervisors of the need to perform representational activities and not to request permission. Accordingly, the arbitrator ordered the management advisories be withdrawn and the past practices reinstated until negotiation of a new contract was completed.

In its exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to management's right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B). However, the Authority concluded that the award was fully consistent with the Statute. In accordance with the settlement agreement limiting the arbitrator's authority to the procedures regarding the granting of official time, the award does not provide for any entitlement to an allocation of official time to a particular steward or union official without regard to management needs and requirements regarding the performance of assigned work. Accordingly there was no basis for finding the award contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B).

DIGEST NOTES

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (2) when it referenced a union representative's participation in protected activity in connection with a performance discussion concerning the representative. A supervisor informed the union representative that a second-line supervisor had informed him that she wanted the representative's activities negatively reflected in his periodic performance assessment.

The agency violated § 7116(a) (1) and (2) when a supervisor, after having informed the union representative that the second line supervisor was concerned about the representative's low productivity due to his union activities and that such activities should be negatively reflected in his periodic performance assessment, told the representative that the second line supervisor also wanted to put him on a performance improvement plan (PIP) for potentially unsatisfactory performance. The Judge concluded that although the representative's union activities were not explicitly mentioned in supervisor's statement about the PIP, the representative could have reasonably inferred, due to the timing of the statement, that the statement was made because of his continued participation in union activities, and it was, therefore, an implicit threat against such activities.

The agency violated section 7116(a)(1) when soon after an union representative had been informed that his low productivity was attributable to the time spent on union activities, a supervisor, during a discussion with the representative concerning the representative's low productivity, told him that his work had been timed by the second line supervisor. The Judge found that the statement was inherently threatening and discriminatory, particularly in light of the fact that no other employee had been timed by management.

The agency did not violate the Statute when a second line supervisor of a union representative called another second line supervisor to ascertain whether the representative's wife was at work the same day that the representative called in to request sick leave. The Judge found that the representative's supervisor had the responsibility to insure that employees abide by leave regulations which includes the discretion to initiate appropriate investigations and exchange pertinent information with similar agency officials; that the inquiry was discreet and directed only to another second line supervisor and no attempt was made to communicate to the representative or his wife that they were under some kind of investigation. Thus, the Judge concluded a preponderance of the evidence did not show that the agency's actions were taken to discourage the representative's participation in, or to otherwise interfere with, protected activities.

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (2) when it issued a union representative a progress report known as a DPR which was discriminatory in nature due to his participation in protected activities. The Judge found that the representative was engaged in protected activities during the time that the PR was issued and the agency had knowledge of the same. The representative's DPR established a productivity goal that he take 25% of the interviews in a four person unit without taking into account the known fact that he spent 20 to 25% of his work time on union activities and the second line supervisor admitted that the production goal within the union representative's DPR should have taken his union activities into account. Further, the DPRs of his coworkers who were not involved in union activities contained no similar fixed numerical productivity goal. The Judge concluded, therefore, that the representative's DPR was discriminatory in nature due to his union activities and, therefore, violative of § 7116(a)(1) and (2).

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1), (2) when it denied official time to a union representative to represent the local union representative at meetings concerning her personal grievances; the agency did not violate § 7116(5) and (8) when it conducted such meetings with the aggrieved local representative in the absence of her designated representative. The local representative had filed grievances relating to the agency's denial of official time in order to file an unfair labor practice charge and designated another union representative as her represenatative for both grievances. The agency refused to grant official time, relying on a provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement which it argued meant that where the local representative had filed a grievance and designated another representative, management would accept the designation but no official time would be provided. The agency subsequently held a grievance meeting with the aggrieved representative in the absence of her designated representative. The Judge, in respect to the agency's refusal to grant official time, concluded that since the refusal was based upon the agency's interpretation of the union's right to official time, arguably within the terms of the parties' negotiated agreement, it did not rise to the level of interference with rights guaranteed by the Statute. With respect to the alleged refusal to provide representation on behalf of the aggrieved representative at the grievance meetings, the Judge found that this dispute also arose out of the parties' basic disagreement over official time. The local union representative's grievances concerned not personal grievances but dealt with her use of official time as a union representative and she was either well aware or should have been well aware that the dispute with management was not over her right to have a representative at the grievance meetings, but on that representative's use of official time. Further, the aggrieved representative had notice of the meeting and she could have designated a representative to attend her grievance sessions on other than official time. Accordingly, in these circumstances, the Judge concluded that there was no violation.

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) when it refused to bargain with the union's designated representative regarding its implementation of substantial staffing changes affecting bargaining unit employees as the result of a major reorganization of the agency's work units. The agency refused to honor the union's choice for its bargaining representative other than the union's designated local representative when that representative was availible on the ground that the parties' collective bargaining agreement provided that it would utilize the local representative as the individual with whom management should deal regarding labor relations matters and that it should deal with the alternate representative only when the local representative is out of the office. The Judge determined that while a union had a statutory right to designate its own representatives in negotiations, the parties here had provided in their collective bargaining agreement for a formalized bargaining relationship. The Judge concluded that because the parties took opposite interpretations of the previously mentioned language and the contract was unclear on its face in this regard, the appropriate avenue for resolution of the dispute was through the parties' mutually agreed upon contractual grievance and arbitration procedures rather than through the unfair labor practice procedures.

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it made changes in conditions of employment affecting bargaining unit employees based upon an agreement with an employee concerning its chan After meeting with an employee regarding its unilaterally imposed staffing changes, agreed to implement the employee's suggestions with respect to the changes, and unilaterally did so. The union was not provided prior notice or the opportunity to bargain in any respect thereto. The Judge found that the agency's conduct of negotiating or otherwise dealing directly with a unit employee over conditions of employment inherently undermined the status of the union and constituted an unlawful bypass. Thus, the Judge concluded that the agency's bypass of the union and unilaterally implementation of further changes in working conditions as a direct result of such bypass violated § 7116(a)(1)(and (5).

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it refused to bargain on the union's proposals concerning proposed staffing changes affecting bargaining unit employees. The agency had proposed staffing changes which involved the relocation of its aged and disability workloads within the unit as well as the transfer of one experienced claim representative out of the unit and a new claims representative trainee into the unit. The union thereafter, submitted several revised proposals about the effect of the reorganization on prior agreements to rotate the aged claims workload, the equity of the distribution of the workload, and the opportunity for employee input concerning the changes. The agency asserted that the changes had insubstantial impact and/or the union's proposal were non-negotiable. The Judge concluded that because, as a result of the changes, a new claims representative would be handling an undisputedly more difficult work load; the reassignment of the another took her out of a grade determining factor for claims representatives and a third was being denied the opportunity to learn a more complex work load with potential impact on her promotion opportunities, the staffing changes clearly had an adverse impact on bargaining unit employees. Since the union's proposal requiring employee input prior to final assignment decisions being made merely required management to give consideration to the stated preferences of the employees regarding the assignments but reserved the right to assign work or to select any particular employee, it was negotiable. Similarly, the union's proposal that assignments be fair and equitable established a general, non-quantitative requirement by which management's assignment of work could be evaluated did not interfere management's right to make assignments based on personnel requirements. The Judge found also that union was clearly entitled to obtain management's position regarding the effect of the changes on prior rotation agreements before it unilaterally implemented what appeared to be a breach of such agreements. Thus, in the absence of any overriding exigencv which required to proposed changes to be implemented only two days after the union's submission of its revised proposals, the agency had a duty to bargain in good faith with the union to agreement or impasse on its negotiable proposals.

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when refused to bargain concerning the impact and implementation with respect to a major reorganization. The reorganization resulted in the merger of three separate work units and transformed the affected claims represenatatives handling one type of case to generalists responsible for all three types of cases. The agency did not dispute that the reorganization had substantial impact on the working conditions of unit employees but asserted that it had reached an agreement with the union prior to implementation. The Judge concluded that in the absence of any evidence of any reached between the parties concerning the reorganization or any overriding exigency, the agency's failure to bargain at the union's request constituted bad faith bargaining in violation of the Statute.

The agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1)(5) and (8) when it held two meetings with unit employees to solicit their views prior to implementing the staffing changes. While the meetings did constitute formal discussions within the meaning of § 7114(a)(2)(A), the Judge found that the union was provided with prior notice and the opportunity to select its own representative at these meetings as required by that section.

A commanding officer did not violate § 7116(a)(1) when he stated at a meeting with employees five days before an election that he was disappointed about the distribution of literature by the union in that it demonstrated a lack of good faith, since an agreement had been made between the parties not to campaign on the premises. The statements were permissible under § 7116(e) since the comments served to "correct the record with respect to [a] false or misleading statement made by any person". Specifically the statements corrected the record with respect to the union's disclaimer of responsibility for the distribution of campaign literature in the face of its agreement not to do so. The commanding officer knew that the union agreed not to campaign on the premises; knew and observed that seemingly official union literature had been posted around the base; and knew of the union's disclaimer of responsibility. The record indicates that the local union president supplied the literature to an employee who was very active in supporting the union's campaign and who posted the literature along with other employees. Under these circumstances, the union president's disclaimer of union responsibility for or authorization of the literature in question was at best misleading. Thus, in granting reconsideration of a prior decision due to a factual error, the Authority reaffirmed its conclusion that the commanding officer's comments did not violate § 7116(a)(1).

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is negotiable that would require the agency to provide the union with information regarding the administrative costs of each RIF affecting unit employees, particularly administrative costs such as severance pay. Matters pertaining to RIFs concern conditions of employment. The union sought the information in order to represent employees who might challenge RIF actions through statutory appeals procedures or through the negotiated grievance procedure and to negotiate future contract provisions relating to RIFs. Under § 7114(b)(4), an agency is required to provide an union with information which is relevant and necessary to the performance of its representational activities. A determination as to whether the information sought is relevant and necessary is made on a case-by-case basis. The union's proposal is negotiable under the Statute notwithstanding the fact that the information provided for in the proposal might in part pertain to nonunit employees and a case-by-case analysis might reveal that the information is not relevant and necessary. Section § 7114(b)(4) is a statutory "floor" and not a "ceiling." The language and the legislative history of that provision does not indicate that Congress intended to prohibit an agency from providing a union with information other than that which is relevant and necessary. Rather, Congress meant that provision to establish the minimum information which must be disclosed to a union.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT

and Case No. 2-CO-20025

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION
NEW YORK REGIONAL OFFICE

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case; Issue

This unfair labor practice case arose as a result of picketing by members of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2369, AFL-CIO, Respondent Union, in the reception area of a District Office of the Charging Party, the Social Security Administration, New York Regional Office. It was alleged that the Union called for and participated in the picketing and thereby violated section 7116(b)(7)(A) and (B) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).[1]

The question presented is whether, under the circumstances, the picketing interfered with agency operations within the meaning of section 7116(b)(7) of the Statute. The question of when such picketing "interferes with an agency's operations" under the Statute is one of first impression for the Authority.

§ 7116. Unfair labor practices

(b) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization--

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Union had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommended that the complaint be dismissed. The case now is before the Authority because of exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and briefs, filed by the General Counsel and the Activity. The Union filed a brief in opposition to the exceptions.

II. Facts

As more fully set out by the Judge, the picketing occurred on August 24, 1982, in the reception area of the Social Security Administration Mid-town District Office in New York City. The office is on the ninth floor of a privately owned office building located at 1515 Broadway.

The Mid-town District Office processes claims for Social Security benefits, retirement benefits, survivors' rights and disability entitlements. Approximately 80 employees handle some 300 interviews each day. These interviews normally are conducted in the work area which is separated from the 17x70 foot reception area-waiting room by five-foot high partitions. One must pass through the reception area to enter the office. Occasionally, street people enter the reception area and are permitted to sit there.

> (7)(A) to call, or participate in, a strike, work stoppage, or slowdown, or picketing of an agency in a labor-management dispute if such picketing interferes with an agency's operations, or
> (B) to condone any activity described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by failing to take action to prevent or stop such activity[.]

. . . .

Nothing in paragraph (7) of this subsection shall result in any informational picketing which does not interfere with an agency's operations being considered as an unfair labor practice.

On approximately August 23, the District Office assistant manager, Michael Pregon, learned that on August 24 the AFGE planned to have a mass demonstration in the Times Square area, near the Mid-town District Office. Anticipating that some of the demonstrators might attempt to enter the District Office facility on the scheduled date, Activity officials decided to put into effect certain operational changes. The record shows, however, that Activity management had no advance knowledge of any plan that picketing actually would occur at the District Office. The operational changes taken consisted of assigning all available claims representatives, including eight employees who normally process paperwork, to interview claimants so that no claimants would be kept waiting in the reception area. Also, two account clerks who are normally stationed in the reception area were moved into the main office area. By reason of these changes, no paperwork was completed on August 24.

The scheduled demonstration at Times Square by AFGE took place as planned on August 24 between 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. At about 12:30 p.m. William Nussbaum, President of AFGE Local 2369 and Regional Vice President of AFGE, National Council of Social Security Field Offices, gathered a group of approximately ten convention delegates of AFGE locals and entered the District Office. A guard on duty in the office let them in. After the group of pickets entered the reception area they turned to the left and paraded in a circle. There was no chanting by the pickets nor did they make any noise or create a disturbance. During the picketing one claimant entered the office and was escorted without incident into the rear work area, and two claimants who were leaving the work section upon completion of their business were escorted out of the office, also without incident. Other than the receptionist, no other employees were present in the reception area except for two guards mentioned below. The record also shows that one unidentified woman sat in the reception area without speaking or being spoken to throughout the picketing.

During the course of the picketing, which lasted approximately ten minutes, some employees peered over the partition while enroute to the photocopying machine or other locations; several supervisors left their desks to appear at the reception area to check on the picketing; and both security guards employed by the Activity were positioned at the reception area. Normally one guard is stationed there and the other one roams the facility. Approximately 20 to 25 claimants were being interviewed in the work area during the picketing. Under normal circumstances there would have been about ten claimants in the reception area waiting to be interviewed. After having circled within the reception area, and following a short discussion between Nussbaum and Pregon, the pickets departed.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the picketing occurred in the course of a labor-management dispute, as required to bring the picketing within the general prohibition of section 7116(b)(7) of the Statute. He then noted that the critical issue was whether the picketing constituted "interference" with the operations of the Office. He reasoned that "interference" must connote "some form of disruption or thwarting of an agency's operations." He went on to explain that in his opinion, "it is doubtful that Congress intended to outlaw picketing which did not seriously interrupt or impair governmental activities. If not, the term 'interference' loses its significance and . . . freedom of expression is endangered." Slip op. at 8. The Judge concluded that, under the circumstances, the picketing did not constitute interference with the operations of the Activity within the meaning of the Statute, and therefore the Union did not commit an unfair labor practice. The Judge also stated that even if the term interference as used in the Statute could be said to include any picketing, he would conclude that the interruption or interference here was de minimis and was not an unfair labor practice. The Judge accordingly recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

In reaching this conclusion, the Judge noted that no claimants who appeared on the day of the picketing were caused to be ignored or neglected; that the pickets did not enter the work area and no attempt was made to interfere with employees' duties or to communicate with them; and that claims were processed without interruption.

As to the argument by the Activity that there was a disruption because management moved the claimants to the work area and out of the reception room before the pickets arrived, and that this prevented a disturbance which would have otherwise taken place, the Judge found that such argument was conjectural. He also found that anticipatory action by management does not serve as a basis for characterizing subsequent picketing as unlawful.

IV. Positions of the Parties Before the Authority

A. The Activity

The Activity excepts to the Judge's conclusion that the picketing did not interfere with its operations within the meaning of the Statute, asserting that the Judge improperly created a de minimis interference standard which is not permitted by the Statute. The Activity also argues that management's precautionary measures resulted in a one-day delay in processing claims because all available employees' duties were switched to interviewing, and that there was substantial disruption caused by the Union's picketing. The Activity contends that the Judge "seemed to down play the degree of actual disruption to the work flow by the admittedly well ordered and peaceful picketing, but he completely over-looked the volatile potential inherent in the situation and the potential injury to the agency's fragile clientele that could have and foreseeably would have occurred had not the office managers taken precautionary measures."

B. The General Counsel

The General Counsel states that under the Statute picketing is prohibited only if it actually interferes with an agency's operations, as distinguished from picketing which only reasonably threatens to cause such interference. However, the General Counsel argues that the picketing in this case did constitute "interference" within the meaning of the Statute because the picketing occurred in an area open only to the public with official business to transact with the Agency and therefore is "inherently disruptive" of the Agency's normal operating procedure. The General Counsel also argues that the inherent and actual interference caused by the picketing would have been greater if the Activity had not taken precautionary steps.

C. Respondent Union's Opposition to Exceptions

The Union argues that for picketing to be an unfair labor practice, any interference caused by the picketing must be more than de minimis. It notes that the legislative history of the Statute demonstrates the intent of Congress to broaden a union's right to picket an agency as evidenced by the change from the Senate version, which would have made any picketing an unfair labor practice if it interfered with or threatened to interfere with agency operations. The Union points out that the final language of section 7116(b)(7) prohibits picketing only if it actually "interferes" with an agency's operations.

V. Analysis

A. Background

As noted, section 7116(b)(7) of the Statute makes picketing of an agency in a labor-management dispute an unfair labor practice if it "interferes with an agency's operations." An examination of the legislative history of section 7116(b)(7) shows that Congress intended to prohibit only picketing that actually interferes with an agency's operations; indeed, Congress chose not to enact language passed by the Senate which would have prohibited picketing that "interferes or reasonably threatens to interfere with an agency's operations" (emphasis added).[2] Instead, Congress adopted the language of the House substitute bill, which did not contain the "reasonably threatens to interfere" standard.

In enacting section 7116(b)(7) of the Statute, Congress took into account the language of Executive Order 11491, as amended, and administrative and court interpretations of the ban on picketing contained in the Order. For example, during consideration of the House substitute bill, Representative Clay noted that in NTEU v. Fasser, 428 F. Supp. 295 (D.D.C. 1976), the district court had held that the absolute ban on picketing under section 19(b)(4) of the Order was overbroad and violated the First Amendment.[3] He then stated that in view of the constitutional principles involved, the language in section 7116(b)(7) was adopted. Additionally, Representative Ford stated, during deliberations on the bill, that section 7116(b)(7) "contains language adopted in lieu of the Federal Labor Relations Council policy statement in this area."[4] The Council's statement, issued in response to the decision in NTEU v. Fasser, had found that picketing under the Executive Order was an unfair labor practice if it actually interfered or reasonably threatened to interfere with agency operations. Statement on Major Policy Issue, FLRC No. 76P-4, 5 FLRC 991 (1977). On the Senate side, it was clear that the Senate's language on picketing was intended to be a continuation of the Executive Order prohibition on picketing that interfered or reasonably threatened to interfere with agency operations.[5] As we have noted, Congress did not enact that language.

In sum, this review of the language and legislative history of section 7116(b)(7) makes clear that Congress rejected the "reasonably threatens to interfere" part of the standard under the Executive Order and instead required actual "interference" for picketing to be an unfair labor practice under the Statute.[6]

B. Discussion

The background set forth above dispels any notion that picketing in a public waiting room of Government premises must always be considered unlawful "interference" with agency operations. The mere appearance of pickets, without more, would not in all circumstances produce the kind of disturbance justifying a total ban on such picketing. As the court said in NTEU v. Fasser, "surely not all Government activity, in all Government offices, requires [a total picketing ban]. Picketing that is strictly informational, and limited in place and focus, does not in all situations create the probability of interference with Government functions sufficient to justify [such a total limitation]." 428 F. Supp. at 299 (citation omitted).

Since picketing is an unfair labor practice only if it interferes with an agency's operations, it must be determined in each case whether the picketing actually caused "interference." The focus of inquiry, as noted in our discussion above, must be to determine whether the inconvenience or disturbance to particular agency operations resulting from the picketing constitutes an unfair labor practice. The picketing in each case must be considered in terms of such factors as the Government interest involved, the sensitivity of the function and its purpose, the location of the picketed operation, the duration of the picketing, and the number and conduct of the pickets.

In each case, the Government interest to be protected is related to the mission of the agency involved. Thus, an operation of high sensitivity, such as one involving national security or with critical functions related to health or safety, could justify a relatively high degree of restraint of even First Amendment-related activities such as picketing. In such cases, even a relatively brief and minor disruption could in some circumstances justify a finding of unlawful interference. On the other hand, in an operation involving a relatively lower degree of sensitivity, the same picketing activities might not be found to be unlawful interference.

[6] The Authority, unlike the Judge, does not place reliance on Representative Ford's statement made after enactment of the Statute. "It is well-settled that courts construing statutory language should give little weight to post-enactment statements by members of Congress." AFGE, Locals 225, 1504 and 3723 v. FLRA, 712 F.2d 640, 647 (D.C. Cir. 1983) (citations omitted).

The purpose of the Activity's operation in this case is to process various Social Security claims. This includes both interviews and processing paperwork. Due to the anticipation of picketing, all available employees were used to conduct interviews that day so that as few clients as possible would be kept waiting in the reception room. As a result of having everyone available to do interviews, no paperwork was done on the day of the picketing. Although both changing the work assignments and increasing interviews while decreasing paper work for that one day represented adjustments in the Activity's operation, it has not been shown that these changes were necessary to the continued functioning of the Activity's operations (the Authority of course makes no suggestion that the action taken in anticipation of the picketing by management was inappropriate), or that the result of increased interviews and decreased paperwork had any appreciable negative impact on the accomplishment of the mission of the picketed operation. While the importance of the timely processing of Social Security claims is self-evident, the record simply does not support a conclusion that the picketing appreciably delayed processing of claims. As suggested above, however, even the slight inconvenience caused by this picketing might be "interference" with a Government operation of a different nature. Thus, for example, a slight change in operating procedures could well be far more than a "slight inconvenience" at a national security facility or an operation dealing directly with health or safety matters.

The number and conduct of the pickets and the duration of their picketing in this case are also factors which demonstrate that the picketing did not interfere with Agency operations. Approximately ten pickets demonstrated silently in a 17 x 70 foot public waiting room of a Social Security District Office for ten minutes, causing no disturbance. Some employees peered over a partition as they passed, several supervisors checked on the picketing and one security guard who normally would not be in the reception area joined the one who was routinely assigned there for the ten minutes during which the picketing occurred. Thus, the number and conduct of the pickets, as well as the location of the picketing in a public area, accessible even to individuals who have no business with the agency, could not be said to have caused interference with Activity operations in any real sense.

C. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms the rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order, as explained above.

In all the circumstances, the Authority concludes that the picketing in this case did not "interfere" with agency operations within the meaning of section 7116(b)(7)(A) of the Statute. Therefore, the complaint shall be dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on May 31, 1983 by the Acting Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, New York, New York Region, a hearing was held before the undersigned on October 20, 1983 at New York, NY.

This proceeding arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (herein called the Statute). It is based on a first amended charge filed on February 23, 1983 by Social Security Administration, New York Regional Office (herein called Social Security) against American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2369, AFL-CIO (herein called Respondent or the Union).

The Complaint herein alleged, in substance, that on or about August 24, 1982 Respondent called for, and participated in, the picketing of the Social Security's reception area at 1515 Broadway, New York, NY and thereby interfered with its operations - all in violation of Sections 7116(b)(7)(A) and (B) of the Statute.

Respondent filed its Answer dated June 22, 1983 wherein it denied the foregoing allegations as well as the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact[1]

1. Social Security maintains a Mid-town District office at 1515 Broadway, New York, NY, a privately-owned office building. The said office, which is located on the ninth floor, processes claims for Social Security benefits, retirement benefits, survivors' rights, and disability entitlements. As a general rule, about 300 people may be interviewed in a day, with about 40% of the interviews conducted between 11:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m. Lunch hour for half the staff starts at 12:00 p.m., while the remaining employees go to lunch at 1:00 p.m.

2. At the relevant time herein about 80 people were employed at the aforesaid District office. The employees were, for the most part, classified as claims representatives, service representatives, clericals, data review technicians, operations supervisors, data transcribers, mail clerks, and field representatives.

3. The facility on the ninth floor[2] has a reception area which is at the entrance to the office. It is rectangular in shape and separated from the main work area by partitions which are five feet high. The reception area is approximately 70 feet by 17 feet. The receptionist's desk is opposite, and about eight feet from the doorway entrance to the

[1] Factual findings are based, in part, upon a Stipulation of Facts which was agreed to by the parties and read into the record.

[2] Social Security also utilizes space on the eighth floor as a training center, and the mail room is located thereat. One individual is employed on that floor.

District office. While the interviews are conducted in the work area - behind the partitions - the reception area serves as a waiting place for those who are to be interviewed. In order to enter and leave the office one must pass through the reception area. Occasionally, street people enter this area and are permitted to sit there. There is an access area, about four and a half feet wide, between the partition on one side of the reception area and the partition on the other side. This leads to the work area and the office of the operations supervisor.[3]

4. At all relevant times herein William Nussbaum was President of Local 2369, and regional vice-president of AFGE, National Council of Social Security Field Offices. Together with other Local AFGE officials, as well as employees of other agencies, Nussbaum decided in and about July, 1982 to stage a demonstration in New York City on August 24, 1982. This action was to be taken in conjunction with the AFGE national convention in the Times Square section of New York City to protest Social Security's alleged "union busting" tactics and also "Reaganomics".

5. Approximately one day before the scheduled demonstration several fliers announcing the intended event came to the attention of Michael Pregon, Assistant Director Manager of the Social Security office at 1515 Broadway, New York City. Anticipating that the demonstrators might attempt to enter the District office on the scheduled date, Pregon conferred with other Social Security officials and it was decided to put into effect certain operational changes. Thus on August 24 Pregon assigned all available claims representatives, including eight employees who usually process paperwork, to interview claimants. As a result of this change, it was contemplated that no claimants would be kept waiting in the reception area. Further, two account clerks who were normally stationed in the reception area to handle claimants were moved into the main office area. By reason of these changes no paperwork was completed on August 24. Claims filed before that date were delayed since employees were instructed to cease work on such claims and take care of individuals who might appear on August 24.

6. The scheduled demonstration at Times Square by AFGE took place between 11:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. on August 24. At about 12:30 p.m. Nussbaum gathered a group of approximately ten convention delegates of AFGE Locals and they entered the District office on the ninth floor. A guard on duty in the office let them in. Two of the individuals carried signs which read "SSA busts unions" and "Reagan won't bust us". Some of the other individuals wore small buttons bearing the AFGE name and legend. Nussbaum testified the union was engaged in a picketing action to protest Social Security's union busting attack against Local 3369 and certain of the latter's officers; that the management officials of the District office were involved in disciplinary action being taken against officers of Local 3369.

7. After the group of pickets entered the reception area they turned to the left and paraded in a circle within said area.[4] Pregon saw them through the access area and came out to the reception room. He told Nussbaum, who led the pickets, that he had no business being there; that it was government property. The union official replied he was on annual leave and had a right to be there. Record facts reflect there was no chanting by the pickets nor did the latter make any noise or create a disturbance. During the picketing one claimant entered the office and said person was escorted into the rear work area. Moreover, two claimants who were leaving the work section upon completion of their business were escorted out of the office while the pickets were there. Nussbaum testified that, other than the receptionist, no other employees were present in the reception room. He further testified that one woman sat there during the picketing, but she never spoke or was spoken to by anybody.

8. During the course of the picketing, which lasted about 10 minutes, some employees peered over the partition while en route to the photocopying machine or other locations. Several operations supervisors left their desks to appear at the reception area and check on the picketing. Two guards are usually employed by the District office. One is stationed in the reception area and the other roams the office. When the picketing occurred management had both guards positioned at the reception area. Further, two policemen approached Edward Lacey, operations officer, and asked whether he wanted the pickets removed. Lacey stated he wouldn't make that decision, that management was endeavoring to minimize the situation.

9. About 20-25 claimants were being interviewed on August 24 at the work area behind the partitions while the pickets were in the reception area. All of these claimants came to the District office before the pickets arrived. Under normal circumstances there would have been about 10 claimants in the reception area waiting to be interviewed.

10. After having circled within the reception area, and following the short discussion between Nussbaum and Pregon, the pickets departed by exiting at the door to the office. They did not return.

11. An article appeared in "The Chief," a Civil Employees Weekly, on September 3, 1982 and also in "The Government Standard", in the September, 1982 issue re the concerns of, and protests by, Local 3369. These articles revealed the objection by the union to Social Security's attempts to discipline several officials of Local 3369 by reason of their taking leave without management's approval of official time therefor. Further, one article reflects that Social Security planned to cut off the salary of the president of Local 3369 as of June 18. As indicated in the article of September 3, a dispute existed over the amount of time union officials were entitled to take under a new national contract.

Conclusions

It is asserted by the General Counsel that the picketing of Social Security of Social Security's District office in the reception area, at 1515 Broadway, New York City, on August 24, 1982 was violative of Section 7116(b)(7)(A) and (B) of the Statute. In furtherance of this assertion it is contended that, as required by that statutory language, the picketing within the office interfered with the activity's operations.

In denying that it violated the Statute[5] as alleged. Respondent makes two principal arguments: (1) no labor-management dispute existed between the parties so as to outlaw the picketing under 7116(b)(7); (2) there was no interference with the operation of Social Security's District office within the meaning of the Statute.

In seeking to determine whether a labor-management dispute existed during the course of picketing, it is noted that the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute does not define the term "labor dispute." Contrariwise, in the private sector a definition thereof is set forth as follows:[6]

> The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure or conditions of employment, or concerning the association or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment,

[5] The applicable section of the Statute, Section 7116(b)(7)(A) provides as follows:

> 7116(b) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization -
> "(7)(A) to call, or participate in, a strike, work stoppage, or slowdown, or picketing of an agency in a labor-management dispute if such picketing interferes with an agency's operations." (underscoring supplied)

> regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.[7]

While no case is presented in the public sector delineating types of controversies which may be deemed to constitute a "labor dispute," the courts have spoken in that regard when confronted with disputes in the private sector. Thus, in N.L.R.B. v. Sands Mfg. Co., CCA 6, 1938, 96 F2d. 721, affirmed in 306 U.S. 332, it was held that such a dispute is present when a controversy exists between employers and employees over seniority rights. Further, when picketing took place at a construction site to publicize the fact that an electrical sub-contractor did not conform to fringe benefits, it was held that this constituted a "labor dispute" Pokigo v. Local No. 719 IBEW (1965), 213 A 2d. 689. Finally, even though the definition set forth in the National Labor Relations Act of a "labor dispute" was not considered by the courts to be a jurisdictional requirement in boycott cases, it was determined that the term has a broad connotation. Thus, in Teamsters Local 812 v. NLRB, 105 LRRM 2659, enforcing 243 NLRB No. 126, the U.S. Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit, stated as follows:

> . . . Congress explicitly stated that labor disputes are not limited to controversies in which the "disputants stand in the proximate relations of employer and employee" . . . and the phrase "any controversy concerning terms and conditions, terms, tenure or conditions of employment" is general enough to include a situation in which a union exerts pressure on businesses to preserve the economic foundation of its members' livelihoods. (footnote 11). (underscoring supplied).

Applying the rationale expressed in the cases cited, supra, I am persuaded that the picketing herein occurred in the course of a labor-management dispute. The September 3, 1982 flier (The Chief-Leader) and the article in the Government Standard, September, 1982 both attest to a controversy which falls within the framework of a labor dispute under Section 7116(b)(7)(A) of the Statute. They indicate concern over a protest against Social Security's proposals to suspend three officials of AFGE Local 3369 and to cut off the salary of the president of Local 3369 as of June 18, 1982. The picketing at Times Square in New York City on August 24 was undertaken to protest the foregoing action by Social Security against local union officials. In extending the picketing to the District office on the ninth floor at 1515 Broadway, the union's controversy with management was not altered. While the picket signs in the reception area were not so self-explanatory, the record reflects that the basic protest still remained the same. As stated in "The Chief," which appeared under date of September 3, 1982, there was a dispute between management and the union re the amount of official time officers of the labor organization could take under the national contract. In this context I am satisfied that the picketing was designed to put pressure on management to rescind or cancel any action against the union officials which affected their status or livelihood, and to publicize its positions re the official time controversy. Accordingly, I conclude that a labor-management dispute, within the meaning of Section 7116(b)(7)(A), existed at the time of the picketing on August 24.

The critical issue posed herein is whether the picketing on August 24 at the Social Security reception area, Mid-town office, constituted "interference" with the operations of said office. A resolution of this question turns on (a) what is deemed interference under 7116(b)(A)(7); (b) whether the resultant effect of the picketing may be described as interfering with the operations of the Social Security office on the ninth floor at 1515 Broadway, New York City.

The case at bar, under the circumstances heretofore set forth, is one of first impression in the public sector. Very little authoritative declarations are available to serve as a predicate for a determination of the aforesaid issue. Under Executive Order 11491, as amended, it was provided in Section 19(b)(4) that picketing was banned when it occurred in connection with a labor management dispute. The prohibition was seemingly absolute. However, despite such broad restriction of picketing by the Executive Order, the U.S. District Court, District of Columbia, in N.L.R.B. v. Fasser, 428 F. Supp. 295 (1976) did not accept such an absolute ban on picketing. It concluded that a Decision and order of the Assistant Secretary of Labor for Labor-Management Relations which adopted such a broad prohibition of picketing violated the First Amendment. The court recognized, however, that picketing of a government facility could be disruptive and injure the government so as to be justifiably banned. Without such disruption, the Docket Court observed, the prohibition of picketing would unduly intrude upon free expression.

In passing the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Congress saw fit to change the language which, under Executive Order 11491, as amended, outlawed picketing per se. Congressman Ford stated in this regard as follows:

> . . . The House rejected the FLRC major policy statement on picketing and provided that only picketing which has in fact interfered with an agency's operations may be considered an unfair labor practice. There is, in other words, no "prior restraint" against proposed picketing which the agency, however reasonably, believes will interfere with its operations. Picketing is a well-recognized long-established first amendment right. This fact must be kept in mind in assessing whether picketing > has in fact "interfered" with an agency's operations. For example, embarrassment to the agency obviously does not constitute interference. (124 Cong. Rec. H. 13608).

It seems apparent that, in enacting the present Statute, Congress was concerned about protecting freedom of speech or expression. Picketing, which may be informational in nature, was not forbidden. The restraint imposed upon picketing was one of non-interference with operational activities of the government. While no precedent appears which will shed light on the interpretation of the term "interference", I am persuaded that it connotes some form of disruption or thwarting of an agency's operations. It may well be argued that an entry upon the premises by any person at any time during working hours is properly deemed to interfere with a host's activities. To the extent that the latter is diverted for however short a time, or stops to scan a picket, one might conclude that interference with work has occurred. Thus the appearance of a picket could, under such a view, be deemed to have affected the operations of an agency and hence be a violation of 7116(b)(7)(A) of the Statute. In my opinion it is doubtful that Congress intended to outlaw picketing which did not seriously interrupt or impair governmental activities. If not, the term "interference" loses its significance and once again freedom of expression is endangered.

Applying this interpretation of the phrase. ". . . if such picketing interferes with an agency's operations", to the case at hand. I am satisfied that the picketing on August 24 at the Social Security office (Mid-town District) did not constitute prohibited interference. Record facts disclose that no claimants who appeared at the office on that date were ignored or neglected by virtue of the picketing. Further, the pickets did not enter the work area occupied by the claims representative, service agents, or other employees, and no attempt was made to interfere with their duties or communicate with them. As confirmed by Social Security's supervisors, claims were processed without interruption. It is contended that, in effect, there was a disruption since management moved the claimants to the work area before the pickets arrived. Social Security argues this move prevented a disturbance which would have otherwise taken place. Apart from the fact that this is conjectural, such anticipated action by management does not serve as a basis for characterizing subsequent picketing by the union as unlawful. The conduct of the pickets must be viewed at the time of the picketing and under the circumstances then prevailing. Assigning all employees to interview claimants on August 24 before the picketing began may have delayed processing of claims filed theretofore. However, the decision to do so did not result from the picketing, and any delay thereof was occasioned by management's election in this regard.

It is true that momentary cessation of work may have occurred by reason of employees in the work area having peered over the partition to view the pickets. There is no showing, however, that such pauses were more than brief stares at those in the reception area, and the record reflects some of the employees stopped to view the picketing en route to the copying machines. Likewise, supervisors Parrotta and Lacey made an appearance in the reception room during the course of the picketing. While it is argued that by so doing the officials were diverted from their tasks, I do not view such a diversion as hampering the activity's operations. In much the same view do I construe the alleged impact upon the work as occasioned by Supervisor Lacey's stationing two guards in the reception area, as well as moving an additional supervisor near the exit door to the office. While both moves may have been inconvenienced management somewhat, I do not conclude they disrupted operations.

Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent's picketing in the reception area of Social Security's Mid-town District office on August 24, 1982 did not constitute interference[8] with the operation of Social Security within the meaning of Section 7116(b)(7)(A) of the Statute, and hence further conclude Respondent Union did not thereby commit an unfair labor practice.

Having concluded for the reasons set forth hereinabove that Respondent did not violate the Statute as alleged, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

The Complaint in Case No. 2-CO-20025 be, and the same hereby is, DISMISSED.

William Naimark
WILLIAM NAIMARK

[8] Assuming arguendo, the term "interference" as used in the Statute could be said to embrace any picketing, I would conclude that such interruption or interference was, in this instance, de minimis and not violative of 7116(b)(7)(A).

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator M. Zane Lumbley filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute in this case was submitted to the Arbitrator pursuant to his continuing jurisdiction reserved in an earlier award concerning the appraisal of the performance of the grievant. In that award the Arbitrator found that in appraising the grievant's performance for the period in dispute, the Activity had violated Article 19 of the parties' National Agreement which provides that the performance appraisal system, as applied, will be "fair, equitable, [and] reasonable." Pursuant to this finding the Arbitrator, in part, had ordered that the grievant be reappraised by management. Accordingly, the Activity had reappraised the grievant and rated her overall as "highly successful." When the grievant disagreed with this rating, claiming that she deserved an overall rating of "outstanding," the continuing jurisdiction of the Arbitrator was invoked to resolve the issue of the propriety of her overall rating of "highly successful."

The Arbitrator noted that under the parties' agreement, highly successful performance is defined as performance which "exceeds the performance standards for a given position 50% of the time or more" and outstanding performance is defined as performance which "exceeds the performance standards for a given position 85% of the time or more." The Arbitrator further noted that in her annual appraisal, the grievant was rated as exceeding the performance standards 50% of the time as to two of her job elements and as meeting the standards as to her other job element. On review of this performance appraisal and the grievant's overall rating, the Arbitrator determined that the rating was arrived at arbitrarily. Specifically, he ruled that there had not been a complete and reasonable review of all the factual information relating to the grievant's performance under the respective job elements as required by the agency handbook on the general performance appraisal system. He further ruled that the appraisal contained numerous contradictions, misstatements of fact, assessments of fault which did not lie with the grievant, and references to performance occurring outside the period stipulated to and designated by the parties to serve as the basis for her appraisal for the two appraisal periods in question. After discounting all of these components of the grievant's appraisal, the Arbitrator concluded that there was nothing in the appraisal of a negative nature and that consequently the grievant deserved an overall rating of "outstanding." Accordingly, as his compliance opinion and award, the Arbitrator ordered that the grievant be given a rating of "outstanding" for the two appraisal periods in question.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Specifically, the Agency argues that by supplanting management's assessment of the grievant's performance with his own evaluation, the Arbitrator contravened the principle enunciated by the Authority that an arbitrator may not substitute his or her judgment for that of management as to what an employee's performance evaluation and rating should be. The Agency maintains that even if the Arbitrator effectively found that the performance standards had not been applied to the grievant fairly, equitably, and reasonably as required by the parties' agreement, there was no basis for the Arbitrator's conclusion that the grievant affirmatively met the standard necessary to achieve an outstanding rating. In particular, the Agency maintains that the mere agreement by the Arbitrator with the Union's arguments disputing certain performance deficiencies contained in management's appraisal of the grievant's performance does not justify the Arbitrator's ruling that the grievant was entitled to have been rated "outstanding."

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

In Social Security Administration, Office of Hearings and Appeals, Region II and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1760, 21 FLRA No. 86 (1986), the Authority reviewed recent decisions discussing in detail the role of an arbitrator in resolving disputes pertaining to performance appraisal matters. In these decisions the Authority had specifically advised that an arbitrator may resolve an employee's grievance claiming to have been adversely affected in his or her performance appraisal by management's application of the established performance standards. The Authority had further advised that in resolving the grievance, the arbitrator properly may determine that management applied the established standards in violation of law, regulation, or an appropriate, nonquantitative review criterion, and the arbitrator to that extent may sustain the grievance. The Authority also had stated that in sustaining the grievance, an arbitrator as a remedy may direct that the grievant's work product be properly evaluated by management or where appropriate that the grievant's work product as appraised by management be granted the rating to which entitled under the established elements and standards. The Authority, however, had cautioned in these decisions that the arbitrator may not conduct an independent evaluation of an employee's performance under the elements and standards established by management and may not substitute his or her own judgment for that of management as to what that employee's evaluation and rating should be. SSA, Office of Hearings and Appeals, slip op. at 4 (citing Bureau of Engraving and Printing, U.S.

Department of the Treasury and Washington Plate Printers Union, Local No. 2, IPDEU, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 39 (1985); Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 148, 21 FLRA No. 15 (1986)).

Applying these decisions in SSA, Office of Hearings and Appeals, the Authority determined that the arbitrator was not authorized to determine that the grievant's case production would have been rated at least as "fully successful" but for the violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. The Authority noted that management's appraisal of the grievant's numerical case production was based on the statistical determination of the grievant's average daily production and the rating of that production under the established standards. The Authority found that this was not the type of appraisal that would permit an arbitrator in an objective, nondiscretionary, and essentially mechanistic manner to determine without an independent evaluation that an aggrieved employee was entitled to a different rating under the established standards. In finding the award deficient, the Authority concluded that the arbitrator, in determining that the grievant's performance would have been rated higher, necessarily conducted an independent evaluation of the grievant's case production performance under the established standards and substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation should have been. The Authority contrasted this case to the Bureau of Prisons case in which exceptions were denied where the arbitrator had expressly examined the performance standards and regulatory definition of outstanding performance, had specifically evaluated the application of the standards to the grievant's performance as described in his performance appraisal, and had determined in accordance with the definition of outstanding performance and management's own appraisal of the grievant's peformance that the grievant was entitled under the established standards to a rating of "outstanding" as to three of his job elements.

In this case the Authority concludes, as it did in SSA, Office of Hearings and Appeals and in contrast to Bureau of Prisons, that the award is deficient. As noted, management's appraisal of the grievant's performance was based on a determination of the percentage of time that the grievant's performance exceeded the established standards. The Authority finds, similar to SSA, Office of Hearings and Appeals, that this is not the type of appraisal that would permit an arbitrator in an objective, nondiscretionary, and essentially mechanistic manner to determine without an independent evaluation that an aggrieved employee was entitled to a different rating under the established standards. Instead, the Arbitrator, in determining that the grievant deserved an overall rating of "outstanding," necessarily conducted an independent evaluation of the percentage of time that the grievant's performance exceeded established standards and clearly substituted his judgment for that of management as to what the grievant's performance evaluation under those established standards should have been. Although the Arbitrator properly could have ordered the grievant reevaluated on finding that management's appraisal of the grievant was not in accordance with the agency's performance appraisal system and apparently Article 19 of the parties' agreement, the Arbitrator instead independently determined what that rating would have been.

V. DECISION

For these reasons, the Authority finds that the Arbitrator's order that the grievant be given a rating of "outstanding" is contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute and the decisions of the Authority and must be modified. Accordingly, the last sentence of the award, ordering that the grievant be given a rating of "outstanding" is struck and the following language substituted:

> Management shall reevaluate in accordance with the general performance appraisal system and Article 19 of the parties' National Agreement the grievant's performance for the period stipulated to and designated by the parties and shall apply that rating to the appraisal periods in question.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 6, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Charles E. Clark filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute submitted to arbitration in this case concerned the procedures for granting official time for representational activities. In settlement of several unfair labor practice charges, the parties agreed that the Activity's implementation of two directives or "management advisories," which provided guidance and instructions for supervisors to follow in approving and recording the use of official time, could be grieved by the Union and submitted to arbitration. The parties further agreed that the scope of the grievance and the award of the arbitrator would be limited to the procedures regarding the granting of official time for representational purposes for specified stewards and officers. Pursuant to this agreement, a grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration in which one of the issues the parties stipulated to was whether the procedures for granting official time implemented by the management advisories violated the official time provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement or past practices of the parties. According to the Arbitrator, the dispute primarily concerned whether the management advisories could properly require the specified officials and stewards to obtain permission in order to perform union representational functions. The Arbitrator determined that such a requirement was not consistent with the language of the parties' agreement and that the past practice of the parties clearly was only for the specified officials and stewards to apprise or inform their supervisors of the need to perform representational activities and not to request permission. Consequently, as his award the Arbitrator ruled that the procedures for granting official time implemented by the management advisories violated the official time provisions of the parties' agreement and past practices. Accordingly, the Arbitrator ordered both management advisories withdrawn with the past practices reinstated until negotiation of a new contract is completed.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Agency's Contentions

In its exception the Agency contends that the award is deficient as contrary to the Statute. Specifically, the Agency argues that the award is inconsistent with management's right to assign work in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Agency maintains that the Arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement restricts management's right to schedule the use of official time consistent with the mission requirements of the Agency and to obtain information necessary to determine whether official time is used in accordance with the Statute.

B. Union Opposition

In its opposition the Union essentially argues that the award only concerns the procedures regarding the granting of official time and does not restrict management's right in particular circumstances to disapprove the use of official time.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority concludes contrary to the Agency that the award is fully consistent with the Statute. The Authority finds that the Arbitrator's award is to the same effect as the Authority's decision and order in Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Medical Center, Muskogee, Oklahoma, 19 FLRA No. 122 (1985). In that case the Authority adopted the Judge's finding that prior to the unilateral implementation by the activity of a requirement that union officers obtain permission from their supervisors in order to take official time, there had been a past practice of allowing union officers to use official time at their discretion. Accordingly, in agreement with the Judge, the Authority determined that the activity's unilateral change in policy without affording the union notice and an opportunity to bargain concerning the change in established practice violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. In addition, the Authority ordered the activity on request of the union to meet and negotiate with regard to any changes in established practices concerning the use of official time by unit employees serving as union officers and with regard to the implementation of any such changes. Based on the decision in VA Medical Center, Muskogee, the Authority finds that the Agency in this case has failed to establish that the similar order of the Arbitrator, withdrawing both advisories and reinstating the established past practices regarding the procedures for granting official time until completion of negotiations, is contrary to the Statute. Furthermore, in agreement with the Union, the Authority in particular concludes that the Agency fails to establish that the award is inconsistent with management's right to assign work. In accordance with the settlement agreement limiting the arbitrator's authority to the procedures regarding the granting of official time, the award does not provide for any entitlement to an allocation of official time to a particular steward or official without regard to management needs and requirements regarding the performance of assigned work. Accordingly, no basis is provided for finding the award contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B). V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Agency's exception is denied.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain of the unfair labor practices alleged in the consolidated complaint, and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. The Judge also found that the Respondent had not engaged in other alleged unfair labor practices and recommended dismissal of the consolidated complaint with respect to such allegations. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions limited to the Judge's dismissal of one allegation in the consolidated complaint.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, and noting particularly the limited nature of the General Counsel's exceptions as well as the absence of exceptions by the Respondent, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings,*/ conclusions and recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Making unilateral changes in the conditions of employment of employees exclusively represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, such as the reorganization of the Title II and Title XVI initial claims units in its South Seattle Branch Office, without notifying AFGE of the proposed change and, upon request, negotiating to the extent required by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

(b) Bypassing the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and dealing directly with bargaining unit employees concerning their conditions of employment.

(c) Telling the representative of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, that the Branch Manager wants his next Documented Progress Review to reflect his union activity in a negative way; threatening said representative with a Performance Improvement Plan; and stating that the Branch Manager is timing the representative's interviews with the public, in order to interfere with or discourage him in the exercise of rights accorded by the Statute.

*/ The General Counsel excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates that such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

(d) Discriminating against employees because of their union activities by evaluating said employees in a Documented Progress Review or other work review in an adverse manner which penalizes approved official time spent on union activities.

(e) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, bargain with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, concerning the impact and implementation of changes stemming from the reorganization in the Title II initial claims unit on or about May 2, 1983, and in the Title XVI initial claims unit on or about April 11, 1983.

(b) Rescind the Documented Progress Review issued to John Mack in March 1983, and reevaluate Mack, taking into consideration Mack's time spent on approved official time for labor-management relations, when assessing his level of production for purposes of that Documented Progress Review.

(c) Post at its facilities at the South Seattle Branch Office copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the District Manager, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region IX, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the remaining allegations of the consolidated complaint be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 6, 1986.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns unfair labor practice complaints issued by the Regional Director, Region Nine, Federal Labor Relations Authority, San Francisco, California, dated July 29, 1983 and September 20, 1983, against the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland (Respondent), based on charges filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (Charging Party or Union). The complaints allege a multitude of statutory violations based upon Respondent's actions in its South Seattle Branch Office. Specifically, the complaints allege that Respondent made various threatening statements regarding the alternate union representative's work performance in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute[1]; that Respondent realized one of these threats by the issuance of an adverse performance document to the alternate Union representative in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute; that Respondent discriminated against another Union representative by denying her designated representative official time to represent her in a personal grievance on the sole basis of her Union status in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute; and that holding a grievance meeting in the absence of her designated Union representative was an unlawful formal discussion in violation of section 7116(a)(1)(5) and (8) of the Statute. The complaints further allege Respondent's failure to bargain in good faith with the Union in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by its unilateral implementation of substantial changes in the staffing of the Title II and Title XVI Initial Claims Units, its refusal to bargain with the Union's designated representative regarding said changes, and by its direct dealing and formal discussions with employees affected by these changes. Respondent filed Answers admitting the jurisdictional allegations as to the Respondent, Charging Party, and the filing of charges, but denying any violative conduct.

A hearing was held in Seattle, Washington. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. The General Counsel and Respondent filed helpful briefs, and the proposed findings have been adopted in whole or in substance where found supported by the record as a whole. Based on the entire record,[2] including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

[1] The Consolidated Amended Complaint dated July 29, 1983 alleged, inter alia, that Respondent timed the work interviews with the public conducted by employee John Mack because of Mack's union activities in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute (GC Exh. 1(q) 7(a), 8 and 15). In light of Respondent's stipulation at hearing in response to General Counsel's subpena duces tecum that no recordation or documentation of timing work interviews taken by claims representatives in the office exists, the General Counsel moved to withdraw that portion of the Consolidated Amended Complaint alleging that Mack's interviews were actually timed in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2). The motion is granted.

[2] The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the transcript is granted; the transcript is hereby corrected as set forth therein.

II. Findings of Fact

A. Background

The South Seattle Branch Office, herein called the Office, is one of Respondent's field offices in the Seattle metropolitan area. The Office processes initial claims and post entitlement actions under Title II and Title XVI of the Social Security program. Its staff consists of approximately 30-37 employees, two operations supervisors and a branch manager (Tr. 267-268). Mary O'Malley was the Union representative and John Mack, the alternate Union representative for the Office at all times material herein (Tr. 28, 202). In addition, John Mack was and is the Union's technical advisor for the Puget Sound area and regional chairman for the Union's appraisal, grievance, safety and contract committees (Tr. 29-30). At all times material herein, Frank Allard was John Mack's immediate supervisor and Mack's management contact for approval of official time and preliminary matters on certain grievances. Branch Manager Ruth Saunders was Allard's supervisor and Mack's management contact for local negotiations (Tr. 41). Respondent does not dispute its knowledge of either O'Malley's or Mack's various Union positions (Tr. 28-29, 31; 202-203). During the period of time relevant to the present charges, Mack and/or O'Malley have processed approximately 36 grievances and over three dozen unfair labor practice charges involving working conditions in the Office generally and Branch Manager Ruth Saunders specifically (Tr. 32).

B. Respondent's Alleged Intimidation of Mack

1. The Documented Progress Review

A Documented Progress Review, herein called a DPR, is a periodic written supervisory assessment of an employee's performance between annual appraisals (Tr. 41-42). It is designed "to identify and resolve problems in the employee's performance." (Jt. Exh. 1, p. 38). In mid-February, Operations Supervisor Allard initiated a discussion with John Mack concerning Mack's upcoming DPR wherein he stated that Branch Manager Ruth Saunders had told him (Allard) that she was angry with Mack about discussions Mack had with Vicki Winn, another operations supervisor in the Office, regarding certain proposed changes in working conditions and wanted Mack's Union activities to be reflected on his next DPR; that she wanted his next DPR to be negative. Allard told Mack that he had informed Saunders that a negative DPR was inappropriate and that Mack's Union activities should not be reflected on his DPR. Allard also told Mack that Saunders had stated she was upset with the quantity of Mack's work compared to other employees and that he was spending too much time on Union activities. Allard said he disagreed with Saunders on that, but warned Mack that Saunders was watching his work and that he had better be careful (Tr. 42-43).[3] Employee O'Malley corroborated Mack's testimony in all material respects (Tr. 203-204).

Mack, one of four claims representatives in his unit, received his DPR on March 2 from Allard. Of the four, only Mack was a Union official. During the period covered by the DPR Mack spend 20-25% of his total work time on Union activities. The DPR stated as to Mack: "Overall and in each generic job task your performance has been fully satisfactory since October 29, 1982." However, the DPR stated that Mack "should strive to approximate taking 25% of the interviews in a four person unit, and 33% in a three person unit," and noted that Mack would have to increase his overall productivity to remain fully satisfactory overall. (Tr. 44-45; GC Exh. 2). Allard testified that this was an attempt to create a fair share baseline from which other factors or variables, such as future official time, would be taken into account (Tr. 357). Although Saunders testified that she reviewed the DPR prior to its issuance and instructed Allard that Mack's official time would have to be subtracted from the 25% workload Allard was expecting Mack to carry (Tr. 275), the DPR issued to Mack on March 2, 1983 set forth the 25% productivity standard without any allowance for the official time Mack was utilizing for Union activities (Tr. 53; GC Exh. 2).[4] Unlike Mack's DPR, the February/March 1983 DPR's issued to the three other claims representatives in his unit do not contain a fixed and objective percentage expectation of productivity; two of these three DPR's reference a "fair share" standard (GC Exh. 2(a) to (d)).

[3] Allard admits discussing Mack's upcoming DPR with Mack in mid-February but denies saying that Saunders wanted Mack's DPR to negatively reflect his Union activities (Tr. 362-363). I credit Mack's specific and detailed testimony on this point.

[4] Saunder's testimony that the DPR did reflect Mack's Union activities is not credible (Tr. 347-348). First, the DPR on its face sets forth a strict 25% standard without any limitation or consideration of time spent on Union activities. Second, Saunders's assertion contradicts her own prior testimony that when she reviewed the DPR she was aware of the problem that no consideration was made for Mack's Union activities and instructed Allard to deduct that time. According to Saunders, Allard didn't have the official time calculation at the time she reviewed the DPR with him (Tr. 275). Notwithstanding her alleged concerns about the official time issue, Saunders admitted on cross examination that she never directed Allard to change the final DPR (Tr. 348). Mack's next DPR, issued in August of 1983, several months after the instant charge was filed, reiterates that 25% production expectation, but stated that Mack's Union activities had been considered in connection therewith (GC Exh. 42).

2. The Performance Improvement Plan

A Performance Improvement Plan, herein called PIP, is a supervisor's written plan identifying an employee's performance deficiencies. It sets forth actions which must be taken by the employee to improve performance and contains provisions for counseling, training, reassignment, or other assistance as appropriate. A PIP is established when an employee's performance indicates potential unsatisfactory performance (Jt. Exh. 1, Article 21, Section 7(c), p. 38; Tr. 46). The possible consequences of failure to meet the requirements of a PIP include reassignment, denial of promotions, and/or termination (Tr. 46).

Shortly after Allard's discussion with Mack on Mack's upcoming DPR, but before Mack received it, Allard initiated a further discussion with Mack on his work performance (Tr. 144; 45-46). This discussion occurred in the parking lot of the Office as Allard and Mack were leaving for the day (Tr. 46-47). Allard told Mack that Saunders wanted to put Mack on a PIP based on low productivity, but that Allard had told Saunders a PIP was not warranted at that time.[5] Allard also told Mack that Saunders had timed his work interviews in comparison to one of Mack's co-workers, Tinie Briscoe, and found that Briscoe did three interviews in the time it took Mack to do one.[6] Allard said Saunders had asked him if Mack could be written up for this (Tr. 47-48).

3. The Sick Leave Investigation

Allard approved sick leave for Mack on March 10 (Tr. 50-51). Mack stayed home with stomach cramps and diarrhea that day (Tr. 52). Mack has never been counseled regarding sick leave abuse and has a sick leave balance in excess of 550 hours (Tr. 51).

After Mack was placed on sick leave, Saunders called Carol Hearn, Branch Manager of the Social Security office in Seattle West where Mack's wife, Carol, worked as a data review technician. Saunders called to ask whether Carol Mack was working that day (Tr. 199-200). Carol Mack was at work that day, she overheard the call being announced and, upon her inquiry, was advised of the substance of the call by Ms. Hearn.

[5] Allard testified that he told Mack management was considering putting him on a PIP and that he had discussed the matter with Saunders, but nothing final had been decided. (Tr. 363-364). Betty Heavey, an employee in the Office who was riding home with Allard that day, overheard this conversation and corroborated Mack's testimony that Allard said Saunders had asked him to put Mack on a PIP (Tr. 196-197).

[6] Allard testified that Mack was the one who mentioned the timing of interviews. (Tr. 365). I credit Mack's testimony in this respect.

Saunders testified that she called Carol Hearn to ascertain whether Carol Mack was working on the day in question even though she had not observed John Mack to be a sick leave abuser. Saunders explained that Hearn had recently made a similar call to her to ascertain John Mack's whereabouts on a day that Carol Mack had taken off on leave. Saunders stated that there was no abuse of sick leave on John's part, and she wasn't sure what was going on with Carol. (Tr. 286-287). Saunders had never made such an inquiry regarding any other employee. (Tr. 337-338). She dropped the matter, and nothing was said about this to the Macks. (Tr. 287-288). Carol Mack testified on rebuttal that she took no sick leave from January 1 to March 10. (Tr. 418-419).

4. Saunders' Call to Saul

From 8:00 to 9:00 a.m. on the morning of February 16 management conducted a general staff meeting attended by the entire Office (Tr. 53). Most of the meeting was taken up with a training session, conducted by Allard, on protective filing (the protection of a Social Security claimant's right to file a claim in advance of when payment would be due). At the end of the meeting, Mack became involved in a heated exchange with Saunders and Winn regarding what he perceived to be inconsistencies in the protective filing instructions given employees at the staff meeting. Saunders became upset and terminated the meeting (Tr. 53-56). Shortly thereafter, at roughly 10:00 a.m. that morning, Saunders telephoned Jeff Saul, the Union's Vice President in charge of appointing and dismissing Union representatives. Saunders informed Saul that Mack had lied to her and that Mack was unfair (Tr. 245-246).[7]

C. The Alleged Denial of O'Malley's Right to Representation

On March 22 and 24, O'Malley filed two separate grievances relating to denial of official time in order to file an unfair labor practice charge and designated Mack as her representative in each (Tr. 206-207; GC Exh. 34, 35). She designated Mack because she wanted union representation, he was the alternate representative, and he was trained and experienced in handling grievances (Tr. 207). On March 23, Mack twice requested official time to process O'Malley's March 22 grievance. Both requests were denied by management on the grounds that official time may be granted only to the primary representative and the local representative must represent herself

[7] Saunders admits making the call to Saul and telling him that Mack was a liar, but denies doing so on February 16th (Tr. 291). I credit the testimony of Saul in this regard. Saul's testimony was also corroborated by Mack's testimony that a couple of days after the February 16 meeting Saul told him that Saunders had called on February 16 regarding Mack's performance as a Union representative (Tr. 56).

(GC Exh. 4, 5; Tr. 56-59). The denials were based on advice received by Saunders from Richard A. Morris, Regional office management analyst, concerning management's understanding of Article 30, Appendix F, section (k) of the collective bargaining agreement. The advice was that where the local representative has filed a grievance and designated another representative, management will accept the designation of representative; however, no official time will be granted. (Tr. 292-293; 399-400). One month after the denial of his requests for official time to represent O'Malley, Allard informed Mack he could have taken annual leave or leave without pay for this purpose (Tr. 61).

O'Malley again requested union representation at her first step grievance meeting with Allard which was held by Allard on April 1 (Tr. 209). At that time, Allard promised O'Malley that he would address the representation issue in his first step decision (Tr. 210). Allard failed to do so and did not address the issue until O'Malley wrote a subsequent memorandum to him requesting management's position in writing (Tr. 210; GC Exh. 36-38). Management's position as indicated in two memoranda from Allard and one from Saunders through Winn was that the grievances were Union-initiated issues, the primary representative was on official time, and the Union representative should represent himself/herself absent a request for annual leave or leave without pay from the designated representative (Tr. 213-214; GC Exh. 38 to 40). A national grievance on official time was filed July 13, 1982 (Tr. 260-261). One of the issues involved therein was the denial of union representation to union representative grievants under certain circumstances (Tr. 255). The grievance itself was not introduced nor was there any further evidence delineating those circumstances of denial involved in the grievance. It is undisputed that the denial of O'Malley's right to union representation in her March 1983 grievances is not and was not the subject of any pending grievance (Tr. 401-402; 415).

D. The Title XVI Changes

At all times material herein there were three claims representatives in the Title XVI Initial Claims Unit, O'Malley, Heavey and Furugori. The Title XVI Claims Unit in the Office processes both aged and disability claims (Tr. 216). Aged claims are undisputedly the more difficult workload because of their restrictive time limits, the fact that the claims representative makes a payment determination on all such claims as opposed to 20% of the disability claims, they are reviewed five times more frequently than disability claims for appraisal purposes, and have more complex eligibility factors (Tr. 216-217; 63-64; 191-192).[8] The rotation of the aged workload within Office's Title XVI Initial Claims Unit had previously been negotiated with the Union on two occasions. The first agreement, dated October 19, 1982, assigned the aged claims to Betty Heavey for six months (GC Exh. 15). The second agreement dated January 19, 1983 reassigned the aged workload to Mary O'Malley for six months and then to Kim Furugori "barring any unanticipated changes." (GC Exh. 16).

[8] The medical determination in disability cases is made by appropriate state agencies rather than by Social Security Administration employees (Tr. 64).

Prior to April of 1983 O'Malley was assigned the aged claims and some disability claims. Heavey and Furugori worked only on disability claims (Tr. 216). On March 31 Saunders verbally proposed the following changes to O'Malley: that O'Malley be reassigned to the post-entitlement unit; that Heavey resume the aged workload; and that a new claims representative, Verna Bush, be brought into the Initial Claims unit to replace O'Malley (Tr. 217-218). O'Malley confirmed Saunders' proposals by memorandum to Saunders dated April 1 wherein she designated John Mack as the Union's bargaining representative on the proposed changes (GC Exh. 6). O'Malley designated Mack primarily because she was personally affected by the change and didn't want to create the appearance of a conflict of interest and, secondarily, because she was going to be out the office for the following week (Tr. 218-219). Mack submitted a formal bargaining request and opening proposals to Saunders by memorandum of April 1 (GC Exh. 7). Saunders replied on April 1 that Mack's proposals were non-negotiable (GC Exh. 8). Mack responded by a second memorandum, also dated April 1, that he would petition the Authority for a negotiability determination on his proposals and/or bargain to impasse on alternative proposals (GC Exh. 9). On April 4 Saunders stated that the proposed staffing changes did not substantially impact either O'Malley or Heavey and were therefore non-negotiable (GC Exh. 10). On April 5 Mack informed Saunders in writing that he was in the process of preparing a new position paper more clearly outlining the Union's proposals (GC Exh. 11). On April 6 Mack submitted an impact statement to Saunders citing prior rotation agreements and the detrimental effect of O'Malleys frequent reassignments (GC Exh. 12).[9] Saunders replied by memorandum dated April 7 wherein she restated her position of no impact and gave an April 11 implementation date for her proposed changes, but agreed to consider any proposals Mack cared to submit (GC Exh. 13).

Mack submitted the following new counter-proposals on April 7 in lieu of his previously submitted proposals: (1) that the staffing changes be made in a fair and equitable manner; (2) that the changes not violate prior agreements; (3) that the changes not unfairly disadvantage any particular employee or impose any unreasonable or unnecessary workload burden upon any particular employee; and (4) that employees' views be fully and fairly considered (Tr. 74-75; GC Exh. 14). The employees' views were represented to be recommendations that (1) Betty Heavey not be reassigned the aged workload; (2) that Mary O'Malley not be reassigned to the SSI PE Unit; and (3) that Kim Furugori be reassigned to SSI PE. By memorandum dated April 8, Saunders refused to bargain on the Union's new proposals (GC Exh. 17). The Title XVI staffing changes were implemented by Allard's April 11 memorandum to employees (GC Exh. 18).

[9] The post-entitlement work to which O'Malley was reassigned did not involve payment authorization, a grade determining factor for the claims representative, GS-10 (Tr. 219-220).

Upon receipt of this memorandum on April 11, claims representative Betty Heavey, a bargaining unit employee, suggested certain changes in Allard's initial memorandum to the effect that she not take over O'Malley's caseload, that she be allowed to work through her own pending disability caseload, take the aged cases from O'Malley, and have an alpha split for incoming cases with the new employee. Allard said that would be okay with him. (Tr. 194, 376). After meeting with Heavey on this matter, Allard implemented her suggestions by a second memorandum also dated April 11 (GC Exh. 19; Tr. 194-195). The Union was not provided prior notice or the opportunity to be present at the meeting between Allard and Heavey (Tr. 82; 221). Nor was the Union provided prior notice or the opportunity to bargain on Allard's accommodation of Heavey's requested amendment to management's initial proposal.[10]

On April 12 Saunders told O'Malley she would not deal with Mack on the proposed Title XVI changes and that she felt Mack was wasting his time preparing for negotiations. O'Malley informed Saunders that Mack was the Union's designated representative in this matter. Saunders then requested a written designation of Mack. O'Malley gave Saunders a written designation of Mack as the Union's bargaining representative for all matters he became involved with during O'Malley's absence from the office.[11] Saunders repeated that she would not consult with Mack and confirmed this in writing by letter to O'Malley dated April 18. Saunders stated that she would contact Mack only in O'Malley's absence and referenced Article 30, Appendix F, Sections E and F of the agreement. (Tr. 221-223; GC Exh. 21, 25).

[10] Allard claimed that he ran the amended proposal by Mack (Tr. 377). I credit Mack's testimony in this regard in light of the record as a whole.

[11] The Title XVI reorganization was one of several matters Mack dealt with in the week of O'Malley's absence (April 4-8) (Tr. 219).

E. The Title II Changes

Prior to May of 1983 there were three different specialized work groups in the Office handling Title II claims. One group, supervised by Allard, consisted of four claims representatives, including Mack, and specialized in disability claims. The second group consisted of two part-time claims representatives, also supervised by Allard, who did the post-entitlement work. A third group of two claims representatives, supervised by Winn, specialized in retirement/survivor claims (Tr. 87-88).

On Thursday, April 7, when O'Malley was out of the office, Saunders sent Mack a memorandum proposing that Barbara Larsen, one of the two claims representatives handling retirement/survivor claims, be reassigned to a Title XVI unit on a trial basis for six months. The memorandum was addressed to Mack as the alternate local representative and requested his "comments" by April 15 with implementation to occur April 22 (GC Exh. 23).

Mack requested official time to meet with Saunders on Larsen's proposed reassignment the following Monday, April 11 (Tr. 90-91; GC Exh. 24). On April 12 Saunders denied the request for official time for Mack, stating that since O'Malley was the primary representative and was now back from leave, she was the proper representative to handle labor-management relations matters. (Tr. 91; GC Exh. 24). O'Malley reminded Saunders on April 12 that Mack was the Union's designated representative in this matter and confirmed this designation in writing by memorandum dated April 13 (Tr. 224; 221-222; GC Exh. 25). Following this written designation, Mack made a second request for official time to meet and consult on Larsen's reassignment. The latter request was also denied by Allard on April 14 on the grounds that O'Malley was present to conduct Union business (Tr. 95; GC Exh. 26).

On April 18 Saunders discussed with O'Malley the change in the Title II Unit, as well as another change she was making. (Tr. 316). Saunders suggested to O'Malley that there be a staff meeting to pull together information from employees. Saunders indicated that no decisions would be made at the meeting, and it would just be information gathering. O'Malley thought it was a good idea and had no problem with it.[12]

On April 20 Saunders met with the dozen or so employees involved in Title II work in the break room. Prior to the meeting, she reminded Mack, in O'Malley's absence, of the meeting and that he would be there in his Union capacity. (Tr. 317, 396).[13] She also stated at the meeting that [12] O'Malley denied that she received any notification of the April 20 meeting. I credit Saunders' testimony on this point.

[13] Mack denied that he received any notice of the meeting prior to the meeting. I credit the testimony of Saunders and Winn concerning a conversation with Mack prior to the meeting.

Mack was representing the Union and told him to "put on your union cap." (Tr. 317, 381, 397).

Immediately after the meeting ended, Mack again requested official time to meet with Saunders to discuss the impact of Larsen's reassignment. Saunders responded that the Union would be given an opportunity to bargain when management formulated its proposal on the Title II reorganization (Tr. 100-101; GC Exh. 27).

Saunders continued the meeting with the same employees at 8:00 a.m. the following day, April 21, to finish up the meeting. (Tr. 318). At this meeting, Saunders narrowed the reorganization to two options: appoint someone to Larsen's work or establish a consolidated Title II initial claims unit responsible for both disability and retirement/survivor claims. She solicited employees' comments on each of these two options. Employees expressed concerns about training, performance appraisals, and about controlling the work flow. Saunders stated she would consider the employees' concerns and make her decision. (Tr. 103-105).

On April 22, Saunders presented nine proposals to O'Malley for comment by April 27 with a projected May 2 implementation date (GC Exh. 28). O'Malley then distributed the proposals to employees for their comments (Tr. 105).

Saunders notified O'Malley on April 25 that she wanted to meet with employees on April 26 regarding the Title II changes. O'Malley agreed to the meeting, but told Saunders she would not bargain in such a setting and expected Saunders to submit final proposals to her following the April 26 meeting with employees and, based on Saunders' final proposals, O'Malley would decide whether to invoke bargaining (Tr. 225).

Saunders held a third meeting with the same employees on April 26. O'Malley also attended. Saunders went over her April 22 proposals and solicited employee reaction to each (Tr. 108). Employees again expressed concern over tally board control, folder location, training and performance documentation (Tr. 108-109; 226-229). Saunders ended the meeting by stating she would consider the employees' concerns expressed and get back to the employees (Tr. 109). After the April 26 meeting ended O'Malley asked Saunders whether Saunders would give her revised proposals. Saunders stated she would do so (Tr. 229).[14]

[14] Saunders testified that she and O'Malley reached agreement on the Title II changes immediately after the meeting and Saunders was supposed to reduce it to writing (Tr. 321). O'Malley's testimony that it was merely agreed that Saunders would give the Union revised proposals is more credible considering the record as a whole.

On April 27 Saunders issued a memorandum to the Title II staff encouraging them to accept despecialization. (GC Exh. 29). The Union received no advance notice of the April 27 memorandum prior to its issuance to employees (Tr. 110; 229-230). After reviewing a copy of the memorandum, Mack asked Saunders on April 28 when the Union could expect her final proposal. Saunders said that the April 27 memorandum was her final proposal. Mack replied that the memorandum merely outlined some staff training but did not cover all the issues discussed at the April 26 meeting. Saunders then stated that Allard was formulating a policy memorandum. Mack showed Saunders a list of six employee concerns expressed at the April 26 meeting. He told her that the Union wanted to ensure that these six concerns were addressed in management's final proposal on the reorganization. He also told Saunders the Union would want to negotiate any of the concerns not incorporated into her final proposal. Saunders told him to discuss the list with Allard (Tr. 111 to 113; GC Exh. 30). On April 29 Mack gave Allard a copy of the list of concerns he had shown Saunders the day before (GC Exh. 30). Allard reviewed the list and they discussed it briefly. Allard told Mack he would get back to him (Tr. 114-116). Instead, Allard distributed two policy memoranda announcing the Title II reorganization to employees (Tr. 117; 230).[15]

The changes outlined in the April 29 memorandum were implemented by Respondent on May 2 (Tr. 121). At the time of implementation, the Union had the following outstanding concerns: (1) did the April 29 memoranda replace Saunders' April 22 proposal or were they an addition thereto; (2) in the new initial claims unit, what type of work would be reviewed for evaluative purposes and by whom; (3) would Larsen receive the same benefits regarding training and an evaluation-free period as the others in the event she opted to return to Title XVI work after six months; (4) were the alpha splits determining work distribution fair and equitable [16];

[15] Saunders claims she showed the April 29 memoranda to Mack prior to their distribution to employees and that he requested official time to poll the employees thereon (Tr. 321-322). Saunders' testimony is refuted by Mack and cannot be supported by the weight of the evidence. As evidenced by GC Exh. 4, 5, 24, 26 and 27 Mack habitually utilized official time request forms to request official time for representational matters thereby creating a record of such time. There is no evidence of any such form here.

[16] For example, under Allard's April 29 policy memoranda, Mack was given an equal share of case responsibility despite Respondent's knowledge of his extensive use of work time for representational activities during this period (Tr. 120-121).

and (5) what input would the Union have in management's reassessment of the new structure following the 30 day grace period. The Title II changes were implemented by Respondent. The Union reached no agreement with Respondent thereon (Tr. 122 to 123).[17]

III. Discussion, Conclusion and Recommendations

A. Alleged Violations of Section 7116(a)(1)

1. Paragraph 5(a) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30242)

The credible testimony establishes that Allard told Mack that Saunders had said Mack's next DPR should negatively reflect Mack's union activities. It is well established that protected activity cannot be considered or referenced, even non-judgmentally, in connection with performance discussions. Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, 12 FLRA 667, 12 FLRA No. 132 (1983) citing Naval Facilities Engineering Command, 3 A/SLMR 209 (1973). Statements implying that union activity is a "negative factor" in a performance rating restrain employees in their right to form, join, and assist labor organizations without fear of penalty or reprisal and, therefore, constitute unlawful interference in violation of Section 7116(a)(1). Social Security Administration, supra citing U.S. Customs Service, Miami, Florida, 6 A/SLMR 695, Supplement 6 A/SLMR 259, 262 (1976). Accordingly, Allard's statement was violative of Section 7116(a)(1), as alleged.

2. Paragraph 5(b) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30242)

Shortly after Allard's initial threat that Saunders was concerned about Mack's low productivity due to Union activities and her desire to have such activities negatively reflected on Mack's upcoming DPR, Allard told Mack that Saunders also wanted to put him on a PIP based on low productivity. Although Mack's Union activities were not explicitly mentioned in Allard's statement about the PIP, Mack could reasonably have inferred that Saunders had asked about putting him on a PIP due to his Union activities inasmuch as Allard had recently told Mack that Union activities were causing his low productivity. Thus, Allard's statement regarding the PIP was an implicit threat against Mack's continued utilization of official time for union activities. See, Social Security Administration, supra:

[17] O'Malley sent Saunders a July 29 memorandum several months after the instant charges citing several "commitments" regarding the changes (R Exh. 4). O'Malley testified that she wrote the memorandum pursuant to employee request and that had there been any prior collective bargaining agreement she would have filed a grievance (Tr. 403). Saunders confirmed on cross-examination that she considered the policy statements contained in the April 29 memoranda on the restructuring of the Title II unit as management commitments upon which employees should be able to rely. (Tr. 332-333).

> It is apparent that any threats to employees, express or implied, in respect to their union activities will have a restraining effect upon such employees and will constitute an unfair labor practice, quoting U.S. Customs, Id., at p. 261.

3. Paragraph 5(c) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30242)

The record establishes that during Allard's discussion with Mack concerning the PIP he also told Mack that Saunders had timed his work interviews with the public and found Mack a very slow worker. Allard said Saunders then asked if Mack could be written up for this. The statement that Mack's interviews were being timed (made at the same meeting where Mack's low productivity was being discussed and soon after he had been informed that Saunders attributed his low productivity to time spent on union activities) was inherently threatening and discriminatory, particularly in light of the undisputed testimony that no other employee had been timed by management. Accordingly, this statement constitutes an independent violation of Section 7116(a)(1).

4. Paragraph 5(d) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30242)

The complaint alleges that Respondent, by Saunders, subjected John Mack to disparate treatment when he called in to request sick leave. Saunders called another manager to ascertain whether Mack's wife was at work in another office on that day. The Complaint alleges that this action was taken for the purpose of discouraging John Mack from engaging in activities protected by section 7102 of the Statute.

The test established by the Authority to determine unlawful interference is not the employer's intent, nor the subjective perceptions of the employee, but whether, under all the circumstances, the employer's conduct may reasonably tend to coerce or intimidate the employee or, in the case of a statement, whether the employee could have reasonably drawn a coercive inference from the statement. Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, 9 FLRA 199; Army and Air Force Exchange Service, Ft. Carson, Colorado, 9 FLRA 620 (1982). A manager has the responsibility of insuring that employees abide by leave regulations and must have discretion to initiate appropriate investigations and exchange pertinent information with other managers. I credit Ms. Saunders' explanation for her inquiry. Her inquiry was discreet and directed only to another manager. She made no effort to communicate to Mack on his wife that they were under some kind of investigation. She promptly dropped the matter. In my view, a preponderance of the evidence does not establish unlawful interference with protected activities in this respect.

B. Alleged Discrimination Against the Union Representatives; Alleged Refusal to Honor Designation of Union Representatives; Alleged Bypass

1. Alleged Critical Appraisal of John Mack on February 23, 1983 in Violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (2) (Case No. 9-CA-30242)

Section 7102 of the Statute guarantees an employee's right to form, join, and assist a labor organization. The abridgement of this right by discrimination in connection with hiring, tenure, promotion or other conditions of employment is an unfair labor practice under Section 7116(a)(1) and (2). See, U.S. Marine Corps, Marine Corps Logistics Base, Barstow, California, 5 FLRA 715, 5 FLRA No. 97 (1981). In order to establish a violation of sections 7116(a)(2) and (4) there must be a showing that the alleged discriminatee was engaged in protected activity, that the Respondent had knowledge of such activity, and that the Respondent took action against the discriminatee because of its anti-union animus. Veterans Administration Medical Center, Buffalo, New York, 13 FLRA No. 46 (1983); Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, Boston Air Route Traffic Control Center, Nashua, New Hampshire, 11 FLRA No. 67 (1983).

Respondent's knowledge of Mack's union activities was clearly established and is not in dispute. During the period covered by his February 23 DPR, Mack spent from 20 to 25% of his total work time on representational activities. Notwithstanding this knowledge, Respondent issued Mack a DPR on February 23 establishing a productivity goal that he take 25% of the interviews in a four person unit, which took no account of the 20 to 25% of work time Mack was then spending on Union activities. The DPR further stated that Mack would have to increase his current productivity to remain fully satisfactory.

Respondent claims that the productivity goal was merely a baseline from which future official time would be discounted. However, given the purpose of the progress review, which is to identify and resolve problems in the employee's performance at intervals during the appraisal period, this explanation is unconvincing. Saunders admitted that the productivity goal set forth therein should have, but did not, take Mack's union activities into account.

Discrimination is further apparent from a comparison of Mack's DPR with those simultaneously issued his three co-workers, none of whom had any involvement in Union activities. None of the other DPR's contain a fixed, numerical productivity goal but rather reference a more subjective "fair share" standard. It is well established that disparate treatment of Union representatives evinces a discriminatory motive. See, Veterans Administration Medical Center, Shreveport, Louisiana, 5 FLRA 216, 5 FLRA No. 27 (1981).

The timing of Mack's February 23 DPR, during a period when he was involved in the processing of three dozen or so grievances and an equal number of unfair labor practice charges against Office management, further demonstrates Respondent's discriminatory intent. Respondent was fully aware of these activities and had authorized Mack official time to perform them. The concurrence of protected activity and the critical appraisal warrants an inference of discriminatory motive. Veterans Administration Medical and Regional Office Center, White River Junction, Vermont, 6 FLRA 381, 6 FLRA No. 68 (1981); Norton Concrete Co., 249 NLRB 1270, 104 LRRM 1347 (1980). Saunders' animus toward Mack is further established by her complaints about him to the Union official authorized to terminate Mack's appointment as a Union representative immediately following Mack's disagreement with her policies during a staff training meeting.

Although Mack's DPR ultimately contained a satisfactory rating, the satisfactory rating is totally irrelevant to the discriminatory production goals established by the DPR and to Allard's statement therein that Mack's failure to meet these goals would result in an unsatisfactory rating.

In summary, the discriminatory nature of Mack's February 23 DPR is established in this record by the document itself, Saunders' own admissions, the evidence of disparate treatment, and by the suspicious timing of the action. Accordingly, the DPR is violative of Section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

2. Alleged Discriminatory Denial of Official Time to John Mack to Represent Mary O'Malley; Alleged Discriminatory Denial to O'Malley of the Right to be Represented by the Union at Formal Grievance Meetings; Alleged Refusal to Bargain in Good Faith By Refusing to Honor O'Malley's Designation of Mack as Union Representative and Afford Mack Prior Notice of Grievance Meeting (Case No. 9-CA-30344)

These alleged unfair labor practices arise out of Respondent's refusal to grant official time to John Mack to represent O'Malley in her grievances. The refusal was based on Respondent's interpretation of Article 30, Appendix F, the official time provision of the collective bargaining agreement negotiated pursuant to section 7131(d) of the Statute. The contract is subject to arguable and variable interpretations in this respect, and relief for alleged violation of such negotiated rights would be available through the parties' negotiated grievance procedure. In these circumstances, the denial of official time to John Mack, a contractual right, did not rise to the level of interference with rights guaranteed by the Statute, e.g. the right to form, join, or assist a labor organization, or constitute discrimination to discourage the exercise of such rights. Cf. Department of the Air Force, Base Procurement Office, Vandenburg Air Force Base, California, A/SLMR No. 485, 5 A/SLMR 112, FLRC No. 75A-25, 4 FLRC 587 (1976); Iowa National Guard and National Guard Bureau, 8 FLRA No. 101, 8 FLRA 500, 512-513 (1982).

Since the alleged refusal to bargain with Mack regarding O'Malley's grievance and the alleged refusal to provide Mack with prior notice of the grievance meetings also arise out of this basic disagreement over official time, I conclude that a preponderance of the evidence also does not establish these as unfair labor practices. O'Malley's grievances on their face were not strictly personal grievances, but dealt with her use of official time as a Union representative. O'Malley is an intelligent and well-informed primary local Union representative. Under all the circumstances, she either was well aware, or should have been well aware, that the dispute with management was not over her right to have a representative at the meetings, but on that representative's use of official time. She had notice of the meetings and, as the primary representative, could have designated a representative to attend these sessions on her or the Union's behalf on other than official time.

3. Paragraph 11(b) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30351); Paragraph 8(a) of the September 30 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30395); Alleged Refusal to Honor the Union's Designation of Mack as Its Bargaining Representative.

The record reflects that when O'Malley, the local representative, was out of the office, Respondent did not fail to deal with Mack, the alternate representative. However, when O'Malley was in the office, Respondent refused to honor O'Malley's designation of Mack as the Union's bargaining representative. The General Counsel argues that Respondent's refusal to honor the Union's designation of Mack is indefensible and violative of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Respondent defends on the basis of its interpretation of Article 30, Appendix F of the collective bargaining agreement whereby the parties provided for a formalized bargaining relationship at the national, regional, and local level and official time for various Union officials. Respondent contends that at the local level, the Union, through the agreement, made a commitment to utilize the local representative as the individual with whom management should deal regarding labor relations matters and that it should deal with the alternate representative (Mack) only when the local representative is out of the office. The General Counsel replies that the contractual provisions fall far short of a clear and unmistakable waiver of the Union's statutory right to designate its own bargaining representatives.

The Union's statutory right to designate its own representatives in negotiations is well settled. Department of the Air Force, 915th Tactical Fighter Group, Homestead Air Force Base, 13 FLRA 135, 13 FLRA No. 33 (1983). However, here the parties have provided in their collective bargaining agreement for a formalized bargaining relationship. See, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and U.S. Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 4 FLRA No. 39 (1980). The parties take opposite positions as to the meaning to be attached to the contractual language, and the contract is not clear on its face in this regard. Thus, the appropriate avenue for resolution of the dispute is through the parties' mutually agreed upon contractual grievance and arbitration procedures rather than through the unfair labor practice procedures. Harry S. Truman Memorial Veterans Hospital, Columbia, Missouri, 11 FLRA No. 90, 11 FLRA 516 (1983) (citing numerous cases).

4. Paragraphs 11(d) and (e) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30348); Alleged Bypass

The record reflects that Allard met with a bargaining unit employee, Betty Heavey, and agreed at this meeting to further changes in its proposed Title XVI reorganization. While Allard could not avoid Heavey's coming to him with a suggestion for change, Allard's agreement with Heavey affected the general conditions of employment of other unit employees and constituted negotiations by management directly with a unit employee in derogation of the Union's status as the collective bargaining representative. This conduct of negotiating or otherwise dealing directly with a unit employee over conditions of employment inherently undermines the status of the Union and constitutes an unlawful bypass under the Statute. See, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 4 FLRA 488, 4 FLRA No. 68 (1980); 915th Tactical Fighter Group, supra.

It is undisputed that after hearing Heavey's suggestions regarding the Title XVI reorganization, Respondent immediately amended its first memorandum to employees regarding the change by issuing a second memorandum incorporating Heavey's suggestions. The credible evidence establishes the Union was given no prior notice of either Allard's meeting with Heavey at which agreement was reached concerning her proposal or Respondent's subsequent implementation of Heavey's suggestions.

Respondent's bypass of the Union and unilaterally implementation of further changes in working conditions as a direct result of such bypass violates Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

C. Alleged Refusal to Bargain in Good Faith Regarding the Title XVI Reorganization in Violation of Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5)

1. Paragraphs 11(a) and (c) of the July 29 Complaint (Case No. 9-CA-30348)

Immediately upon receiving notice of Respondent's proposed staffing changes in the Title XVI Initial Claims Unit, the Union requested bargaining and submitted proposals thereon. The changes involved a reallocation of aged and disability workloads within the unit as well as the transfer of one experienced claims representative out of the unit and a new claims representative trainee into the unit. The proposal raised several impact/implementation issues. The Union's concerns about the effect of the reorganization on prior agreements to rotate the aged claims workload, the equity of the distribution of the workload, and the opportunity for employee input concerning the changes were all embodied in its revised bargaining proposals submitted on April 7. It is undisputed that Respondent refused to bargain on all of the Union's proposals.

It is well established that an activity's failure to bargain on the impact and implementation of work assignments and staffing changes is an unfair labor practice in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5). Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604, 8 FLRA No. 111 (1982); Bureau of Governmental Financial Operations Headquarters, 11 FLRA 334, 11 FLRA No. 68 (1983). Respondent asserts in defense of its refusal to bargain that the changes had insubstantial impact and/or the Union's proposals were non-negotiable. The reassignment clearly had adverse impact on bargaining unit employees. Specifically, Heavey was reassigned to aged claims, a workload undisputedly more difficult than disability claims due to restrictive time limits, increased reviewability, and complex eligibility issues. O'Malley's reassignment to post entitlement work took her out of payment authorization, a grade determining factor for claims representatives. Furugori was being denied the opportunity to learn the more complex aged workload which had potential impact on her promotion opportunities with the agency. The Union's proposal requiring employee input prior to final assignment decisions being made was negotiable inasmuch as the proposal merely required management to give consideration to the stated preferences of the employees regarding the assignments but reserved for management the right to assign work or to select any particular employee. Social Security Administration, 11 FLRA 608, 11 FLRA No. 103 (1983). Respondent refused to view the proposed employee assignments as an expression of employee preferences for its consideration only. Similarly, the Union's proposal that the assignments be fair and equitable established a general, non-quantitative requirement by which management's assignment of work could be evaluated. It did not interfere with management's right to make assignments based on personnel requirements and was therefore within the duty to bargain. U.S. Marshals Service, 8 FLRA 268, 8 FLRA No. 62 (1982). The Union was clearly entitled to obtain management's position regarding the effect of the changes on prior rotation agreements before Respondent's unilateral implementation of what appeared to be a breach of such agreements.

Finally, there is no evidence of any overriding exigency which required the proposed changes to be implemented only two workdays after the Union's submission of its revised proposals on April 7. Absent such exigency, the duty to bargain in good faith required Respondent to bargain with the Union to agreement or impasse on its negotiable proposals. See, Bureau of Government Financial Operations, supra; Bureau of Prisons, Lewisburg Penitentiary, 11 FLRA 639, 11 FLRA No. 111 (1983).

In summary, Respondent was obligated to bargain in good faith with the Union regarding the impact and implementation of the proposed Title XVI reorganization. Its refusal to do so was violative of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

E. Alleged Refusal to Bargain in Good Faith Regarding the Title II Reorganization in Violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) (Case No. 9-CA-30395).

1. Paragraph 8(d) of the September 20 Complaint

Commencing on April 27 and continuing through April 29, Respondent implemented a major reorganization of the Title II work units in the Office. The reorganization resulted in the merger of three separate Title II work units and transformed Title II claims representatives from specialists handling only one type of Title II case to generalists responsible for all three types of Title II cases. Respondent does not dispute that the reorganization had a substantial impact on existing working conditions, but rather claims it reached agreement on the changes prior to implementation. The credible evidence establishes that no agreement had been reached and the Union was awaiting management's final proposals at the time the reorganization was unilaterally implemented.

The changes were substantial in nature and clearly required the activity to bargain upon the Union's request. The Union repeatedly requested bargaining on these changes and at no time reached any agreement with management thereon or acquiesced in any of management's proposals. The Union reminded Respondent of its desire to bargain on the changes as late as the same day of implementation and was given every reason to believe management intended to submit a final set of proposals and bargain prior to implementation. Management's failure to do so absent any evidence of overriding exigency constitutes bad faith bargaining in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5). Department of Defense, Naval Ordnance Station, 4 FLRA No. 100 (1980); Department of the Air Force, Scott Air Force Base, 5 FLRA No. 2 (1981).

2. Paragraphs 8(b) and (c) of the September 20 Complaint; Alleged Formal Discussions Without Prior Notice to the Unions.

The April 20 and 21 meetings held by management with unit employees were formal meetings within the meaning of Section 7114(a)(2)(A). However, the credible evidence establishes that the Union was provided prior notice and the opportunity to select its own representative at these meetings as required by Section 7114(a)(2)(A). Accordingly, these meetings were not violative of Section 7116(a)(1)(5) and (8) of the Statute.

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

   (a) Making unilateral changes in general conditions of employment for employees exclusively represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE), such as the reorganization of the Title II and Title XVI initial claims units in its South Seattle Branch Office, without notifying AFGE of the proposed change and, upon request, negotiating with AFGE to the extent required by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

(b) Bypassing the AFGE and dealing directly with unit employees represented by the AFGE concerning conditions of employment.

(c) Telling an AFGE representative that the Branch Manager wants his next Documented Progress Review (DPR) to reflect Union activity in a negative way; threatening a Performance Improvement Plan (PIP) and stating that the Branch Manager is timing the AFGE representative's interviews with the public in order to interfere with or discourage AFGE representatives in the exercise of rights accorded by the Statute.

(d) Discriminating against employees because of their union activities by evaluating said employees in a Documented Progress Review or other work review in an adverse manner for lower work production resulting from official time spent on union activities.

(e) In any like or related manner, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute.

(a) Upon request, bargain with the AFGE concerning the impact and implementation of changes implemented in Title II on or about May 2, 1983, stemming from the reassignment of a Title II employee to Title XVI, and in Title XVI on or about April 11, 1983, stemming from the reassignment of an Initial Claims Unit employee to the Post Entitlement Unit.

(b) Rescind the Documented Progress Review issued to John Mack in March 1983 and re-evaluate Mack, taking into consideration Mack's time spent on approved official time for labor-management relations, when assessing his level of production for purposes of that Documented Progess Review.

(c) Post at its facilities at the South Seattle Branch Office copies of the attached Notice marked "Appendix" on forms to be furnished by the Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the District Manager and shall be posted and maintained by the District Manager for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. The District Manager shall take reasonable steps to insure that such notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to 5 C.F.R. section 2423.30 notify the Regional Director, Region IX, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 530 Bush Street, Room 542 San Francisco, California 94108, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

It is further ordered that the remaining allegations of the complaints as to which no violations have been found be, and they hereby are, DISMISSED.

FEDERAL SERVICE LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

WE HEREBY NOTIFY OUR EMPLOYEES THAT:

WE WILL NOT change conditions of employment for employees exclusively represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE) without notifying AFGE of our proposed change and, upon request, negotiating with AFGE to the extent required by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

WE WILL NOT bypass AFGE by dealing directly with employees represented by AFGE regarding proposed changes in conditions of employment.

WE WILL NOT tell an AFGE representative that the Branch Manager wants his next Documented Progress Review (DPR) to reflect Union activity in a negative way, threaten a Performance Improvement Plan (PIP) or state that the Branch Manager is timing the AFGE representative's interviews with the public in order to interfere with or discourage AFGE representatives in the exercise of rights accorded by the Statute.

WE WILL NOT discriminate against our employees because of their union activities by evaluating said employees in a Documented Progress Review or other work review in an adverse manner for lower work production resulting from official time spent on union activities.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain or coerce our employees in the exercise of rights assured them by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

WE WILL, upon request, bargain with the American Federation of Government Employees concerning the impact and implementation of the changes implemented in Title II on or about May 2, 1983, stemming from the reassignment of a Title II employee to Title XVI, and in Title XVI on or about April 11, 1983, stemming from the reassignment of an Initial Claims Union employee to the Post Entitlement Unit.

WE WILL rescind the Documented Progress Review issued to John Mack in March 1983, and re-evaluate Mack, taking into consideration Mack's time spent on approved official time for labor-management relations, when assessing his level of production for purposes of that Documented Progress Review.

DECISION AND ORDER
ON MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

I. Statement of the Case

This matter is before the Authority on a motion by the Charging Party/Petitioner for reconsideration of a portion of the Authority's decision in 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona, 18 FLRA No. 73 (1985).

II. The Authority's Decision

On June 21, 1985, the Authority issued its Decision and Order in the above-entitled consolidated proceeding. The Authority found that: (1) the objections to the election in Case No. 8-RO-30002 of the consolidated proceeding were all without merit; (2) certain comments made by the Respondent's Commanding Officer in Case No. 8-CA-30099 did not constitute a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute; and (3) certain remarks made by a management official of the Respondent in Case No. 8-CA-30098 were violative of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

In reaching its conclusion with respect to Case No. 8-CA-30099, the Authority found as follows:

> Noting our adoption of the Judge's finding (supra under Objection No. 6) that the Union waived its right to distribute literature during the campaign, and noting that the statements which the Judge finds were made by Union supporters to supervisor Carpenter denying the Union's role in the posting of that literature, the Authority finds that the Commanding Officer's comments with regard to the distribution of such literature served to "correct the record with respect to [a] false or misleading statement made by any person." Accordingly, since the Commanding Officer's comments were within the ambit of the above cited language of section 7116(e) of the Statute, the Authority agrees with the Judge's finding that the comments did not violate section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.[3]

III. The Motion for Reconsideration

By timely motion dated July 3, 1985, the Charging Party/Petitioner (the Union) seeks reconsideration of the Authority's decision as it pertains to Case No. 8-CA-30099 and to a portion of Case No. 8-RO-30002, contending that the Authority's decision in certain respects was based upon an error in its findings of fact.

The Union argues that the Commanding Officer's statement in Case No. 8-CA-30099 could not have been meant to "correct the record" within the meaning of section 7116(e) of the Statute[*] because the statements that the Authority found the Commanding Officer was correcting (as noted above) had not yet been made at the time he held the December 10 meeting with the employees. The Union further argues that the Authority should thus find a violation in Case No. 8-CA-30099, and should further sustain Objection No. 13 in Case No. 8-RO-30002, as the conduct in Case No. 8-CA-30099 is properly a part of this objection.

[*] Section 7116(e) provides:

(e) The expression of any personal view, argument, opinion or the making of any statement which--

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in part, that a "party . . . who can establish . . . extraordinary circumstances . . . may move for reconsideration" of an Authority decision. Upon review of the Union's motion, the Authority concludes that reconsideration of the decision as it pertains to Case No. 8-CA-30099 should be granted, as review of the record shows and we now find that in fact certain comments made by Union supporters to supervisor Carpenter, and relied upon by the Authority in reaching its original conclusion, were made subsequent to the Commanding Officer's December 10 meeting with the employees, thus calling into question the basis for the Authority's original conclusion.

> (1) publicizes the fact of a representational election and encourages employees to exercise their right to vote in such election,
> (2) corrects the record with respect to any false or misleading statement made by any person, or
> (3) informs employees of the Government's policy relating to labor-management relations and representation, > shall not, if the expression contains no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit or was not made under coercive conditions, (A) constitute an unfair labor practice under any provision of this chapter, or (B) constitute grounds for the setting aside of any election conducted under any provisions of this chapter.

IV. Analysis on Reconsideration

A. Case No. 8-CA-30099

The complaint in Case No. 8-CA-30099 alleged that the Respondent's Commanding Officer made certain statements at a meeting of its employees five days before an election which violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The Judge found that the Commanding Officer did not make two of the statements attributed to him, i.e., (1) that the employees did not need outside influences because the Guard was one big happy family, and (2) that the Union officials acted in poor taste or in an underhanded manner in distributing union election material, and the Authority reaffirms its adoption of the Judge's finding in this regard.

The Judge additionally found that the Commanding Officer did state that he was disappointed about the distribution of literature by the Union in that it demonstrated a lack of good faith, since an agreement had been made between the parties not to campaign on the premises. The Judge concluded, however, that the statement did not violate section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

In its decision, the Authority, noting certain statements made to one of management's supervisors, found that the Commanding Officer's comments at the December 10 meeting with regard to the distribution of union literature were permissible under section 7116(e) of the Statute, because such comments served to "correct the record," and therefore did not violate the Statute.

A review of the record shows that the statements the Authority noted in reaching its conclusion were in fact made after the Commanding Officer's December 10 meeting and therefore could not serve as the justification for the Commanding Officer's statements. However, upon review of all the facts in this case, we again conclude that the Commanding Officer's comments did serve to "correct the record."

The Authority notes, as found by the Judge, that: (1) the Union, by a pre-election agreement, waived its right to distribute campaign literature on the base during the election campaign; (2) after the parties reached that agreement Major Kyzer, a representative of management, advised the Commanding Officer of the Union's agreement;

(3) despite the agreement, management discovered that campaign literature, on behalf of the Union, had been posted on bulletin boards and walls throughout the base prior to the election; (4) Major Kyzer notified Union President Michael Coiro that campaign literature had been so posted; (5) Coiro advised Kyzer that the literature would be removed, and it was removed by Union and management representatives; (6) Coiro disclaimed Union authorization of or responsibility for the posting.

Beyond the Judge's findings, the undisputed record evidence also reveals that: (1) Kyzer, following his conversation with Coiro, advised the Commanding Officer of the results of this conversation, including Coiro's disclaimer; (2) the literature (examples of which are in evidence) was clearly "official" AFGE literature, containing the official AFGE logo and other Union identifiers; (3) employee Jon Webb, who was very active in supporting the Union's campaign, posted the AFGE literature referred to above, along with other employees; and (4) Webb had been given that literature by Union President Coiro for the purpose of distribution and/or posting at various break room locations on the base.

The Commanding Officer, in response to a question at the hearing concerning why he had mentioned anything to employees at the December 10 meeting regarding the campaign agreement, stated in part:

> There were voluntary statements made by . . . people representing the Union side that there would not be campaigning on the base. [Given such] [w]e had not expected that there would be campaigning on the base.
> And then, just short of that Friday, the 10th of December, I saw a great escalation of Union literature appearing about the base. I was concerned about it, given the fact that there had been a statement there would not be campaigning on the base. . . . I mentioned that I was disappointed . . . that the agreement essentially was that there would not be, and . . . there was, and I thought that demonstrated a lack of good faith on the Union's part.

when shown the examples of the AFGE literature in evidence, the Commanding Officer testified that that was the type of literature he had seen appearing with increasing frequency about the base. Additionally, the Commanding Officer stated, in response to a question, that he did not indicate at the December 10 meeting that the Union may have had a different understanding of the agreement because he believed that the Union had the same understanding of the agreement as he did; that he based this position on his discussions with Kyzer, who had been directed by the Commanding Officer to contact the Union and who, after doing so, informed the Commanding Officer that the Union "said that they were wrong" and the literature "would come down."

It is clear, then, that the Commanding Officer knew of the Union's agreement not to campaign, knew and observed that seemingly official Union literature had been posted around the base, and knew of the Union's disclaimer of responsibility. In these circumstances, the Authority finds that the Commanding Officer had a basis for making the comments with regard to the distribution of literature. The Authority concludes that the Commanding Officer's comments served to "correct the record with respect to [a] false or misleading statement made by any person" specifically with respect to the Union's disclaimer of responsibility for the distribution of campaign literature in the face of its agreement not to do so. In view of the additional record facts set forth above, it is apparent that had Coiro not supplied Webb with the Union literature, albeit for limited distribution, it would not have been posted throughout the base. Under these circumstances, Coiro's disclaimer of the Union's responsibility for or authorization of the literature in question was at best misleading.

B. Case No. 8-RO-30002 (Objection No. 13)

We originally found that the comments that are the subject of Case No. 8-CA-30099 were not the subject of any of the objections to the election, and we are not presented with anything by this motion for reconsideration that would warrant reconsideration of that original decision.

V. Conclusions

A. Case No. 8-CA-30099

Accordingly, as the Commanding Officer's comments were permissible under section 7116(e) of the Statute, the Authority reaffirms its conclusion that the comments did not violate section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

B. Case No. 8-RO-30002 (Objection No. 13)

Accordingly, the instant motion for reconsideration as it pertains to Case No. 8-RO-30002 (Objection No. 13) is denied, and the Regional Director is again directed to take further appropriate action consistent with this decision.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees by impliedly threatening them with reprisal because of their activities on behalf of the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2924, AFL-CIO, or any other labor organization.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Post at its facilities at the 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(b) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegations of the complaint in Case No. 8-CA-30098, to the extent that they have been found not violative of the Statute, be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegations of the complaint in Case No. 8-CA-30099 be, and they hereby are, dismissed in their entirety.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the objections to the election in Case No. 8-RO-30002 be, and they hereby are, dismissed in their entirety.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 10, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of the following underlined portion of the Union proposal:1/

Article 22, Reduction in Force, Part III(e)

The employer will prepare a report on each RIF, as soon as practicable, with the following information:

(a) numbers and series of employees reassigned

(b) numbers and series of employees downgraded

1/ The Union has withdrawn from this appeal two proposals concerning performance appraisal and one proposal concerning reduction-in-force. Union Statement of Position at 1. These proposals will not be considered further in this case.

(c) numbers and series of employees separated

(d) six months after a RIF, the numbers and series of employees rehired by the Employer

(e) cost of the RIF, such as administrative costs, severance pay, and pay retention.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal is nonnegotiable because information as to the administrative costs of a reduction-in-force (RIF) does not concern the conditions of employment of unit employees. The Union argues that such information is necessary to the performance of its representational responsibilities and, thus, is directly related to matters affecting unit employees' conditions of employment.

III. Analysis and Conclusion

The disputed portion of the proposal, as interpreted by the Union, would require the Agency to provide the Union with information regarding the costs of each reduction-in-force affecting unit employees, particularly administrative costs such as severance pay. The Agency contends that information on the costs of a RIF does not concern the conditions of employment of unit employees and that the relationship of such costs to conditions of employment is wholly "speculative." The Union argues that such information is necessary to its representation of employees who are challenging RIF actions through statutory appeals procedures or through the negotiated grievance procedure. The Union also claims that the information is necessary to future negotiation of contract provisions relating to reduction-in-force and, thus, directly relates to the conditions of employment of unit employees.

The basic scope of the duty to bargain under the Statute extends to matters affecting the working conditions of employees in a unit of exclusive recognition. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 771 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v.

Federal Labor Relations Authority, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). The Authority has consistently held that matters pertaining to a RIF concern the conditions of employment of affected employees. See, for example, Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service and National Treasury Employees Union and All NTEU Customs Chapters, 19 FLRA No. 128 (1985); Federal Trade Commission and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2211, AFL-CIO, 15 FLRA 994 (1984); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of EEOC Locals and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, 10 FLRA 3, 5-6 (1982) (Union Proposal 2), aff'd as to other matters sub nom. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 744 F.2d 842 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. dismissed, 54 U.S. Law Week 4408 (April 29, 1986). Thus, information concerning the costs of a RIF constitutes a matter affecting the conditions of employment of unit employees. The question of whether information as to the costs of a RIF concerns conditions of employment, however, is not dispositive of the relevance of that information but, rather, addresses only the nature of the subject matter involved. As a matter pertaining to the conditions of employment of unit employees, the Union's proposal is within the duty to bargain under the Statute notwithstanding the fact that the information provided for in the proposal might in part pertain to nonunit employees. See Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38, 39 (1984); National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 275, 284 (1981).

An agency is required under section 7114(b)(4) of the Statute to provide a union with information which is relevant and necessary to the performance of its representational activities. United States Environmental Protection Agency, Health Effects Research Laboratory, Cincinnati, Ohio and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 801, 16 FLRA 52, 54 (1984). A determination as to whether the information sought is relevant and necessary is made on a case-by-case basis. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 91 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Southwest Region, 17 FLRA 534, 536 (1985). The Union's proposal certainly includes a requirement that the Agency provide it with relevant and necessary information concerning the administrative costs of a reduction-in-force. The Union demonstrates on the record how such information would relate to the processing of employee grievances and the negotiation in the future of contract provisions concerning reduction-in-force.[2] But the proposal is more broadly worded than that. It would also require the Agency to disclose information regardless of whether a case-by-case analysis would show that it is relevant and necessary to the Union's performance of its representational function. That fact does not render the proposal nonnegotiable.

Section 7114(b)(4) is a statutory "floor" and not a "ceiling." The language and the legislative history of that provision do not indicate that Congress intended to prohibit an agency from providing a union with information other than that which is relevant and necessary. Rather, Congress meant that provision to establish the minimum information which must be disclosed to a union.[3] Thus, nothing in section 7114(b)(4) prevents a union from negotiating with an agency for the disclosure of information concerning the conditions of employment of unit employees beyond what it is entitled to under the Statute. Of course, the disclosure of such information must otherwise be consistent with law. See Army and Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES), Fort Carson, Colorado and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1345, 17 FLRA 624, 627 (1985).

For the foregoing reasons, the Union's proposal is consistent with law and within the Agency's duty to bargain. It is distinguishable from National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 91, cited above, because the proposal in that case concerned information which did not relate to the conditions of employment of unit employees.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the contract provisions concerning reduction-in-force.[2] But the proposal is more broadly worded than that. It would also require the Agency to disclose information regardless of whether a case-by-case analysis would show that it is relevant and necessary to the Union's performance of its representational function. That fact does not render the proposal nonnegotiable.

Section 7114(b)(4) is a statutory "floor" and not a "ceiling." The language and the legislative history of that provision do not indicate that Congress intended to prohibit an agency from providing a union with information other than that which is relevant and necessary. Rather, Congress meant that provision to establish the minimum information which must be disclosed to a union.[3] Thus, nothing in section 7114(b)(4) prevents a union from negotiating with an agency for the disclosure of information concerning the conditions of employment of unit employees beyond what it is entitled to under the Statute. 7106(a)(2)(A), (B) and (D)

__DIGEST NOTES__

A provision is negotiable which provides that both the agency and the union shall appoint two members to a safety and health committee and that one of the functions of the committee shall be to investigate unsafe working conditions. The committee is not intended to be certified by the Secretary of Labor under E.O. 12196, thereby enabling the agency among other things to avoid unannounced inspections by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration. As an uncertified committee, it is intended to be a constructive forum to address health and safety issues. The committee's functions do not replace or conflict with the agency's responsibilities, and the committee is not intended to bypass management in the health and safety area. Contrary to the agency's assertion, the provision does not interfere with management's right to assign employees or assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) nor determine its internal security practices under § 7106(a)(1). The designation of an employee to serve on the health and safety committee does not constitute an assignment to a position and is not, therefore, inconsistent with the agency's right to assign employees. Since the participation of union representatives on the committee does not concern official, prescribed duties, the provision does not involve the assignment of "work". Finally, nothing in the provision would prevent the agency from determining that an unsafe working condition or accident scene should be examined by personnel of its choice, including officials from outside the agency, prior to an investigation by the committee. Since, therefore, the provision does not interfere with the agency's discretion and judgement concerning its investigatory responsibilities, the provision does not interfere with the agency's right to determine its internal security practices. (provision 1)

A provision is outside the duty to bargain that by defining the term "emergency", limits the exercise of management's § 7106(a)(2)(D) right to those situations falling within the definition. By precluding the agency from independently assessing whether an emergency exists, the provision limits management's right to act in emergencies. (provision 2)

DIGEST NOTES

The grievance in this case concerns the administratively determined indebtedness of the grievant, a school counselor, in the amount of $7,574 for allegedly misrepresenting that he supported a student. As a result of the misrepresentation, the student received two years of tuition-free education at the Bitburg American High School. Subsequent to disciplining the grievant for making false statements, the activity sought the repayment and the grievant filed the grievance contesting the claim of indebtedness. As his award, the arbitrator sustained the grievance, finding that the grievant was not indebted for the student's tuition costs, and ordered management to cancel the demand for payment.

In its exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to law and regulation pertaining to the recovery through salary offset of certain debts owed the United States by Federal Employees. The agency argued that administratively determined indebtedness is not subject to resolution under a grievance procedure negotiated in accordance with the Statute and must be determined pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5514. The agency also argued that to permit the grievance and arbitration over such matters is contrary to 5 C.F.R. part 550, subpart K.

The Authority found that the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5514 does not preclude an arbitrator from ruling on and overturning an assessment of administratively determined indebtedness against an employee. Collective bargaining agreements negotiated under § 7121 must contain a grievance procedure and that procedure, except as provided in § 7121(d) and (e), is the exclusive procedure for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage. Thus, the negotiated grievance procedure may be invoked to settle disputes within its coverage despite the existence of internal agency appeal procedures or statutory appeal procedures which also cover the matter at issue.

Both the courts and the Authority have determined that Federal law outside the Statute can limit the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure. In cases where the courts and the Authority have found that outside law limits the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure, there have been clear specific indications that the statutory procedures were intended to be exclusive. But the agency in its exception cited no such provisions in § 5 U.S.C. § 5514.

The Authority also found that the agency's arguments provided no basis for finding the award contrary to 5 C.F.R. part 550, subpart K. The agency argued that because the negotiated grievance procedure is available only to bargaining-unit employees, use of the negotiated grievance procedure necessarily precludes uniformity and consistency of application of agency regulations governing the collection of debts, in violation of 5 C.F.R. § 550.1104. However, the means of dispute resolution that may be available to individual employees has not been shown to preclude the uniform and consistent application to all employees of the substantive terms of agency regulations governing the collection of debts.

DIGEST NOTES

The parties submitted to arbitration the issues of whether a statutory employment discrimination complaint under 29 C.F.R. part 1613 is a grievance as defined by the parties' collective bargaining agreement and whether their agreement required the activity to pay travel and per diem expenses of a union official representing an employee in a statutory employment discrimination complaint. The arbitrator ruled that a statutory employment discrimination complaint was not a grievance as defined by the parties' agreement. Based on his interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement, the arbitrator ruled that travel and per diem expenses of a union official were not payable for representation of an employee in a statutory employment discrimination complaint.

In its exception, the union contended that the award was deficient because the arbitrator mistakenly interpreted § 7103(a)(9) which defines for purposes of the Statute the term "grievance". The Authority concluded that the union's exception fails to establish that the award was deficient. The arbitrator in no manner misinterpreted § 7103(a)(9) since neither the award nor his discussion even cites that section much less misinterprets it. Rather, the union's exception primarily constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation and application of the parties' agreement which does not provide a basis for finding the award deficient. In addition, to the extent the union argued that the award was deficient because of the arbitrator's case citations, this constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions which does not provide a basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

The parties submitted to the arbitrator a dispute concerning official time for representational activities in the agency's field offices. A two-phase arbitration process was established to resolve the basic dispute and the resulting numerous individual grievances. The first phase of the process involved the interpretation of the official time provisions of the Statute and the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In the second phase, the arbitrator held hearings to resolve, by bench decisions when practicable, specific grievances pending in the various agency regions. In those decisions, the arbitrator generally ruled that by denying official time and related travel and per diem expenses for union officials for the representational purposes involved, the agency violate the parties' agreement.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. Accordingly, the arbitrator awarded reimbursement for wrongfully denied official time at appropriate straight-time rates and travel and per diem expenses.

The agency first excepted to the award of travel and per diem expenses to union representatives for preparation prior to the future arbitration hearings to be held in the agency's various regions. The Authority held that the arbitrator effectively determined that the agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to the labor-management relations activities covered by the official time provision of the parties' agreement. Thus the agency's arguments constituted nothing more than disagreement with the arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement which does not provide a basis for finding the award deficient. However, the Authority modified the award to provide for agency determination of the propriety of particular travel and per diem expenses consistent with the requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations

In its second exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to law. The Authority held that the agency failed to establish that awards was contrary to law. The arbitrator with respect to each bench decision essentially found that the denial of official time was in violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. Thus the arbitrator effectively found that all the conditions of § 7131(d) had beem met. Moreover, in his award the arbitrator was merely requiring the agency "to the maximum extent practicable" to schedule the union representative's future travel during normal working hours consistent with 5 U.S.C. § 6101(b)(2). Finally while two grievants were not union representatives engaged in union representational activities, § 7131(d)(2) expressly provides for official time for bargaining unit employees "in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter." The arbitrator by his award effectively found the dispute was a "grievance" covered by the Statute and that under the parties' agreement one grievant was entitled to official time and another grievant was entitled to restoration of annual leave and that therefore the conditions of § 7131(d) had been met.

In numerous other exceptions, the agency essentially contended that: (1) the bench awards were a capricious departure from the earlier final award of the arbitrator; (2) the arbitrator exceeded his authority by ruling on claims that were not part of the grievance before him; (3) the arbitrator extended his remedy to nongrievants; and, (4) the arbitrator conducted himself and the hearing in an arbitrary and capricious manner. The Authority found that the agency failed to establish that the arbitrator's award was in any way deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity did not change its past practice of charging employees with AWOL who arrived late to work although their tardiness may have been based on confusion caused by frequent changes in work schedules. The activity's shift schedules covered two week periods and were posted one week prior to their effective dates. Employees were allowed to make shift changes, in most cases without restriction. The activity had for several years a written policy which required employees be charged with AWOL whenever their absence from duty was not authorized or approved. If later the employee submitted acceptable evidence, the AWOL could be retroactively changed to annual leave or sick leave. Although the General Counsel cited approximately five instances during a three year period where employees confused their respective shifts and were allowed to take annual leave or readjust their shifts rather than being charged AWOL, the Judge found that this evidence was insufficient to support by a preponderance of evidence that the activity changed the past practice. Accordingly, the Judge found, in a decision adopted by the Authority, that the activity did not change the past practice and did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it charged an employee with AWOL for being two hours late in circumstances where he claimed to have been confused about his schedule.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The filing of a grievance concerning the merits of charging an employee with AWOL for arriving at work late did not bar a complaint concerning an alleged change in past practice regarding AWOL. The Judge found that since the issues were different, § 7116(d) did not serve as a bar to processing the complaint.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5), the Authority found, in agreement with the Judge, because the parties engaged in good faith bargaining concerning the change in the activity's seat belt policy. The activity provided both exclusive representatives with five days advance notice that it would change its seat belt policy to a policy that provided for 30-day suspensions of employees for failure to use seat belts on its air base. Although bargaining did not take place until after the announced implementation date of the new policy, the new policy was not put into effect for bargaining unit employees until after the completion of negotiations. Negotiations proceeded for about three months with help from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The parties agreed on a number of matters, but some issues remained unresolved. Thereafter, the activity notified both unions that it would implement its last best offer concerning the seat belt policy in six days. Yet the unions did not request the assistance of FSIP until after the activity implemented its last best offer. The Authority found that several proposals over which the activity refused to bargain were nonnegotiable. Thus the Authority found that the activity negotiated in good faith on all proposals submitted by the unions which were within its duty to bargain.

The unions did not waive its right to negotiate over a change in the activity's seat belt policy prior to implementation of the change, the Authority held, contrary to the Judge. A request to bargain as soon as possible and a request to exclude bargaining unit employees from the change until the parties reached agreement did not constitute a waiver of the unions' right to bargain prior to implementation. The activity notified both unions on a Friday that a new seat belt policy would be implemented the following Wednesday. The unions' response was timely and, given the circumstances, contained no language which would serve as a clear and unequivocal waiver of their right to bargain prior to implementation of the change.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the 10 day suspension of the grievant was not for just cause and directed that the suspension be rescinded and the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the suspension.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the award was contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 7503(a). Specifically, the agency argued that the award was deficient because the arbitrator failed to make the finding, alleged by the agency to be required by § 7503, that the violation of the agreement constituted "harmful error" and because the arbitrator applied a standard of "just cause" rather than the statutory standard in § 7503(a) of "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service." DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of two provisions of a negotiated agreement disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.

II. Provisions

The dispute concerns the underlined portion of provision 1 and all of provision 2:

Provision 1
(Article XXX, Section 2)

Health and Safety Committee: The Employer and the Union shall each designate a minimum of two (2) members to serve on the Safety and Health Committee. The Safety and Health Committee shall perform the following functions:

a. Investigate, report and recommend corrective action for unsafe working conditions referred to the committee.

b. Meet quarterly.

Provision 2
(Article III, Section 13)

> Emergency: A situation which imposes sudden, immediate requirements for the Employer as a result of natural phenomena or other circumstances beyond the Employer's reasonable control or ability to anticipate.

A. Positions of the Parties

1. Health and Safety Committee

The Agency argues that by requiring it to (1) appoint two members to the Committee, and (2) assign the investigation of unsafe working conditions to the Committee, the provision is inconsistent with its reserved management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to assign employees and assign work. The Agency also contends that the Committee could hamper investigations by others, including outside experts, so as to interfere with its section 7106(a)(1) right to determine its internal security practices.

The Union asserts that the provision neither requires the appointment of particular management employees to the Committee nor precludes the Agency from assigning investigatory responsibilities to persons who are not on the Committee. Thus, the Union maintains that the provision is not inconsistent with the Agency's rights to assign employees and work. The Union did not file a reply brief in this case. Accordingly, the Union did not address the Agency's argument, which was not contained in its written assertion of nonnegotiability, concerning internal security practices.

2. Definition of Emergency

The Agency contends that by defining "emergency," the provision limits and is, therefore, inconsistent with its reserved right under section 7106(a)(2)(D) of the Statute to take "whatever actions may be necessary to carry out the agency mission during emergencies." Since the term "emergency" is not defined in the Statute and has not been defined by the FLRA through case decisions, the Agency maintains that it is free to act in what it perceives to be emergencies, subject to FLRA review through the unfair labor practice procedures.

The Union's position is that the parties may agree to a definition of a word or phrase as long as the word or phrase is not explicitly defined in the Statute or case law. It asserts that the provision both permits the Agency to exercise its rights during an emergency and prevents the Agency from "abusing the concept of an 'emergency'" in order to circumvent collective bargaining obligations. Union Petition for Review at 2.

B. Analysis

1. Health and Safety Committee

Provision 1 provides that the Committee, to which the Agency and the Union each appoint two members, shall have as one of its functions the investigation of unsafe working conditions. The Agency argues that the provision is inconsistent with its rights to assign employees, assign work, and determine its internal security practices.

The Authority has consistently held that the right to assign employees means the right to assign them to positions in the agency. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5 FLRA 83 (1981). The designation of an employee to serve on the Health and Safety Committee does not constitute an assignment to a position and is not, therefore, inconsistent with the Agency's right to assign employees. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 and U.S. Department of the Army, U.S. Army Adjutant General Publication Center, St. Louis, Missouri, 14 FLRA 438 (1984).

As for the Agency's right to assign work, the participation of Union representatives on the Committee does not concern official, prescribed duties. Accordingly, it does not involve the assignment of "work" within the meaning of section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 541 and Veterans Administration Hospital, Long Beach, California, 12 FLRA 270 (1983). Further, the provision neither requires the Agency to appoint particular individuals to the Committee nor prevents it from changing its designations. The Agency's contentions concerning its right to select the individuals to represent its interests, therefore, lack merit, and its citation of the Authority's decision in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 78 and Veterans Administration Regional Office, Indianapolis, Indiana, 9 FLRA 819 (1982), as support for its argument is inapposite. In the latter case, the proposal in question prescribed specific duties to particular employees. Such is not the case here.

Finally, as for the Agency's contention that the provision interferes with its right to determine its internal security practices, nothing in the provision would prevent the Agency from determining that an unsafe working condition or accident scene should be examined by personnel of its choice prior to an investigation by the Committee. In fact, the Union concedes that nothing in the provision grants the Committee "sole province" over the investigation of unsafe working conditions. Union Petition for Review at 2. The Agency has not established how the provision would interfere with its discretion and judgment concerning its investigatory responsibilities. Compare National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 61 and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Albany District, New York, 7 FLRA 304 (1981), in which the Authority determined that a proposal to delay investigative searches was not inconsistent with management's right to determine its internal security practices.

The Authority has issued decisions concerning the negotiability of proposals for both "certified" and "uncertified" health and safety committees. The Agency does not argue and it does not appear from the record that the Committee is intended to be "certified" by the Secretary of Labor under E.O. 12196, thereby enabling the Agency among other things to avoid unannounced inspections by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, as was the safety and health committee the establishment of which was found to be nonnegotiable in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Government Financial Operations, 21 FLRA No. 83 (May 8, 1986). Thus, the law and regulations applicable to the discussion of "certified" committees in that case are not pertinent here.

As for "uncertified" committees, the Union makes clear that the Committee's investigative function is not intended to preclude the Agency from assigning investigative work to others, including officials from outside the Agency. Union Petition for Review at 2. The Union states that the Committee is intended to provide a "constructive forum" in which to address health and safety issues. Union Petition for Review at 1. Accordingly, the Committee's functions do not replace or conflict with the Agency's responsibilities, and the Committee is not intended to bypass management in the health and safety area. As such, the provision differs from the proposal for an "uncertified" committee found to be nonnegotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2786 and Defense Mapping Agency, 20 FLRA No. 26 (September 20, 1985)(Provision 3). Since the provision concerns a Committee which constitutes a forum for the expression of concerns over health and safety matters and the development of recommendations concerning them rather than a forum enabling the Union to interject itself into the decisionmaking process through which the Agency exercises its reserved rights under the Statute, it is consistent with the proposal for an "uncertified" committee found to be negotiable in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council of Prison Locals and Department of Justice, Bureau of Prisons, 11 FLRA 286 (1983)(Provision 2). Further, unlike the proposal in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 644 and U.S. Department of Labor, Mine Safety and Health Administration, 21 FLRA No. 122 (May 29, 1986) (Proposal 3), the wording of Provision 1 and the parties' statements clearly set forth the nature and functions of the Committee. In Mine Safety and Health Administration, the proposal providing union participation on a safety and health inspection team and the parties' statements were not sufficiently specific as to the functions of the team or the nature of the union's participation to enable the Authority to decide whether the proposal was negotiable.

Moreover, the provision is also consistent with Authority decisions that proposals for joint labor-management committees concerned with other matters are negotiable. See, for example, U.S. Army Adjutant General Publication Center, where the Authority found negotiable a proposal for a joint labor-management committee to develop the agency's training program, and noted that the committee would only provide the union with an opportunity to express its views rather than mandating joint determination of the substantive aspects of the program; and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981)(Proposal 6), where the Authority found negotiable a proposal to create a joint labor-management committee with the limited power to recommend changes in the performance appraisal system, and determined that the agency retained its discretion to accept or reject any of the committee's recommendations.

2. Definition of Emergency

Provision 2 provides a definition for the term "emergency," a term which is used in three portions of the parties' collective bargaining agreement: (1) Article IV, Section 1 b. 4, concerning management's rights; (2) Article XXV, Section 2, concerning notice periods prior to changes in tours of duty; and (3) Article XXVI, Section 1 f, concerning postings of overtime schedules. The Agency argues that the provision limits its right under section 7106(a)(2)(D) of the Statute to "take whatever actions may be necessary to carry out the agency mission during emergencies." The Union disagrees, stating that the provision would "in no way limit management's freedom of action in the event of an emergency." Union Petition for Review at 3.

The Authority agrees with the Agency. Provision 2 would limit the exercise of management's section 7106(A)(2)(D) right to those situations falling within the definition of "emergency." As such, the provision is similar to Provision 1 in Association of Civilian Technicians, Inc., Pennsylvania State Council and the Adjutant General, Department of Military Affairs, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 7 FLRA 346 (1981), reversed as to other matters sub nom. Adjutant General, Department of Military Affairs, Pennsylvania v. FLRA, 685 F.2d 93 (1982), which the Authority found nonnegotiable because it would have limited management's right to act during emergencies to situations where the emergency was verified and declared by the activity supervisor. By precluding the Agency from independently assessing whether an emergency exists, Provision 2 in this case also limits management's right to act in emergencies and, as a result, is nonnegotiable.

C. Conclusions

For the reasons stated above, Union Provision 1 is not inconsistent with management's rights under section 7106 of the Statute to assign employees, assign work, and determine its internal security practices, as alleged by the Agency. Provision 1, therefore, is within the duty to bargain.*/ Union Provision 2 is inconsistent with management's right to take actions which may be necessary to carry out the Agency's mission during emergencies. Accordingly, Union Provision 2 is outside the duty to bargain.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Union Provision 1 which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level; IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the petition for review as to Union Provision 2 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Case No. 0-AR-1024

OVERSEAS EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

Union

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Roger Kaplan filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerns the administratively determined indebtedness of the grievant, a school counselor, in the amount of $7,574. The amount represents two years of tuition-free education the Activity claimed was provided a student as the result of misrepresentations by the grievant. According to the Arbitrator, the grievant and the student's mother had entered into an agreement transferring guardianship of the student from the mother to the grievant in order for the student to be eligible for tuition-free education at Bitburg American High School. When the grievant failed to submit a court decree approving the guardianship agreement, the grievant was required to submit a sworn statement that he had assumed "in loco parentis" status and was supporting the student. On the basis of the grievant's statements, the student was provided the two years of tuition-free education. Subsequently, after an investigation, the Activity proposed to remove the grievant based upon charges that his statements regarding his support of the student had been false. The charges against the grievant were sustained and he was ultimately suspended for 14 days and reassigned. It was on the basis of these sustained charges that the indebtedness of the grievant was determined. The grievant thereafter filed the grievance contesting the claim of indebtedness and the grievance was submitted to arbitration. As his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance, finding that the grievant was not indebted for the student's tuition costs, and ordered management to cancel the demand for payment.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions of the Agency

In its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to law and regulation pertaining to the recovery through salary offset of certain debts owed the United States by Federal employees. The Agency argues that administratively determined indebtedness is not subject to resolution under a grievance procedure negotiated in accordance with the Statute and must be determined pursuant to 5 U.S.C. § 5514.[1] In particular, the Agency argues that to permit the grievance and arbitration over such indebtedness is contrary to section 5514. The Agency also argues that to permit the grievance and arbitration of such matters is contrary to 5 CFR part 550, subpart K, providing for collection by salary offset from indebted employees. Specifically, the Agency maintains that the use of the negotiated grievance procedure is contrary to 5 CFR § 550.1104 which requires each agency to assure that its regulations governing the collection of debts are uniformly and consistently applied to all employees. The Agency asserts that because the negotiated grievance procedure is available only to bargaining-unit employees, use of the negotiated grievance procedure necessarily precludes uniformity and consistency of application in violation of 5 CFR § 550.1104.

B. Opposition of the Union

In its opposition to the Agency's exception, the Union primarily argues that 5 U.S.C. § 5514 and 5 CFR part 550, subpart K are not applicable to bar the grievance or the Arbitrator's award because collection of the claimed indebtedness was not sought by salary offset.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

For the reasons which follow, the Authority finds that the provisions of 5 U.S.C. § 5514 do not preclude an arbitrator from ruling on and overturning an assessment of administratively determined indebtedness against an employee. Collective bargaining agreements negotiated under section 7121 of the Statute must contain a grievance procedure and that procedure, except as provided in section 7121(d) and (e),2/ is the exclusive procedure for resolving grievances which fall within its coverage.3/ Thus, the negotiated grievance procedure may be invoked to settle disputes within its coverage despite the existence of internal agency appeal procedures or statutory appeal procedures which also cover the matter at issue. As to certain statutory or appellate

2/ Section 7121(d) and (e) provide the aggrieved employee in the specified matters, none of which include the matter involved in this case, an option of raising the matter under the negotiated grievance procedure, if the matter has not been excluded by the parties, or under applicable statutory or appellate procedures.

3/ The term "grievance" is defined in section 7103(a)(9) to include any complaint by any employee concerning any matter relating to the employment of the employee or concerning any claimed violation, misinterpretation, or misapplication of any law, rule, or regulation affecting conditions of employment. Section 5 of the Debt Collection Act of 1982 amended 5 U.S.C. § 5514 to provide the Government with the authority to take offset against the salaries of Federal employees in order to collect any debts owed the United States, and the Office of Personnel Management has prescribed regulations governing the collection of such debts by salary offset. Pub. L. No. 97-365, 96 Stat. 1749; 5 U.S.C. § 5514; 5 CFR part 550, subpart K. Any complaint by an employee about such an indebtedness or collection action would be a "grievance" and would be covered by the negotiated grievance procedure unless excluded by law or by the parties.

procedures, section 7121(d) and (e) of the Statute, as noted, demonstrate that Congress was aware of other statutory appeal procedures when it provided in the Statute for negotiated grievance and arbitration procedures. It is clear that Congress intended the negotiated procedures to be an alternative to those specified statutory and appellate procedures.[4] As to internal agency procedures and statutory procedures not specified in section 7121(d) and (e), Congress intended that the negotiated grievance procedure replace those procedures.[5] Consequently, unless it can be shown that the procedures governing the collection by salary offset of any debts owed the United States are intended to be the exclusive procedures for resolving these matters, such matters are within the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure prescribed by the Statute.

Both the courts and the Authority have determined that Federal law outside the Statute can limit the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 214 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 34 (1986) (proposal 2 and cases cited in the decision). Consequently, notwithstanding that the Activity had not expressly determined to proceed to collect the indebtedness from the grievant by salary offset, the Authority has examined the provisions cited by the Agency to determine whether the provisions are the exclusive procedures available to Federal employees to challenge indebtedness to the United States so as to overcome section 7121 of the Statute. In disagreement with the Union, we find that the provisions must be examined in this respect because they generally apply to the grievant's situation of being determined to be indebted to the United States and as a Federal employee, at least, being subject to salary offset in the collection of that debt.

In the cases where the courts and the Authority have found that outside law limits the scope of the negotiated grievance procedure, there have been clear specific indications that the statutory procedures were intended to be exclusive. Headquarters, AFLC, slip op. at 6-7. For example, in each instance, statutory provisions covering those procedures provided that they should take effect "notwithstanding" any other law. See New Jersey Air National Guard v. FLRA, 677 F.2d 276 (3rd Cir. 1982); Veterans Administration Medical Center, Minneapolis, Minnesota v. FLRA, 705 F.2d 953 (8th Cir. 1983). The Agency in its exception cites no such provisions in section 5514. Therefore, the Authority finds that none of the Agency's arguments provide a basis for concluding that the grievance in this case protesting the Activity's determination of indebtedness is excluded by law from the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure.

Similarly, the Authority finds that the Agency's arguments provide no basis for finding the award contrary to 5 CFR part 550, subpart K. The Agency has argued in its exception that permitting the use of the negotiated grievance procedure in these matters, which is available only to bargaining-unit employees under a collective bargaining agreement, necessarily precludes uniformity and consistency of application of agency regulations to all employees as required by 5 CFR § 550.1104. However, the means of dispute resolution that may be available to individual employees has not been shown to preclude the uniform and consistent application to all employees of the substantive terms of agency regulations governing the collection of debts. Furthermore, the Agency's argument that there cannot be uniformity and consistency because grievance and arbitration is not available to nonbargaining-unit employees is without merit and provides no basis for finding the award deficient. Such an effect is precisely the result contemplated by the terms and provisions of the Statute.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Agency's exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient as contrary to law or regulation, and the exception is denied.

APPENDIX

5 U.S.C. § 5514 provides:

> § 5514. Installment deduction for indebtedness to the United States
> (a)(1) When the head of an agency or his designee determines that an employee, member of the Armed Forces or Reserve of the Armed Forces, is indebted to the United States for debts to which the United States is entitled to be repaid at the time of the determination by the head of an agency or his designee, or is notified of such a debt by the head of an agency or his designee, or is notified of such a debt by the head of another agency or his designee the amount of indebtedness may be collected in monthly installments, or at officially established pay intervals, by deduction from the current pay account of the individual. The deductions may be made from basic pay, special pay, incentive pay, retired pay, retainer pay, or, in the case of an individual not entitled to basic pay, other authorized pay. The amount deducted for any period may not exceed 15 percent of disposable pay, except that a greater percentage may be deducted upon the written consent of the individual involved. If the individual retires or resigns, or if his employment or period of active duty otherwise ends, before collection of the amount of the indebtedness is completed, deduction shall be made from subsequent payments of any nature due the individual from the agency concerned.
> (2) Except as provided in paragraph (3) of this subsection, prior to initiating any proceedings under paragraph (1) of this subsection to collect any indebtedness of an individual, the head of the agency holding the debt or his designee, shall provide the individual with--
>> (A) a minimum of thirty days written notice, informing such individual of the nature and amount of the indebtedness determined by such agency to be due, the intention of the agency to initiate proceedings to collect the debt through deductions from pay, and an explanation of the rights of the individual under this subsection;

(B) an opportunity to inspect and copy Government records relating to the debt;

(C) an opportunity to enter into a written agreement with the agency, under terms agreeable to the head of the agency or his designee, to establish a schedule for the repayment of the debt; and

(D) an opportunity for a hearing on the determination of the agency concerning the existence or the amount of the debt, and in the case of an individual whose repayment schedule is established other than by a written agreement pursuant to subparagraph (C), concerning the terms of the repayment schedule.

A hearing, described in subparagraph (D), shall be provided if the individual, on or before the fifteenth day following receipt of the notice described in subparagraph (A), and in accordance with such procedures as the head of the agency may prescribe, files a petition requesting such a hearing. The timely filing of a petition for hearing shall stay the commencement of collection proceedings. A hearing under subparagraph (D) may not be conducted by an individual under the supervision or control of the head of the agency, except that nothing in this sentence shall be construed to prohibit the appointment of an administrative law judge. The hearing official shall issue a final decision at the earliest practicable date, but not later than sixty days after the filing of the petition requesting the hearing.

(3) The collection of any amount under this section shall be in accordance with the standards promulgated pursuant to sections 3711 and 3716-3718 of title 31 or in accordance with any other statutory authority for the collection of claims of the United States or any agency thereof.

(4) For the purposes of this subsection--

(A) "disposable pay" means that part of pay of any individual remaining after the deduction from those earnings of any amounts required by law to be withheld; and

(B) "agency" includes the United States Postal Service and the Postal Rate Commission.

(b)(1) The head of each agency shall prescribe regulations, subject to the approval of the President, to carry out this section and section 3530(d) of title 31. Regulations prescribed by the Secretaries of the military departments shall be uniform for the military services insofar as practicable.

(2) For purposes of section 7117(a) of this title, no regulation prescribed to carry out subsection (a)(2) of this section shall be considered to be a Government-wide rule or regulation.

(c) Subsection (a) of this section does not modify existing statutes which provide for forfeiture of pay or allowances. This section and section 3530(d) of title 31 do not repeal, modify, or amend section 4837(d) or 9837(d) of title 10 or section 1007(b), (c) of title 37.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Stanford C. Madden filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the issues of whether a statutory employment discrimination complaint under 29 CFR part 1613 is a grievance as defined by Article 3 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement and whether Article 7 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement required the Activity to pay travel and per diem expenses of a union official representing an employee in a statutory employment discrimination complaint. As to the first issue, the Arbitrator interpreted the parties' agreement and ruled that a statutory employment discrimination complaint is not a grievance as defined by Article 3 of the collective bargaining agreement. As to the second issue, the Arbitrator noted that Article 7 of the collective bargaining agreement pertinently provides that to be eligible for the payment of travel and per diem expenses, union officials must be on "representational business of mutual interest to the employees and the [Activity]." The Arbitrator interpreted this language of the agreement and ruled that a statutory employment discrimination complaint was not business of a mutual interest within the meaning of the agreement. In the course of interpreting the agreement, the Arbitrator noted that two decisions gave a fair reading to section 7114(a)(2)(A) of the Statute.*/ As his award in this respect, the Arbitrator determined that travel and per diem expenses of a union official were not payable under the collective bargaining agreement for representation of an employee in a statutory employment discrimination complaint.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Union contends that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator mistakenly interpreted section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute which defines for purposes of the Statute the term "grievance." Specifically, the Union argues that the Arbitrator's interpretation of the Statute is erroneous because the collective bargaining agreement contains its own definition of grievance and because the Arbitrator's interpretation of section 7103(a)(9) is contrary to NTEU v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 1181 (D.C. Cir. 1985), which reversed the Authority decision cited by the Arbitrator and which should be adopted by the Authority.

*/ The reference to the Statute is apparently to the provision providing that an exclusive representative shall be given the opportunity to be represented at a formal discussion concerning any grievance. The Arbitrator cited Internal Revenue Service, Fresno Service Center, Fresno, California v. FLRA, 706 F.2d 1019 (9th Cir. 1983) and Bureau of Government Financial Operations, Headquarters, 15 FLRA 423 (1984). The Authority's decision in Bureau of Government Financial Operations, Headquarters was reversed in NTEU v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 1181 (D.C. Cir. 1985) where the court also questioned the IRS, Fresno Service Center court decision.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority concludes that the Union's exception fails to establish that the award is deficient. Contrary to the contention of the Union, the Arbitrator has in no manner misinterpreted section 7103(a)(9) of the Statute. Indeed, neither the Arbitrator's award nor his discussion concerns or even cites section 7103(a)(9) much less misinterprets it. Instead, as indicated by the Union, the parties' collective bargaining agreement "contains its own definition of grievance" and the interpretation and application of that provision of the agreement and Article 7 of the agreement were the issues submitted to the Arbitrator. Thus, the Union's exception primarily constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation and application of the collective bargaining agreement and such disagreement provides no basis for finding the award deficient. As the Authority expressly held in Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Louisville, Kentucky District and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1790, 10 FLRA 436, 437 (1982), the interpretation and application of the collective bargaining agreement is a question solely for the arbitrator in that it is the arbitrator's construction of the agreement for which the parties have bargained. In addition, to the extent the Union argues that the award is deficient because of the Arbitrator's case citations, this constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's reasoning and conclusions in reaching the award interpreting and applying the collective bargaining agreement and likewise provides no basis for finding the award deficient. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, 16 FLRA 377 (1984).

V. DECISION

For these reasons the Union's exception is denied.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Justin C. Smith filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.[1]

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

According to the record before the Authority, this case involves a dispute submitted by the parties to the Arbitrator concerning official time for representational activities in the Agency's field offices. By agreement of the parties, a two-phase arbitration process was established to resolve the basic dispute and the resulting numerous individual grievances. The first phase of the process involved the interpretation of the official time provisions of the Statute and the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In the second phase, the Arbitrator held hearings to resolve, by bench decisions when practicable, specific grievances pending in the various regions of the Agency. The exceptions in this case have been filed to bench decisions of the Arbitrator rendered on December 2, 1985. In those decisions, the Arbitrator generally ruled that by denying official time and related travel and per diem expenses for union officials for the representational purposes involved, the Agency violated the parties' agreement, which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. Specifically, the Arbitrator sustained the individual grievances and awarded reimbursement for wrongfully denied official time at appropriate straight-time rates for the time spent by the grievants in performing the representational activities. He also awarded travel and per diem expenses.

[1] In its opposition the Union contends that several of the exceptions should be dismissed as untimely. However, except for the Agency's exception to the award of travel and per diem expenses to Union representative Teefy, the Authority has determined that the exceptions were timely filed under the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Authority has determined that on September 18, 1985, the Arbitrator issued a bench award on the issue of Mr. Teefy's travel and per diem expenses. Therefore, under section 7122(b) of the Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, any exceptions to the bench award had to be filed no later than the close of business on October 17, 1985. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority until December 31, 1985. Accordingly, as the Agency's exception in this respect was untimely filed, it is dismissed.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

The Agency excepts to the Arbitrator's award of travel and per diem expenses to Union representative Reiter for preparation prior to the future arbitration hearings to be held in the Agency's various regions. The Agency argues that the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by accepting and ruling on a prospective claim, that the bench award is a capricious departure from an earlier award rendered by the Arbitrator, and that the Arbitrator's authority to resolve issues of travel and per diem expenses was terminated by the parties' execution of a memorandum of understanding which in effect provided official time would be allowed consistent with past practice.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has previously held that an agency may exercise, through negotiations, its discretion to determine whether travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for the purposes of reimbursement of related travel expenses. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2, slip op. at 6 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). In this case, the Arbitrator effectively determined that the Agency agreed to pay the travel and per diem expenses related to the labor-management relations activities covered by the official time provision of the parties' agreement. Thus, the Agency's arguments constitute nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's interpretation of the parties' agreement and do not provide a basis for finding the award deficient. The Philadelphia Regional Office, District Office Operations, Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3186, 15 FLRA 211 (1984). However, any payment of travel and per diem expenses must be consistent with the provisions of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs).[2] In this case, the Arbitrator in directing the payment of travel and per diem expenses in connection with the covered activities did not provide for the Agency to determine the propriety of particular travel and per diem expenses under the FTRs. Consequently, the Authority must modify the award to assure that it is consistent with the requirements of the FTRs. See National Treasury Employees Union and NTEU Chapter 224 and Office of Hearings and Appeals, Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 49 (1986).

IV. Second Exception

A. Contentions

The Agency contends that the Arbitrator's awards of official time are contrary to law on three grounds.

1. The Agency argues that the Arbitrator's awards ordering compensation at the appropriate straight-time rates for time spent performing representational functions outside duty hours are contrary to law because a prerequisite to an award of compensation for a denial of official time is that there be a request for official time. Since there were no

[2] The FTRs, 41 CFR part 101-7, have been held to be Government-wide rules or regulations within the meaning of the Statute. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and U.S. Army Engineer District, Kansas City, Missouri, 13 FLRA 23, 24 (1983).

requests for official time, the Agency could not have made wrongful denials and the remedy ordered by the Arbitrator is not authorized in the circumstances of this case. The Agency further argues that certain of the grievants to whom the Arbitrator awarded compensation had 100 percent of their duty time approved for union representational activities and were thus ineligible for compensation. Lastly, the Agency contends that 5 U.S.C. §§ 5542 and 5543 precluded the remedy ordered by the Arbitrator.

2. The Agency argues that the portion of the Arbitrator's award in which he ordered that Union representative DeJulius would not be required to travel during nonduty hours is contrary to law in that it seeks to establish a contractual right for all future travel to be scheduled during normal working hours.

3. The Agency argues that the Arbitrator's award of official time to grievants Larmer and Rupp are contrary to law because neither are union representatives.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

With respect to the three grounds asserted by the Agency in this exception for finding the award contrary to law, the Authority finds as follows:

1. The Authority has previously indicated that section 7131(d) of the Statute[3] expressly authorizes the parties to negotiate for the granting of official time for the performance of the specified representational activities and that the Statute effectively provides a remedy when

[3] Section 7131(d) provides:

> (d) Except as provided in the preceding subsections of this section--
> (1) any employee representing an exclusive representative, or
> (2) in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter, any employee in an appropriate unit represented by an exclusive representative, > shall be granted official time in any amount the agency and the exclusive representative involved agree to be reasonable, necessary, and in the public interest.

official time under section 7131(d) is wrongfully denied. Specifically, the Authority determined that where official time, authorized by the official time provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with section 7131(d) of the Statute, is wrongfully denied and representational functions are thereafter performed on nonduty time, section 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 104 (1985); U.S. Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Oklahoma City Air Logistics Center, Tinker Air Force Base, Oklahoma and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 916, 19 FLRA No. 105 (1985); Social Security Administration and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3231, 19 FLRA No. 109 (1985); Local 1164, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Social Security Administration, Boston Region, 19 FLRA No. 110 (1985). In this case, as has been noted, the Arbitrator with respect to each bench decision essentially found that the denial of official time was in violation of the parties' collective bargaining agreement which had been negotiated consistent with the Statute. Thus, the Arbitrator effectively found that all the conditions of section 7131(d) had been met. Consequently, the Agency has failed to establish that the bench awards granting the grievants compensation for the amount of time spent performing union representational activities on nonduty time which the Arbitrator ruled should have been performed on official time are contrary to law. Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

2. The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to law. In this regard, 5 U.S.C. § 6101(b)(2) requires agencies to schedule employee travel during hours of duty "to the maximum extent practicable." Thus, in his award the Arbitrator was merely requiring the Agency "to the maximum extent practicable" to schedule Union representative DeJulius' future travel during normal working hours consistent with section 6101(b)(2). Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

3. The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient as alleged. In a recent decision, American Federation of Government Employees and Social Security Administration, 21 FLRA No. 14 (1986), the Authority reiterated its previous indications that section 7131(d) of the Statute expressly authorizes parties to negotiate for the granting of official time for the performance of specified activities and that the Statute effectively provides a remedy when official time under section 7131(d) is wrongfully denied. Thus, where official time, authorized by provisions of a collective bargaining agreement consistent with section 7131(d) of the Statute, is wrongfully denied and the covered activities are thereafter performed on nonduty time, section 7131(d) entitles the aggrieved employee to be paid for the amount of time that should have been official time. In this case, while the grievants were not engaged in union representational activities, section 7131(d)(2) of the Statute expressly provides for official time for bargaining unit employees "in connection with any other matter covered by this chapter." The Arbitrator by his award effectively found the dispute was a "grievance" covered by the Statute and that under the parties' agreement grievant Larmer was entitled to official time and grievant Rupp was entitled to restoration of annual leave and that therefore the conditions of section 7131(d) had been met. Accordingly, this exception must be denied.

V. OTHER EXCEPTIONS

A. Contentions

In numerous other exceptions, the Agency essentially contends that: (1) the bench awards are a capricious departure from the earlier final award of the Arbitrator; (2) the Arbitrator exceeded his authority by ruling on claims that were not part of the grievance before him; (3) the Arbitrator extended his remedy to nongrievants; and, (4) the Arbitrator conducted himself and the hearing in an arbitrary and capricious manner.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is in any way deficient. It is clear that the Agency is attempting to relitigate the merits of the case before the Authority and that the thrust of the Agency's assertions essentially constitutes nothing more than disagreement with the Arbitrator's findings of fact and his specific reasoning and conclusions based on the evidence and testimony before him, and generally with his interpretation and application of the parties' agreement. Consequently, the exceptions do not provide any basis for finding the award deficient. See Pederal Correctional Institution, Petersburg, Virginia and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2052, Petersburg, Virginia, 13 FLRA 108 (1983).

VI. DECISION

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2425.4 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and for the reasons stated above, the Agency's exceptions are denied but the award directing payment of travel and per diem expenses to Union representative Reiter is modified to provide that Ms. Reiter is entitled to payment of travel and per diem expenses for preparation prior to future arbitration hearings insofar as consistent with applicable requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. The General Counsel and the Charging Party filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision with supporting briefs.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

The Authority agrees with the Judge's finding that the complaint alleging a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute must be dismissed because the record does not establish that the Respondent changed its past practice with respect to leave charged to employees arriving late to work, and therefore the Respondent had no duty to notify the Union and bargain as alleged. The Authority notes that the complaint in this case did not allege a section 7116(a)(2) violation involving discriminatory treatment against the unit employee in question, whose request to have his AWOL charge removed was denied.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. Section 7101, et seq. and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

Pursuant to a charge filed on October 26, 1984, by the National Association of Agriculture Employees, Branch #15 (hereinafter called the Union or Charging Party), a Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on February 12, 1985, by the Regional Director for Region VI, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Dallas, Texas. The Complaint alleges that the United States Department of Agriculture, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Protection and Quarantine (hereinafter called the Respondent or Department of Agriculture), violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (hereinafter called the Statute), by virtue of its action in changing an existing policy with respect to allowing employees who confused their scheduled work shifts and reported late for work to take annual leave or to adjust their respective hours of work rather than be charged with being absent without leave (AWOL), without first giving the Union notice of the change and an opportunity to request bargaining over the manner of implementation and the impact of the change on adversely affected employees.

A hearing was held in the captioned matter on March 26, 1985, in El Paso, Texas. All parties were afforded the full opportunity to be heard, to examine and cross-examine witnesses, and to introduce evidence bearing on the issues involved herein. The General Counsel and the Respondent submitted post-hearing briefs on May 28, 1985, which have been duly considered.

Upon the basis of the entire record, including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

The Union[1] is the exclusive representative of Respondent's "Professional Plant Protection and Quarantine Officers" (PPQ) stationed in El Paso, Texas. The PPQ's regulate the movement of plant and animal products into and out of the United States in an effort to prevent the dissemination of injuries insects and disease. The El Paso, Texas port includes three international bridges, the airport and a railroad yard.

The approximately 25 unit employees employed in El Paso work on various shifts from 6 a.m. to midnight, seven days a week. Nine shifts were scheduled for Monday through Saturday[2] and seven shifts were scheduled for Sunday which was counted as an overtime day.[3]

[1] The record reveals that the "Federal Plant Quarantine Inspector's National Association" is the duly recognized exclusive representative on a nationwide basis and that Local #15 is responsible for servicing the El Paso, Texas office of the Respondent. The record further discloses that while there has been no official name change, the "Federal Plant Quarantine Inspectors Association" has been operating or doing business under the name of "The National Association of Agriculture Employees." In fact the most recent agreement between the parties lists the District Director, El Paso, Texas, and National Association of Agriculture Employees, Branch #15 as signatories.

A shift schedule covers a two week period and is posted one week prior to its effective date. Employees are assigned to various shifts and report to different locations. Employees are allowed to make shift changes, in most cases without restriction. There are certain required shifts that employees work eight days out of the two week period without being able to trade. After PPQ's agree to trade shifts, they sign a form which is then approved by a supervisor. The trade is then posted on the shift schedule.

The Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) Directive dated October 7, 1982 dealing with "Leave" provides in Part 3, Article III, Absence Without Official Leave (AWOL) as follows:

> "Employees whose absence from duty was not authorized or approved or whose leave request has been denied is charged on the T&A as AWOL. An employee on AWOL cannot receive pay for such absence. If an employee later submits acceptable evidence that the absence without prior authorization was excusable or that the employee was ill, the AWOL charge may be retroactively changed to annual or sick leave or leave without pay . . . ."

On April 28, 1984, PPQ Officer Joseph Gross who was scheduled to be off work on April 30, 1984, agreed to trade shifts with a fellow employee and work the 11:30 a.m. to 8:00 p.m. shift on April 30, 1984. In accordance with the existing practice, Mr. Gross submitted a change in work schedule to the appropriate supervisor which was subsequently approved.

On April 30, 1984, Mr. Gross, having confused his scheduled hours of work for that day, reported for work at 1:30 p.m., two hours past his scheduled starting time. Upon his arrival, Mr. Nick Silva, a supervisor, informed Mr. Gross that he was two hours late and that he, Mr. Silva, was charging him two hours AWOL for this period of time. Mr. Gross then took the matter up with Mr. Ruben Garcia, Assistant Officer in Charge. In his meeting with Mr. Garcia, Mr. Gross took the position that he had confused his shift and felt that he should be charged with annual leave instead of AWOL. However, Mr. Garcia and and Mr. Silva refused to change the two hours from AWOL to annual leave on the ground that since the change in schedule had occurred only two days earlier he, Mr. Gross, should have remembered his new schedule. Mr. Gross then appealed the matter to Mr. John Vigil, Officer in Charge. Mr. Gross informed Mr. Vigil that there should be a definite policy concerning what type of leave would be assigned an employee when he arrived at the wrong time and that there should be uniformity among the supervisors with respect to the type of leave an employee was charged with when he confused the starting time of his shift. According to Mr. Gross, this was the first time in his twenty-two years of employment that he had been charged AWOL for confusing the starting time of a scheduled shift. Mr. Gross could not recall how many times in the past that he had confused the starting time of a shift, but stated that he was sure he had done it in the past.

[2] 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m., 9:30 a.m. to 6 p.m., 11:30 a.m. to 8 p.m., 1:30 p.m. to 10 p.m., 3:30 p.m. to midnight, 2 p.m. to 10 p.m., and 6 a.m.

[3] 6 a.m. to noon, 8 a.m. to 2 p.m., 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., noon to 6 p.m., 2 p.m. to 8 p.m., 4 p.m. to 10 p.m., and 6 p.m. to midnight.

According to Mr. Gross, this was the second time in his twenty-two year career that he had been charged AWOL. The first time he was charged AWOL was on March 30, 1984, when he reported back from lunch late.

Mr. Gross subsequently filed a grievance based upon his being charged AWOL on March 30, 1984 and April 30, 1984. In support of his grievance he alleged that he was being discriminated against because other named PPQ's were allowed to take annual leave in lieu of LWOP when they confused the starting times of there rescheduled shifts. The grievance did not involve the issue of a change in an existing past practice without prior notice to the Union.

Ms. Judy Jenkin, a former vice-president of Local 15, who had worked in El Paso for approximately four and one-half years before being transferred to Baltimore, Maryland on March 17, 1985, testified that prior to April 30, 1984, when Mr. Gross was given an AWOL for confusing the starting time of his shift, employees who confused their respective shifts were allowed to take annual leave or readjust their hours of work. In support of her testimony, Ms. Jenkin pointed out that on October 10, 1982, she confused her shift starting time and reported to work fifteen to twenty minutes past the scheduled 8 a.m. starting time for her shift and was paid from 8:15 without any discussion.

Ms. Jenkin further testified that employee Mr. Norman Bebon, who was scheduled to work the 8:30 to 5 p.m. shift on October 7, 1982, confused his shift and reported late after being called by his supervisor. Mr. Bebon was allowed to take one hour of annual leave. According to the testimony of Ms. Jenkin; Mr. Ramon Alvarez was allowed to work different shift hours on April 4, 1984, when he confused the starting time of his shift, and reported in late. He was allowed to work an 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. tour of duty rather than his scheduled 6 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. tour of duty.

Mr. Bob Eads was not charged AWOL when he confused his shift and failed to show up for work thereby forcing another supervisor to be called in to work his shift. Mr. Ysobel Medrano was allowed to take annual leave when he confused his shift in early 1982.[4]

Ms. Jenkin acknowledged in her testimony that two employees, Mr. Ernest Elliot and Mr. Lazaro Holquin were given AWOL's in 1981 and on November 6, 1984, respectively, when they confused their shift starting times and failed to report for work.

Mr. Ronald Joseph Venezia, a PPQ officer in El Paso testified that he once confused his work schedule in October of 1981, a Sunday, and that upon reporting to work two hours late he was allowed to work the remainder of his scheduled shift.

Mr. Aaron Miller a PPQ officer in El Paso testified that once in the four and one-half years that he had been in El Paso he confused the starting time of his shift by two hours and was allowed to take two hours annual leave by his supervisor Sam Longanecker. Mr. Miller testified that he was allowed to take two hours annual leave only after Mr. Longanecker checked the schedules and noted that his 6 a.m. to 2 p.m. shift had been sandwiched in between two 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. shifts and that his other assigned weekly shifts were all 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Mr. John A. Vigil, the Officer in Charge of the El Paso Area testified that he has always adhered to the APHIS policy on absences, tardiness and AWOL and that he has delegated his discretionary responsibility to his three first line supervisors. According to Mr. Vigil if an employee had not been granted leave in advance the employee is considered AWOL when he fails to show up for his scheduled shift. The decision to subsequently allow an employee to charge his absence to annual leave as opposed to being AWOL is decided on a case by case basis. In the case of Mr. Gross, Mr. Vigil refused to change Mr. Gross' AWOL to annual leave because Mr. Gross had been warned and counseled in the past about being late, had received an AWOL a few weeks earlier and had personally requested the shift change only two days earlier. Accordingly, in view of all the circumstances Mr. Vigil was of the opinion that the AWOL notation for the April 30, 1984 incident was justified.

[4] Ms. Jenkin acknowledges in her testimony that she was not aware of the discussions that occurred with the respective supervisors of the above named employees prior to allowing the employees to reschedule their shifts and/or take annual leave. With respect to the incident involving Ms. Jenkin, the record indicates that October 10, 1982 was a Sunday, an overtime day, for which an employee could not be charged AWOL for not working as scheduled.

Mr. Nick Silva who has been a supervisor in El Paso for twelve years testified that awarding an employee an AWOL for confusing his schedule is not a change in past practice. According to Mr. Silva the awarding of annual leave rather than AWOL depends on whether the excuse for confusing a shift is acceptable. Based upon the facts underlying Mr. Gross' action in confusing his shift as well as his, Mr. Gross', past record, he decided that Mr. Gross should be given an AWOL rather than being allowed to take annual leave for confusing his shift on April 30, 1984.

Mr. Charles Parker who has been a supervisor in El Paso for eleven years testified that it has always been his practice to consider an employee AWOL when he does not arrive as scheduled. If an acceptable excuse is later given he will and usually does utilize his discretion and allows the employee to take annual leave.

Mr. Samuel Longanecker who had been a supervisor in El Paso for approximately five years testified that confusing a scheduled tour of duty is not a common occurrence. He further testified to an instance when he gave an employee an AWOL for failing to report for her shift. When the employee later called in with an acceptable excuse he changed the AWOL to annual leave. According to Mr. Longanecker the test for allowing the use of annual leave in lieu of AWOL is an acceptable excuse for confusing the work schedule.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel, citing approximately five instances during the past three years where employees confused their respective shifts and were allowed to take annual leave or readjust their shifts rather than being charged AWOL, takes the position that Respondent's action in awarding Mr. Gross an AWOL for confusing his shift on April 30, 1984, amounted to a change in past practice. Further, according to the General Counsel, in such circumstances the Respondent was under an obligation to give the Union prior notice of the change and an opportunity to request bargaining over the impact and manner of implementation of the change. Having failed to give the Union prior notice of the change and an opportunity to so bargain, it is the General Counsel's position that Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

The Respondent on the other hand takes the position that there was no change in past practice and that the complaint should therefore be dismissed in its entirety. According to Respondent it has always been the practice to consider an employee AWOL when he confused his shift and failed to appear on time for the start of his shift. To the extent that the five employees cited by the General Counsel had in the past been allowed to either take annual leave and/or readjust their respective shifts rather than be charged with an AWOL, Respondent points out that in accord with the existing APHIS Directive such action was only taken after the affected employees had proffered an acceptable excuse to their respective supervisors for their tardiness, etc.

Respondent further contends that the instant complaint is barred by Section 7116(d) of the Statute since the same issues underlying the complaint were raised in Mr. Gross' earlier grievance filed with the Respondent.

Contrary to the contention of the Respondent, I find that the issues included in the grievance are different than the issues underlying the instant complaint. The grievance concerned the merits of awarding Mr. Gross an AWOL for confusing the starting time of his shift, while the instant complaint concerns a change in past practice without giving prior notice to the Union and an opportunity to request impact and implementation bargaining thereon. In such circumstances, I find that Section 7116(d) of the Statute does not serve as a bar to the processing of the instant complaint. Cf. United States Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Aerospace Guidance and Metrology Center, Newark, Ohio, 4 FLRA No. 70 (1980).

Turning now to the merits of the instant complaint, I find that the General Counsel has failed to sustain the burden imposed upon him by Section 2423.18 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, namely to prove the allegations of the complaint by a preponderance of the evidence.

In reaching this conclusion it is noted that the General Counsel has only established that in the past three years some six employees, including Mr. Gross, were allowed to take annual leave or readjust their schedules when they confused the starting times of their respective shifts and reported late for work.[6] With respect to Mr. Alvarez, Mr. Eads, Mr. Bebon and Mr. Medrano, the record is barren of any evidence concerning the circumstances underlying their respective supervisors' actions in allowing them to take annual leave or readjust their shifts in lieu of being charged AWOL. In the case of Mr. Miller, his testimony establishes that he was allowed to take annual leave only after his supervisor, Mr. Sam Longanecker checked out Mr. Miller's weekly schedule and past attendance record and satisfied himself that Mr. Miller had an acceptable reason for having confused his schedule and shown up late for work.

In view of the foregoing and particularly in the absence of any other probative evidence contradicting the mutually corroborative and credited testimony of the four supervisors in the El Paso office of the Respondent to the effect that the granting of annual leave or allowing employees to readjust their respective schedules in lieu of being charged AWOL when they confused their schedules had never been automatic but rather dependent on the proffer of an acceptable excuse, I find that the record evidence does not establish, as alleged by the General Counsel, that Respondent's action in awarding Mr. Gross an AWOL for confusing his schedule on April 30, 1984, amounted to a change in past practice over which Respondent was obligated to give the Union prior notice and an opportunity to bargain over the impact thereof and the manner of implementation.

[6] Mr. Miller, Mr. Eads, Mr. Bebon and Mr. Medrano. Inasmuch as Ms. Jenkin and Mr. Venezia confused their respective shifts on Sundays, an overtime day when there could be no AWOL penalty, I find the fact that they were allowed to readjust their shifts to be of no probative value.

Having concluded that the Respondent did not violate the Statute, it is hereby recommended that the Authority issue the following Order dismissing the Complaint in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Respondent filed an opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions. The consolidated complaint in this case alleged a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) (1) on June 15, 1983 when the Respondent issued a memorandum setting forth a new seat belt policy; (2) on July 1, 1983 when the Respondent issued a memorandum changing the delegation of authority to suspend employee driving privileges; and (3) on September 26, 1983 when the Respondent implemented certain procedures concerning the new seat belt policy.

II. Facts

The facts are fully set forth in the Judge's Decision. Briefly stated, the essential facts giving rise to the consolidated complaint are as follows:

The Respondent notified the Charging Parties (Unions) on June 10, 1983, that beginning on June 15, employees who failed to wear available seat belts while driving privately owned vehicles (POVs) on Lowry Air Force Base would receive a 30-day suspension of driving privileges and that the driver of any POV would be subject to a 30-day suspension of driving privileges if any passenger failed to wear a seat belt. Prior to this announced change, employees who failed to wear seat belts did not receive mandatory suspensions until the third infraction. On June 14, the Unions submitted requests to the Respondent to negotiate as soon as possible but no later than June 21, 1983. Negotiations commenced on June 21, and also took place on June 28 and several days in July and September. The record reveals that implementation of the new seat belt policy was delayed insofar as bargaining unit employees were concerned until after negotiations were completed. Once negotiations began, the Respondent issued a memorandum on July 1, announcing that senior officers in each of Respondent's commands had been granted the authority to suspend employee driving privileges. Prior to this change, the authority to suspend seat belt violators was at the Base Commander or Deputy Commander level.

The parties failed to reach agreement during the June and July negotiations with Respondent declaring certain of the Unions' proposals to be nonnegotiable. They later sought help from the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS). Thereafter, the parties entered into negotiations with the assistance of FMCS in September 1983. The parties agreed on a number of matters on September 15, 1983, but some issues remained unresolved. Thereafter, on September 20, the Respondent notified the Unions that it would implement its last best offer concerning the seat belt policy on September 26, 1983.

III. Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded, in Case No. 7-CA-30459, that the Respondent had not failed to meet its statutory bargaining obligation prior to June 15, 1983, but rather that evidence established a waiver by the Union of the right to bargain prior to June 15. The Judge further concluded that the new seat belt policy was not applied to bargaining unit employees on June 15, 1983, but was deferred pursuant to agreement of the parties. As to the July 1 change in delegation of authority to suspend driving privileges, the Judge concluded that the Respondent had deferred implementation of the new seat belt policy and there was no evidentiary basis for finding that Respondent implemented the July 1 delegation as alleged in the complaint.

The Judge concluded in Case Nos. 7-CA-30584 and 7-CA-30543 that the Respondent did not act unlawfully when it implemented the new seat belt policy on September 26. In this regard the Judge found that Respondent had bargained to impasse on all issues relating to the September 26 implementation of the policy and that the Unions did not request Panel assistance until after Respondent had served notice and implemented its last best offer.

In view of the above, the Judge recommended that the consolidated complaint be dismissed in its entirety.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel filed a number of exceptions to the Judge's findings and conclusions. In particular the General Counsel disputed the factual determinations that Respondent did not implement the new seat belt policies on June 15, 1983, and did not implement delegation of the suspension/appeal authority for seat belt violations on July 1, 1983, and that bargaining unit employees suffered no adverse impact from the July 1 change. Additionally, the General Counsel excepted to the conclusion that NFFE waived its right to pre-implementation bargaining over the June 15 seat belt policy; that Respondent bargained in good faith to impasse before implementing the new seat belt policies on September 26, 1983; and that the policies implemented on September 26, 1983 were Respondent's last best offers.

In its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions the Respondent argued that no evidence supported the General Counsel's theory that Respondent implemented the new seat belt policies on June 15, 1983; that record evidence supported the conclusion that Respondent did not implement the delegation of the suspension/appeal authority for seat belt violations on July 1, 1983; and that there was no evidence of adverse impact on bargaining unit employees based on the July 1 change. Further, the Respondent argued that the Judge correctly determined that NFFE waived its right to pre-implementation bargaining; that Respondent bargained in good faith to impasse before implementing the new seat belt policies; and that the Respondent acted in good faith in implementing the change in seat belt policy on September 26, 1983.

V. Analysis

In concluding that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, the Authority finds, in agreement with the Judge, that the parties engaged in good faith negotiations concerning the change in the seat belt policy. The record establishes that the Respondent notified the Unions that it was going to implement a change in the seat belt policy on June 15, 1983. Thereafter, the Unions requested negotiations and bargained on all negotiable aspects of the change. Although bargaining did not take place until after June 15, the record is clear that the new policy was not put into effect for unit employees until after the completion of negotiations.*/

*/ Contrary to the Judge, the Authority finds that NFFE's request on June 14 to bargain as soon as possible, but no later than June 21, 1983, did not constitute a waiver of the Union's right to bargain prior to the implementation of the change. Similarly, the Authority finds that AFGE's request on June 14 to exclude the employees in its unit of exclusive recognition from the change until the parties reached agreement did not constitute a waiver of AFGE's right to bargain prior to implementation of the change. In this regard, the Authority notes that Respondent first notified the Unions of the proposed change on June 10, and proposed June 15 as the implementation date. The Authority takes administrative notice that June 10, 1983, was a Friday and that the Unions' response was made by the following Tuesday.

Furthermore, the Authority finds that the proposals over which the Respondent refused to bargain prior to implementing its change in seat belt policy were nonnegotiable as the Respondent contended. Three of the Unions' proposals would restrict the disciplinary actions which agency management could take and would limit management's right to discipline employees within the meaning of section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. _See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2302 and U.S. Army Armor Center and Fort Knox, Fort Knox, Kentucky_, 19 FLRA No. 95 (1985) (union proposal I). The Authority finds that another proposal dealing with appeals of suspensions by non-bargaining unit employees is also outside the duty to bargain, as it is well established that the duty to bargain does not extend to matters concerning positions and employees outside the bargaining unit. _International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, AFL-CIO, NASA Headquarters Professional Association and National Aeronautics and Space Administration, Headquarters, Washington, D.C._, 8 FLRA 212 (1982), and cases cited at note 5 of that decision. Finally, the Authority finds that the Unions' proposal dealing with paying employees for the time it takes them to transit between the Activity entrance and their actual job site at the start and end of the work day is nonnegotiable. This proposal would result in management being precluded from assigning duties during those portions of the work day during which employees were in transit between the Activity and the job site. Thus, the proposal would violate management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. _National Association of Government Employees, Local R-12-33 and National Association of Federal Employees, Local 1374 and Pacific Missile Test Center, Point Mugu, California_, 14 FLRA 275 (1984). Thus the Authority finds that the Respondent complied with its duty to negotiate and negotiated in good faith with regard to all proposals submitted by the Unions which were within its duty to bargain.

Thus, the Unions' response was timely and, given the circumstances, contained no language which would serve as a clear and unequivocal waiver of their right to bargain prior to implementation of the change. Moreover, the Authority notes that subsequent to receiving the Unions' request, the Respondent delayed implementation until after it had satisfied its bargaining obligation.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order except as noted in the footnote. We therefore conclude that Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by refusing to bargain over changes in the Respondent's seat belt policy. Rather the Authority finds that the parties engaged in good faith negotiations with regard to all negotiable proposals concerning the change in the seat belt policy. Accordingly the complaint shall be dismissed in its entirety.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the consolidated complaint in Case Nos. 7-CA-30459, 7-CA-30584 and 7-CA-30543 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

These cases arose as unfair labor practice proceedings under the provisions of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq. (hereinafter referred to as "the Statute"), and the Rules and Regulations issued thereunder.

The consolidated complaint, as amended at the hearing, alleged that Lowry Air Force Base (Respondent or LAFB) committed the following unfair labor practices within the purview of the Statute:

Case No. 7-CA-30459

On or about June 15, 1983, the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by issuing to all personnel at LAFB, a memorandum announcing that failure to wear available seat belts in privately owned vehicles (POVs) operated on LAFB would result in a 30 day suspension of driving privileges, and that the driver of any POV would be subject to a 30 day suspension of driving privileges if any passenger failed to wear seat belts.

On or about July 1, 1983, the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by issuing to all units and activities a memorandum announcing that senior officers in each of Respondent's commands had been granted the authority to suspend employee driving privileges.

It was alleged that the June 15, 1983 and July 1, 1983 memorandums constituted unilateral changes in conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees represented by the National Federation of Federal Employees (NFFE) Local 1497; a failure to provide NFFE Local 1497 notice of such change; a failure to bargain in good faith;[1] and interference, restraint and coercion of such employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by the Statute.

Case No. 7-CA-30584

On or about September 26, 1983, the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing certain procedures and arrangements concerning the enforcement of policy requiring drivers and passengers to wear seat belts in POVs operated on LAFB. It was alleged that the September 26, 1983 implementation constituted unilateral changes in conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees represented by NFFE Local 1497, and interference, restraint and coercion of such employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by the Statute.

[1] The complaint alleged a failure to bargain in good faith concerning the substance and impact and implementation of the June 15, 1983 memorandum, and a failure to bargain concerning the impact and implementation of the July 1, 1983 memorandum.

Case No. 7-CA-30543

On or about September 26, 1983, the Respondent violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing certain procedures and arrangements concerning the enforcement of policy requiring drivers and passengers to wear seat belts in POVs operated on LAFB. It was alleged that the September 26, 1983, implementation constituted unilateral changes in conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees represented by the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE), Local 1974, and interference, restraint and coercion of such employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed by the Statute.[2]

The parties were represented by counsel during the hearing and were afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, and examine and cross-examine witnesses. Based upon the entire record herein, including exhibits, and other relevant evidence adduced at the hearing,[3] and briefs filed by counsel representing the Respondent and General Counsel, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions and recommendations.

[2] Allegations in Case No. 7-CA-30543, involving AFGE Local 1974, are set forth in Paragraphs 5, 14, and 17 of the consolidated complaint. Counsel representing the Respondent moved to strike portions of the General Counsel's post-hearing brief because of a perceived attempt to expand the allegations of the consolidated complaint to include other alleged unfair labor practices perpetrated against AFGE Local 1974, but not specifically pleaded in the consolidated complaint. Counsel representing the General Counsel filed an opposition to the motion to strike. Since only specifically pleaded allegations relating to AFGE Local 1974 may be considered as a basis for any possible remedy which might inure to the benefit of AFGE Local 1974, and since statements reflected in a post-hearing brief are not evidence, and do not otherwise operate to amend the consolidated complaint, the motion to strike is denied.

[3] Counsel representing the General Counsel moved to correct errors in the hearing transcript. Under authority reflected in 5 C.F.R. § 2423.19(r), the proposed corrections are approved with the exception of the proposed correction at Tr. 6:9. An examination of this reference in the transcript reflects no error of the type noted in the motion. Other errors noted on this transcript page were described as appearing at Tr. 6:22, 23 and 24 respectively; however, these errors appeared at Tr. 6:19, 22 and 23 instead.

Findings of Fact

Notice of Changes Relating to Seat Belt Policy

By memorandum dated June 10, 1983, Darvin H. Koehler, Respondent's Civilian Personnel Officer, advised Joyce Coxson, President of NFFE, Local 1497, that on June 15, 1983, the Respondent intended to begin strict enforcement of Air Force regulations relating to seat belt use in POVs operated on LAFB by military personnel, dependents and civilian personnel (Tr. 57; G.C. Exh. No. 10). Although dated June 10, 1983, the memorandum was personally delivered to Ms. Coxson on June 9, 1983 (Tr. 57-58).[4] It announced that the new policy would involve a 30 day suspension of LAFB driving privileges for a first offense; that vehicle drivers would be subject to the 30 day suspension rule for a first offense if any passenger in a vehicle failed to wear a seat belt; and that suspended drivers would be allowed to drive their cars on LAFB only to the extent of parking their cars in a designated parking area situated near a LAFB entrance gate.

Department of Air Force Regulation 127-7, dated June 3, 1980 required the wearing of seat belts. The following general language formed the basis of this requirement:

> . . . All military personnel and civilians operating or riding in private motor vehicles on a DOD installation will wear seat belts if available. (G.C. Exh. No. 4 at page 2).

[4] As a result of delivery of the memorandum on June 9, 1983, NFFE Local 1497, received approximately six days notice of the change. A statement to the contrary in the General Counsel's Brief is not supported by the record (G.C. Brief at page 20).

Counsel for the General Counsel attempted to derive some benefit from the fact that an incomplete account of the proposed change was reported in the "Lowry Airman," a LAFB newspaper (G.C. Exh. No. 9). It was argued that the new policy was announced in the newspaper as a fait accompli on June 10, 1983. However, Jt. Exh. No. 10 reflects notice of the proposed change, and there was no showing that the Respondent was responsible for issuance of the incomplete newspaper account, or that such publication was otherwise intended to be a unilateral implementation of a new seat belt policy on June 10, 1983. Argument that the new policy went into effect without notice on June 10, 1983, is not supported by the record.

This rule had not been strictly enforced. Those found in violation of the seat belt rule during random checks by security personnel were not issued citations directly. Their names were recorded by security personnel and they were informed of their failure to comply. They were then advised that their names would be forwarded to their commanders for appropriate action. This procedure was followed for the first two infractions of the rule, and after the third offense those found to be in violation were supposed to receive a mandatory suspension of driving privileges. However, the record reflected that the mandatory suspension rule was not followed by the Respondent. It was acknowledged that a repeated failure to wear seat belts could have led to formal discipline; however, records of seat belt violations were not included in employee personnel files.

On June 14, 1983, the day preceding the proposed implementation, Ms. Coxson, on behalf of NFFE, Local 1497, delivered a request to negotiate concerning the proposed change "as soon as possible, but not later than 21 June 1983." (G.C. Exh. No. 11). The request noted an awareness of the duty to bargain prior to implementation, but did not specifically request a delay in implementation.[5] Ms. Coxson's testimony established that despite the impending proposed implementation date she and a labor relations specialist representing the Respondent agreed to negotiate "as requested" on June 21, 1983, or six days after the proposed implementation date (Tr. 59-60).

The "last minute" filing of the request to negotiate on the day preceding proposed implementation; Ms. Coxson's unequivocal acceptance of June 21, 1983, as the date to commence bargaining; and the fact that negotiations actually commenced on June 21, 1983; all lead to the factual finding that Ms. Coxson's June 14, 1983 bargaining request conferred upon the Respondent the option to defer negotiations until after June 15, 1983, the date proposed by Respondent for implementation of the new seat belt policy.

[5] On the same date (June 14, 1983), a similar bargaining request was supplied to Mr. Koehler on behalf of AFGE Locals 1974 and 2040, as they also were interested in joint bargaining concerning the change. It did not include a request for delay in implementation, and did not mention a specific date to begin negotiations. These Locals requested Koehler to reply to the request "before the end of the week to set up a bargaining session . . . ." (G.C. Exh. No. 12). The week in question ended on June 17, 1983, two days after the proposed June 15, 1983 implementation.

This document, plus other evidence in the record shows that the three Unions did not specifically contemplate bargaining prior to implementation. Instead the parties agreed that post-implementation bargaining might ensue. However, at or about the same time it was also agreed that no enforcement action under the new policy would be initiated against bargaining unit employees until after Respondent met statutory bargaining obligations.

The policy spelled out in the June 10, 1983 memorandum by Mr. Koehler was in fact implemented on June 15, 1983, by the issuance of a memorandum dated June 15, addressed to LAFB personnel by Colonel Leslie A. Hobgood, Base Commander, LAFB (G.C. Exh. No. 13). The memorandum announced that the policy would be applicable to "both military personnel/dependents and civilian personnel." However, the record is clear that the term "civilian personnel" was not construed by the parties to include bargaining unit members represented by NFFE or other unions recognized by the Respondent. That is, the parties agreed that bargaining unit employees would not then be affected by the policy. The unions were orally assured that bargaining unit members would not be subjected to the new sanctions prior to completion of negotiations, and further that the new policy would be imposed in a manner consistent with Respondent's bargaining obligation.

As in the period prior to June 15, 1983, the names of those violating seat belt policy were recorded; however, new policy relating to the suspension of driving privileges was not effectuated with respect to bargaining unit employees. The record clearly indicated that implementation was withheld insofar as all bargaining unit employees were concerned.[6]

The implementation of the new policy did result in an increase in the number of random checks by security personnel to determine whether or not drivers and passengers in POVs were wearing seat belts. However, Counsel for the General Counsel acknowledged that this increase was not relied upon as a basis for the complaint (Tr. 210-211).[7] The record revealed that the names of individuals were recorded on revised forms not previously utilized by security personnel (G.C. Exh. No. 16). However, the forms were not disseminated, or otherwise utilized as a basis for action, and were used solely for the purpose of recording the identity of those in violation of the rule. This minor administrative change was not alleged as a basis for the complaint, and did not otherwise alter the previously existing practice of recording the names of those in violation of seat belt rules.

[6] The Respondent deferred action against all civilian employees including those represented by NFFE, the exclusive representative of bargaining unit members identified in Case No. 7-CA-30439, because it was not possible for security personnel to determine which civilian employees were bargaining unit members. The record indicates that by design the new suspension policy was not effectuated so as to affect bargaining unit employees until after September 26, 1983.

[7] The complaint does not rely upon a change in the degree of attention given to the use of seat belts in POVs. It refers to alleged changes relating specifically to penalties to be imposed for violation of rules requiring seat belts in POVs, and changes relating to the delegation of authority to suspend driving privileges.

Negotiations Concerning Seat Belt Policy

The Respondent agreed to bargain concerning seat belt policy in accordance with union requests (Tr. 125, 132-133). The negotiating teams included representatives of LAFB, NFFE Local 1497, AFGE Local 1974, and AFGE Local 2040. NFFE Local 1497 was represented by Dr. Edgar Smith. He also took a leading role on behalf of the AFGE Locals. Dariel Case, President of AFGE Local 1974, also took a leading role on behalf of the two AFGE Locals. LAFB was represented at the outset by Colonel Donald W. Swain, Vice Commander, LAFB; and thereafter by Colonel John A. Johnson, who replaced Colonel Swain.

On June 21, 1983, six days after issuance of Colonel Hobgood's June 15, 1983 memorandum to all LAFB Personnel, Ms. Coxson wrote to Mr. Koehler on behalf of NFFE Local 1497, and outlined a series of issues which she felt should form the basis of negotiations (G.C. Exh. No. 14). This document reflects that, despite limited implementation with respect to non-bargaining unit employees and others earlier in June, she requested that any negotiations occur prior to implementation. In view of the agreement to negotiate on June 21, 1983, a date after the partial implementation on June 15th, and in view of the agreement to exempt bargaining unit employees, it may be concluded that this request was merely a demand to continue deferral of implementation of policy with respect to NFFE bargaining unit employees. The record reflects no reason to conclude that the new penalty policy was effectuated so as to affect them.

Negotiations actually commenced on June 21, 1983, and more serious bargaining concerning the subject occurred on June 28, July 6, and July 15, 1983, prior to mediation. A total of about eight to twelve hours was spent by the parties at these meetings. On June 27, 1983, Dr. Smith submitted to management a list of additional subjects for negotiation (G.C. Exh. No. 15). Thereafter, on either June 28 or July 6, 1983, the three Locals participating in negotiations supplied a new consolidated list of fifteen proposals to the LAFB negotiating team (G.C. Exh. No. 17).

By memorandum dated July 1, 1983, the Respondent through Colonel Swain, then LAFB Vice Commander, reiterated the 30 day suspension rule made applicable previously to all but bargaining unit members. He assigned suspension/appeal authority to LAFB organizational commanders. As a result of this change organizational commanders were assigned to hear appeals arising from members of their own commands following citation of such individuals for failure to wear seat belts (G.C. Exh. No. 16). The authority was vested in officers with the rank of colonel or higher. However, the record indicates that the delegation policy was not then made applicable to bargaining unit employees because of the exemption previously arranged for bargaining unit employees. Such authority had in the past always been exercised at the Base Commander or Deputy Commander level.[8]

Counsel representing the General Counsel argued that the delegation of authority to organizational commanders was a change which affected the terms and conditions of employment of bargaining unit members in NFFE Local 1497. It was assumed that the policy would not be equitably administered by the various commanders; and that the effectuation of policy would be more consistent if suspensions were imposed at the Base Commander level (Tr. 102). It was assumed, without evidentiary basis, that organizational commanders would be much more strict in their imposition of sentences (Tr. 188). However, as noted this segment of the new seat belt enforcement policy was not implemented with respect to any bargaining unit employee because of the agreement to defer all enforcement actions until after completion of negotiations.

During negotiations on July 15, 1983, the Respondent introduced a proposed "Seat Belt Policy Implementation Guidance" reflecting nine counterproposals (G.C. Exh. No. 19, Tr. 137). These were submitted in response to those submitted jointly on behalf of the three Locals participating in negotiations. They may be summarized as follows:

1. The designation of parking areas on LAFB for suspended drivers.
2. Civilian employees found to be in violation of seat belt rules since June 15, 1983, will serve a 30 day suspension not earlier than August 15, 1983.[9]
3. Safety films will be available through the unit or union safety official.
4. If a passenger is found without a seat belt, the driver of the vehicle will receive a written warning for a first offense, and a 30 day suspension for any subsequent offense.

[8] The three Locals first became aware of the delegation of authority at the July 6, 1983 negotiating session.

[9] The Respondent sought agreement on this point from the three Locals participating in negotiations in order to apply the stricter sanction against all civilian employees found to be in violation after June 15, 1983. However, by design the Respondent never did proceed against bargaining unit employees, and did not otherwise enforce the new policy against bargaining unit employees until after September 26, 1983.

5. The appeal authority in case of suspension will be sufficiently removed from the employee to provide a fair and equitable review. Revocation/appeal authority has been established by letter dated July 1, 1983 addressed to all Lowry Technical Training Center units by Colonel Swain (G.C. Exh. No. 16).

6. For the first and each subsequent offense a 30 day suspension will be imposed.

7. Any person found driving on base while in a suspension status will be subject to appropriate administrative action by his/her supervisor.

8. Seat belt and shoulder harness restraint devices are to be worn when installed in the vehicle.

9. If for medical reasons, one should not wear a restraint device, the person should submit a medical waiver to his/her supervisor.

By memorandum dated July 25, 1983, addressed to the three Locals, Colonel Richard White, Deputy Base Commander explained Respondent's position in support of the nine counterproposals offered on July 15, 1983, and also explained Respondent's reasons for rejecting a number of the fifteen proposals previously submitted by the union Locals (G.C. Exh. No. 20). Colonel White's letter noted that the Respondent rejected union proposals numbered 3, 9, and 13 as an encroachment on management's right to discipline under Section 7106(a)(2)(A) of the Statute. Remaining proposals were either rejected, acceded to, or described as having been addressed in Respondent's nine counterproposals.

On July 22, 1983, Dr. Smith, submitted seventeen final counterproposals on behalf of NFFE and the two AFGE Locals (G.C. Exh. No. 21).[10] Representatives of the Respondent reviewed these, and on August 18, 1983, Colonel Roger K. Taylor, Base Commander[11] wrote to Ms. Coxson, President of NFFE Local 1497, to advise that union counterproposals numbered 1, 2, 3, 7, and 11 interfered with management rights. Remaining counterproposals were either rejected or adopted.

[10] The memorandum notes that the two AFGE Locals reserved the right to "add to and/or modify" the counterproposals submitted.

Counterproposals 1, 2 and 3 were rejected as an interference with management's right to take disciplinary action because they dealt with penalties associated with noncompliance and/or the imposition of responsibility for noncompliance. Union counterproposal 7, was described as being outside management's obligation to bargain because it was believed that the proposal would result in a violation of federal law. Union counterproposal 11 was rejected because it interfered with management's right to assign work.

In his August 18, 1983 letter, Colonel Taylor advised NFFE that further impact and implementation negotiations would be nonproductive, and that on August 22, 1983, he intended to implement proposals reflecting areas of agreement, together with any other proposals advanced by the Respondent on July 15, 1983.[12] In this context Colonel Taylor was referring to the Respondent's initial list of nine counterproposals.

Mediation Requested

As early as July 13, 1983, AFGE Local 2040 wrote to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (FMCS) for the purpose of alerting that agency to the possible need to assign a mediator to help resolve issues involved in the negotiations (G.C. Exh. No. 18). AFGE Local 1974 contacted the FMCS between August 8 and 18, 1983, for the same purpose, and on September 1, 1983, a representative of the Respondent sought the services of the FMCS. By mutual agreement of the parties the FMCS entered negotiations. Further intensive bargaining occurred on September 9, 12, and 15, 1983, under the guidance of Thurman M. Sanders, Commissioner, FMCS, Denver, Colorado.[13] Ms. Coxson served as the chief representative of NFFE during this phase of negotiations. Deriel S. Case, President of AFGE Local 1974 continued to represent AFGE Local 1974.

The record established that all issues were negotiated during the mediation phase (Tr. 145). During this phase the parties specifically negotiated concerning the possibility of reducing the penalties for not complying with the seat belt rule, but could not reach agreement.[14]

[12] The record at this point reflects a stated intent to implement on August 22, 1983. However, it was clear that no steps toward implementation were initiated on this date (Tr. 69).

[13] Following the July 15, 1983 bargaining session the parties did not commence actual negotiating meetings again until September 9, 1983.

During the final mediation session on September 15, 1983, the parties reached tentative agreement on a number of key issues, and initialed their respective copies of a proposed tentative agreement to indicate the specific issues resolved by the parties. The proposed tentative agreement reflecting the initials of union representatives participating in negotiations was subsequently transmitted to the participants in the negotiations (G.C. Exh. No. 23).[15] The proposed tentative agreement was not adopted by the parties because of the failure to adopt all elements of the document. However, the record shows that the parties negotiated thoroughly with respect to all subject areas mentioned in the tentative agreement proposed by the mediator (Tr. 71, 74, 143-144). Items agreed to by the Respondent reflect significant concessions in a number of instances. Out of a total of nine numbered paragraphs reflecting nine issues, the parties reached agreement on all paragraphs except the eighth which provided for a written warning for a first offence and a 30-day suspension for subsequent violations.[16] It was clear to the parties that the paragraphs agreed to reflected the Respondent's best offer relating to subjects covered threin (Tr. 198).

In addition to issues outlined in the proposed tentative agreement the record also reflects that during mediation the parties negotiated again concerning the question of retroactive enforcement of the new seat belt policy. That is, management proposed that the Respondent retroactively enforce the seat belt policy against all civilian employees found to be in violation after June 15, 1983 (Tr. 199). However, in addition to disagreement over penalties to be imposed, the parties were unable to reach agreement on the issue of retroactive enforcement (Tr. 144).

Thus, after agreeing in a number of areas on September 15, 1983, unresolved issues remained. The mediator declared that an impasse had been reached, and the parties agreed that this was indeed true (Tr. 77, [15] This exhibit reflects only the initials of officials representing the three union Locals. However, both the letter of transmittal prepared by the mediator, and the hearing transcript reflect that representatives of the Locals, and representatives of the Respondent reached agreement on paragraphs initialed. The apparent absence of initialing by a representative of the Respondent is explained by testimony to the effect that agreement on each paragraph was followed by the parties initialing paragraphs on their copies of the proposed tentative agreement (Tr. 142).

[16] The record copy of the tentative agreement considered by the parties reflects interlineations which may be disregarded as not a part of the exhibit (Tr. 77, 146-147).

183). According to Ms. Cosson's testimony, representatives of the three Locals were informed that they would have to go to the Federal Service Impasses Panel (Panel) for any further resolution of the matter (Tr. 77). Union negotiators did not then indicate whether they would pursue the matter before the Panel.

Respondent Implements New Seat Belt Policy

On September 20, 1983, five days after the final mediation session, the Respondent wrote to the three Locals to advise that on September 26, 1983, the Respondent intended to implement Respondent's last best offer concerning the new seat belt policy (G.C. Exh. No. 24). The letter was hand delivered to the three Locals on September 20th (Tr. 236). The eight areas of agreement in the tentative agreement were identified as a significant portion of the implementation intended. The Respondent also noted an intent to implement the 30 day penalty for first and subsequent offenses, except that passengers found in violation would be issued a warning for a first offense. The proposed policy also allowed for exceptions in cases wherein there was "acceptable justification" for a failure to wear seat belts. It was noted that as of September 26th, persons cited for seat belt infractions after June 15, 1983, would during the week of September 26th, be issued notification of suspension of driving privileges.

There was no reason to question evidence to the effect that the implementation proposed was in fact the Respondent's last best offer prior to reaching an impasse in negotiations. On September 26, 1983, the new POV seat belt policy was implemented so as to specifically apply to both military and civilian personnel (G.C. Exh. No. 25). Despite some seeming ambiguity, evidence adduced indicates that no bargaining unit members were ever suspended. By design, bargaining unit employees were not retroactively affected by implementation of the policy. The proposed policy was not implemented so as to affect bargaining unit employees until September 26th (Tr. 235, 251-252).[17]

[17] Counsel representing the General Counsel endeavored to show that the absence of bargaining unit employee suspensions was the result of chance rather than design. However, it appeared that only nonbargaining unit employees cited after June 15, 1983, were suspended after September 26th. By design bargaining unit employees were not affected until after September 26th.

However, despite the foregoing, the parties did, as previously noted, generally discuss and disagree on a proposal to apply the policy retroactively to all civilian employees found to be in violation of the seat belt rule after June 15, 1983.

On September 30, 1983, four days after implementation, Mr. Case, writing as the President of AFGE Local 1974, and as a representative of NFFE Local 1497, and AFGE Local 2040, wrote to the Panel for assistance (G.C. Exh. No. 26). The Respondent did not become aware of the request filed until October 4, 1983 (Tr. 236). The record clearly established that the parties bargained to impasse on issues implemented, and those raised before the Panel by the three Locals (Tr. 95-96, 182-184, 187-188).[18]

As of September 30th, the date of the request for Panel assistance, charges had been filed in each of the unfair labor practice cases referred to in the consolidated complaint. The complaint in Case No. 7-CA-30459 was also issued on September 30th (G.C. Exh. No. 1(g)). After September 30th the proceedings initiated followed their respective courses. The Panel proceeding was pending at the time of hearing and was of concern because of the then existing possibility of conflicting decisions and remedies.[19] However, on February 1, 1984, after the close of the hearing record, the Panel declined jurisdiction because of the pending unfair labor practice cases involved in this litigation. Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Colorado, and Locals 1974 and 2040, AFGE, and Local 1497, NFFE, Case No. 84 FSIP 1.

Following the hearing counsel representing the General Counsel moved to add the Panel decision to the hearing record, or alternatively, that official notice be taken of the Panel decision. Counsel representing the Respondent objected to the introduction of the Panel decision as a General Counsel Exhibit on the ground that the record was closed. However, official notice of the decision was not precluded, and the record indicates that it would be necessary to take official notice of any Panel action in order to avoid the possibility of conflicting decisions threatened by the fact that this matter was pending before the Panel at the time of hearing (Tr. 174-176). Accordingly, official notice is hereby taken of the Panel's February 1, 1984 decision.[20]

[18] At an early stage of negotiations, prior to mediation, the Respondent interposed assertions of nonnegotiability relating to certain issues. These assertions were abandoned during later negotiations, but were subsequently revived in replies to a Panel request for a statement of position (G.C. Exh. No. 28 and 29). However, despite early assertions of nonnegotiability the Respondent bargained in good faith on all issues prior to impasse. Also, the complaint was not based upon any assertion of non-negotiability interposed by the Respondent during negotiations which ensued prior to mediation. It is therefore unnecessary to consider Respondent's early assertions of nonnegotiability for the purpose of determining whether unfair labor practices were established.

[19] The practice of simultaneously seeking Panel assistance and a remedy in an unfair labor practice proceeding to resolve substantially the same issues was condemned by the Authority in Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 13 FLRA No. 95, 13 FLRA 571 (1984).

Discussion and Conclusions

Case No. 7-CA-30459

It is alleged in Case No. 7-CA-30459 that the Respondent implemented a 30 day suspension of driving privileges for failure to wear seat belts in POVs, and that such implementation was a violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The record shows that the three Locals were interested in participating in negotiations and requested bargaining concerning this issue; however, all three permitted the Respondent to opt in favor of post-implementation bargaining. The record adduced showed that bargaining "as requested" by NFFE Local 1497 commenced on June 21, 1983, six days after June 15, 1983, the implementation date selected by the Respondent. Ms. Coxson's June 14, 1983, bargaining request gave to the Respondent the option of commencing negotiations as late as June 21, 1983, and negotiations which did in fact begin on this date were described by Ms. Coxson as having commenced "as requested" by her in her June 14, 1983 letter. Furthermore, the two AFGE Locals participating in joint negotiations also submitted a bargaining request which clearly contemplated the prospect of post-implementation bargaining. Under these circumstances there would be no basis for concluding that implementation of the new seat belt policy on June 15, 1983, constituted an unfair labor practice within the purview of the Statute. That is, allegations in the consolidated complaint resting upon an alleged failure of the Respondent to meet bargaining obligations in the statute prior to the June 15, 1983 implementation date were not supported by the record. Instead, the evidence establishes a clear and unmistakable waiver of the right to bargain prior to June 15, 1983. Department of the Treasury, United States Customs Service, Region I, Boston, Massachusetts, and St. Albans, Vermont District Office, 10 FLRA No. 100, 10 FLRA 566 (1982).

[20] Although litigation of an unfair labor practice matter which goes to the heart of negotiations made the subject of Panel impasse procedures, has been condemned by the Authority, the fact remains that as of this date only this consolidated complaint is pending disposition. In view of this, and in light of the fact that other factors militate in favor of dismissal of the consolidated complaint, it is unnecessary to determine whether the simultaneous processing of this matter as both Panel and Authority proceedings would have given rise to any reason for dismissal.

In addition to the failure of proof outlined, the record shows that the imposition of the new and more severe penalty alleged in the consolidated complaint was not, on June 15, 1983, effectuated so as to affect NFFE Local 1497 bargaining unit employees, or bargaining unit members of other Locals. Instead, implementation of the policy with respect to bargaining unit employees was deferred. Introduction of the new policy, by agreement of the parties, was limited so as to exclude bargaining unit members. The Respondent did not administratively begin to apply the policy to bargaining unit members until September 26, 1983. The record shows that as a result of this method of proceeding no bargaining unit employee was suspended as a result of the application of the policy prior to September 26, 1983. This exemption was orally agreed to by the parties. These circumstances also reflect the absence of a rationale for an unfair labor practice based upon a June 15, 1983 imposition of a harsher penalty for violation of the seat belt rule.[21]

It is also alleged in Case No. 7-CA-30459, that the Respondent's July 1, 1983, delegation of authority to suspend driving privileges was a violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.[22] The record reflects that the July 1 change alleged was not effectuated so as to have any affect upon bargaining unit employees. As of this date the participants in negotiations were operating under an agreement whereby implementation of the seat belt policy would be deferred with respect to all bargaining unit members. The policy was not effectuated so as to embrace bargaining unit members until September 26, 1983. No evidentiary basis exists for a finding that the Respondent implemented the July 1, 1983 delegation of authority as alleged in Case No. 7-CA-30459. Further, consideration of implementation of the delegation of authority on September 26, 1983, is reflected in discussion relating to Case Nos. 7-CA-30543 and 7-CA-30584.

[21] The consolidated complaint indicates considerable uncertainty concerning the alleged date of implementation of the new seat belt rule. In Case No. 7-CA-30459, it is alleged that the Respondent implemented a new and harsher penalty on June 15, 1983; whereas in Case Nos. 7-CA-30543 and 7-CA-30584, it was alleged that such implementation commenced on September 26, 1983. As a result of the foregoing, it is clear that doubt concerning the date of implementation was built into the theory of the case. Discussion of the September 26, 1983 implementation follows herein in connection with consideration of Case Nos. 7-CA-30543 and 7-CA-30584.

[22] Duality in the prosecutive theory is also reflected by a comparison of this allegation with allegations set out in Case Nos. 7-CA-30543 and 7-CA-30584. In the latter cases it was alleged that implementation of the delegation of authority occurred on September 26, 1983.

In light of the foregoing it is unnecessary to determine whether or not the delegation of authority had an impact or a reasonably foreseeable impact upon employees within the meaning of U.S. Government Printing Office, 13 FLRA No. 39, 13 FLRA 203 (1983); and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Chicago Region, 15 FLRA No. 174, 15 FLRA 922 (1984).[23]

Conduct alleged as a basis for unfair labor practices in these two cases is substantially the same as that set out in Case No. 7-CA-30459. However, in these cases violations of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) would rest upon alleged unilateral implementation of the 30 day penalty and delegation of adjudicatory authority on September 26, 1983, rather than June 15, 1983 and July 1, 1983. Presumably, counsel for the General Counsel is contending that if the policies in question were not implemented on the earlier dates, they were implemented in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) on September 26, 1983.

With respect to NFFE Local 1497 and AFGE Local 1974 bargaining unit employees involved in these two cases, as well as other bargaining unit employees represented by AFGE Local 2040, it was established that as of September 26th, the Respondent had bargained to impasse on all issues relating to the September 26th implementation of seat belt policy.

The specific issues underlying these two cases were addressed in detail during negotiations held before and/or during the mediation phase. This is clear from an examination of documents generated during bargaining and from the testimony of witnesses.

[23] If an impact upon employees which is more than de minimus cannot reasonably be foreseen no bargaining obligation arises. Counsel representing the General Counsel argued that an adverse impact was foreseeable. It was noted that a greater number of individuals would be adjudicating cases involving violation of the seat belt rule. However, from this fact it would not be possible to conclude that bargaining unit employees would receive unfair or disparate treatment.

Similarly, it was contended that there would be an impairment of the exclusive representative's capacity to monitor the seat belt program, and to represent aggrieved employees. These assertions were speculative in nature. It cannot be presumed that this administrative change would have impeded efforts to monitor organizational commander adjudications, or that it would have interfered with the right of any exclusive representative to represent or assist bargaining unit employees. The mere assertion of these contentions by counsel representing the General Counsel, without more, would not demonstrate a factual basis for finding a foreseeable adverse impact as claimed.

The record establishes that prior to September 16th, all relevant issues were negotiated despite the existence of doubt concerning the Respondent's obligation to bargain concerning some of the proposals made by the three Locals.[24] The final bargaining session on September 15th, did not result in the adoption of the tentative agreement under discussion on that date, but it did nevertheless represent an extended session of good faith bargaining on issues reflected in the proposed tentative agreement, as well as other issues relating to the subject. On September 15th the negotiators recognized that an impasse had been reached, and the Charging Parties in these two cases were apprised of their right to seek Panel assistance by the mediator.

On September 20th the Respondent advised union Locals that Respondent's last best offer would be implemented on September 26th. The record reflects a basis for finding that the policies actually implemented on this date were in fact Respondent's last best offer. The Locals did not seek Panel assistance during the period intervening between September 20th and September 26th. Instead, the request for Panel assistance was not submitted until September 30, 1983, or four days after the Respondent made the new seat belt policies applicable to bargaining unit members. Since the Locals herein had a reasonable opportunity to invoke the services of the Panel after the parties reached impasse in their negotiations on September 15th, and after receiving Respondent's September 20th notice of intent to implement its last proposals on September 26th; and since there was a failure to request the services of the Panel prior to the announced date scheduled for implementation, it must be concluded that the Respondent did not act unlawfully when the new policies were implemented on September 26th. U.S. Air Force, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5 FLRA No. 39, 5 FLRA 288 (1981); U.S. Customs Service, 16 FLRA No. 31, 16 FLRA 198, (1984); Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 16 FLRA No. 32, 16 FLRA 217 (1984).

As a result of the conclusions outlined, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order pursuant to 5 C.F.R. § 2423.29.

[24] This circumstance makes it unnecessary to determine the nature of the Respondent's bargaining obligation with respect to particular proposals raised by the Locals. Moreover, as previously noted, the complaint does not allege unfair labor practices based upon Respondent's interposing allegations of nonnegotiability.

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED, that the consolidated complaint in Case Nos. 7-CA-30459, 7-CA-30584, and 7-CA-30543, be, and hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Howard M. Golob filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The parties submitted to arbitration the issue of whether the suspension of the grievant for 10 workdays was for just cause. The arbitrator determined that the Activity failed to comply with a specific requirement of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by failing to place all records relied on for the suspension in the grievant's personnel file. For that reason he determined that the suspension was not for just cause. The arbitrator directed the suspension be rescinded and the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the suspension.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to 5 U.S.C. § 7503(a).[1] Specifically, the Agency argues that the award is deficient because the arbitrator failed to make the finding, alleged by the Agency to be required by section 7503, that the violation of the agreement constituted "harmful error" and because the arbitrator applied a standard of "just cause" rather than the statutory standard of section 7503(a) of "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service."

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception provides no basis for finding the award deficient under the Statute. Contrary to the argument of the Agency, the harmful-error rule as it pertains to disciplinary actions applies only to the more serious adverse actions enumerated in section 7512[2] that are taken under section 7513; the rule does not apply to the actions enumerated in section 7502 that are taken under section 7503. See 5 U.S.C. §§ 7701(a), (c)(2)(A), 7121(e)(2); National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 17 FLRA 1058 (1985). Thus, the arbitrator was not required by section 7503(a) to find that the violation of the parties' agreement by the Activity constituted harmful error, and his failure to do so accordingly provides no basis for finding the award contrary to law as alleged by the Agency.

[1] Section 7503(a) pertinently provides:

> Under regulations prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management, an employee may be suspended for 14 days or less for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service . . . .

[2] 5 U.S.C. § 7512 applies to a removal, a suspension for more than 14 days, a reduction-in-grade, a reduction-in-pay, and a furlough of 30 days or less.

We turn next to the Agency's contention that the award is contrary to section 7503(a) because the arbitrator applied a standard of "just cause" rather than the statutory standard of "such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service" in reaching his decision on this grievance. At the outset it should be noted that section 7503(a) and section 7513 prescribe that a disciplinary or adverse action may be taken "only for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service." Further, an implementing regulation provides that an agency may only suspend an employee for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service. 5 C.F.R. § 752.202(a) (1985). The parties in this case had negotiated a provision in their collective bargaining agreement that provided:

> Article 23
> Disciplinary and Adverse Actions
> Section 1 - Statement of Purpose and Policy
> The parties agree that the objective of discipline is to correct and improve employee behavior so as to promote the efficiency of the service. The parties agree to the concept of progressive discipline designed primarily to correct and improve employees. Bargaining unit employees will be subject of disciplinary or adverse action only for just cause.

Moreover, the arbitrator stated that the "parties agree that the following questions, as proposed by the [arbitrator] are to be answered:

> Was the suspension of John Murphy on June 4 through June 15, 1984 for just cause? If not, what shall the remedy be?

The question for our determination is whether the arbitrator's application of the negotiated standard of "just cause" in the circumstances of this case was contrary to the statutory and regulatory requirement that an agency may only suspend an employee for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service.

The Agency argues that because the arbitrator applied the "just cause" standard to which the Agency had previously agreed, both in its collective bargaining agreement and in the issue submitted to arbitration, the award is fatally flawed and must be set aside. The Agency contends that the award is so flawed because the arbitrator may not set aside the suspension absent a specific finding that it "did not promote the efficiency of the service."

We reject this argument. When the parties agreed to Article 23, Section 1, they incorporated the language of the statutory standard into their agreement. The phrase "just cause" which also appears in that same provision, and as interpreted and applied by the arbitrator herein, constituted the parties' capsulation of that statutory standard. Thus, the Authority concludes that when the arbitrator expressly found a violation of a mandatory procedural requirement of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by the Activity in arriving at its decision to suspend the grievant, and as a result, rescinded the suspension as not for just cause, this effectively constituted an affirmative finding by the arbitrator that the grievant's suspension was not for such cause as will promote the efficiency of the service.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception the Agency contends that the award of backpay to the grievant is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. Specifically, the Agency argues that there is no clear and unambiguous finding by the arbitrator that the unjustified or unwarranted personnel action by the Activity of violating the provision of the collective bargaining agreement relating to records in the grievant's personnel file directly resulted in the grievant's loss of pay, allowances, or differentials. Thus, the Agency argues that the backpay is not authorized because it is not established, as required by the Back Pay Act, that but for the violation of the agreement, the grievant would not have been suspended.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority concludes that this exception fails to establish that the award is deficient, as alleged. With respect to the Back Pay Act, the Authority has uniformly stated that in order for an award of backpay to be authorized by the Act, the arbitrator must find that an agency personnel action with respect to the grievant was unjustified or unwarranted, that such unjustified or unwarranted personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials, and that but for such action, the grievant otherwise would not have suffered such withdrawal or reduction of pay, allowances, or differentials. E.g., U.S. Army Aberdeen Proving Ground and Local 2424, International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers, AFL-CIO, 19 FLRA No. 35 (1985). However, because the Agency has misapprehended the personnel action in dispute, no basis is provided for finding the award contrary to the Back Pay Act. The issue submitted to arbitration was whether the suspension of the grievant was for just cause as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. As his award, the arbitrator expressly determined that the suspension was not for just cause, expressly ordered the suspension rescinded, and expressly directed that the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the suspension. Thus, the personnel action in dispute as pertaining to the arbitrator's award of backpay was the Activity's suspension of the grievant for 10 workdays. With the arbitrator expressly determining that the suspension was not for just cause as required by the agreement, the personnel action of the grievant's suspension was rendered an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action within the meaning of the Back Pay Act. See Robinson v. Department of the Army, MSPB Docket No. SF07528310135 (June 12, 1984). With the arbitrator directing that the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the unwarranted suspension, this effectively constitutes the finding, required by the Back Pay Act and the decisions of the Authority, that but for the unwarranted suspension, the grievant would not have suffered a withdrawal or reduction of his pay allowances, or differentials. National Labor Relations Board Union, Local 19 and Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 7 FLRA 21, 26 (1981).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for these reasons, the Agency's exceptions are denied.

because the Agency has not provided [illegible] for finding the award conflicts with the Back Pay Act. The issue submitted to arbitration was whether the suspension of the grievant was for just cause as required by the parties' collective bargaining agreement. In his award, the arbitrator expressly determined that the suspension was not for just cause, expressly ordered the suspension rescinded, and expressly directed that the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the suspension. Thus, the personnel action in dispute [illegible] was the suspension of the grievant for 10 workdays. With the arbitrator expressly determining that the suspension was not for just cause as required by the agreement, the personnel action of the grievant's suspension was rendered an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action within the meaning of the Back Pay Act. See Sonners v. Department of the Army, MSPB Docket No. SF07528310135 [illegible] (1984). With the arbitrator directing that the grievant be reimbursed for all losses caused by the unwarranted suspension, [illegible] required by the Back Pay Act and the decisions of the Authority. [illegible] unwarranted suspension, the grievant would not have suffered a withdrawal or reduction of his pay, allowances, or differentials. [illegible] National Labor Relations Board, [illegible]

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Julius J. Manson filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.*/

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority has jurisdiction to review in an unfair labor practice proceeding the alleged noncompliance with an arbitration award involving a § 7121(f) subject matter (termination, for example) where it would not have jurisdiction under § 7122 to review the substance of the award. The statutory limitations on review of awards relating to § 7121(f) only extend to substantive review of such awards; when an arbitration award is final, the Authority may review compliance with the award without reference to the substance of the award.

Having resolved the threshold jurisdictional issue, the Authority found that the activity's refusal to comply with a final arbitration award interfered with, restrained and coerced bargaining unit employees in the exercise of their rights established under the Statute, in violation of § 7116(a)(1). The arbitrator had set aside the termination of the union president by the activity for striking a supervisor. The arbitrator also refused to respond to the activity's request for a clarification of the award and to consider what lesser penalty other than removal, if any, should be imposed on the grievant. Since this matter comes under the provisions of § 7121(f), agencies adversely affected or aggrieved by the arbitrator's award are not entitled to obtain judicial review. However, 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d) provides that the Director of the Office of Personnel Management may seek to obtain review. But the Director of OPM did not file a timely appeal for judicial review of the arbitrator's award and it became final and binding. Nevertheless, the activity suspended the union president for 60 days for the conduct that had originally led to his termination.

The union misfiled its exceptions with a regional office of the Authority rather than filing the exceptions with the Authority's national office. Also, contrary to the union's position, the period for filing exceptions to the arbitrator's award began on the date it was served on the filing party, that is, deposited in the mail (see § 2429.27(d) of the Authority's rules and regulations), and not on the date the award was received by that party.

Union Statement re Discrimination b/t Members vs Nonmembers re Attorney Assistance in MSPB Appeals
Otherwise Refuse to Comply
§ 7114(a)(1)

DIGEST NOTES

A statement that attorney assistance for unit employees filing and/or pursuing appeals to MSPB would only be provided to members of the union violates § 7116(b)(1). The statement was made by the local union, with the assistance of the national union, in a bulletin published on the national union's letterhead and then posted. The bulletin was issued in order to publicize the unions' efforts to dissuade management's plan to separate certain unit employees. No unit employee was later subjected to a RIF pursuant to management's program; while the national union gave advice to unit employees, they were not asked whether they were union members.

The Authority found that the statement in the bulletin, in all circumstances, created the impression that nonmember unit employees seeking union assistance would not be afforded the same standard of representation as members. Therefore, because the clear implication that nonmember unit employees would not receive the same level of assistance or standard of representation from the union as members reasonably tended to interfere with the protected right of employees under § 7102 to refrain from joining a labor organization, the Authority concluded, in agreement with the Judge, that the union violated the Statute. However, the Authority, contrary to the Judge, concluded that by posting the above statement the national union did not fail to comply with the requirements of § 7114(a)(1) to represent the interests of all unit employees without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership, and thus did not violate § 7116(a)(8). In this regard, the Authority noted that the General Counsel did not assert--and the record did not establish--that the national union implemented a policy of discrimination subsequent to the posting of the bulletin, or that nonmember unit employees were ever denied the assistance of an attorney in connection with MSPB appeals. On the contrary, the record shows that any unit employee who requested advice or assistance was provided with such assistance without regard to membership in the union, although no unit employee subsequently filed an appeal with MSPB.

The Authority also adopted the Judge's finding that since the local union was acting only in a ministerial capacity, a separate violation can not be found.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal that would give employees of the Federal school system in Puerto Rico access to retail, recreational and medical facilities during non-duty hours does not relate to the work situation or employment relationship of bargaining unit employees. For a proposal to be negotiable, it must relate to "conditions of employment" as defined in § 7103(a)(14). Basic factors involving "conditions of employment" are the proposal's relevance to bargaining unit employees and the proposal's effect on working conditions of those employees. Since there is not a direct connection between the proposal and the employees' work situation or employment relationship, the proposal does not concern working conditions of bargaining unit employees and, therefore, is outside the duty to bargain.

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

An agency may not foreclose bargaining on an otherwise negotiable matter by delegating authority as to that matter only to an organizational level within the agency different from the organizational level of recognition. Rather, under § 7114(b)(2), an agency is obligated to provide representatives who are empowered to negotiate and enter into agreement on all matters within the statutorily prescribed scope of negotiations.

It is inappropriate for the Authority to pass on the compelling need of a proposal where the parties did not address the issue of the apparent consistency between DOD Directive 1400.6 and the proposal, where the agency alleged that the DOD Directive (an outside authority within the meaning of the Authority's rules and regulations) required the agency's regulation barring negotiations on the proposal.

A proposal that would permit employees of the Federal school system in Puerto Rico to patronize on-post retail liquor stores is not inconsistent with Puerto Rico Laws [see Puerto Rico Laws Annotated tit. 13 § 6019 (1976)]. (part D of proposal)

A proposal that would permit employees of the Federal school system in Puerto Rico to use the local Navy hospital on a paid basis is inconsistent with 24 U.S.C. §§ 34 and 35. (part E of proposal)

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that an agency did not breach its duty imposed under § 7114(b)(5) when it failed or refused to execute an agreement regarding alternative work schedules (AWS) that had been negotiated with the union for bargaining unit employees in two work sections, the Data Services Staff (DSS) and Automated Collection Systems Branch (ACS).

Under § 7114(b)(5) an obligation is imposed upon an agency to execute an agreement reached with the exclusive representative. The statutory language of that section makes it clear that an imposition is placed upon a party to sign a document provided that an agreement is reached after negotiations thereon.

While a proposed agreement regarding AWS for the DSS section was drafted by the union stemming from the prior negotiations and submitted to management, management had continued to express doubts regarding the adaptability of AWS for the computer operators within that section. The Judge determined that the sentiment that all "seemed to be okay" expressed by management to the union concerning the status of the agreement, at most, indicated that there was a misunderstanding between the parties. The Judge found further that apart from the fact that the proposed terms were not initialed, the parties had not signified to each other that the dispute regarding the computer operators had been resolved. The Judge concluded, therefore, that no final agreement had been reached regarding AWS for the DSS unit and, thus, the agency's refusal or failure to sign an agreement thereon was not violative of § 7116(a)(1) and (5).

In respect to the General Counsel's allegation that the agency was required to execute an agreement reached between the parties concerning AWS for the ACS section, management had stated at various bargaining sessions with the union that AWS for that unit would be part and parcel of an agreement embracing other conditions of employment concerning the ACS section. During these negotiations, the parties resolved all issues except three which were never resolved. Although a document, based upon mutually agreed-upon terms concerning AWS for the ACS section, was drafted and submitted by management to the union, management had indicated that there would be no separate agreement made regarding AWS for that section, but, rather, as previously noted, one completed agreement covering all the terms and conditions for the unit. In these circumstances, the Judge concluded the agency did not breach the duty imposed upon it under § 7114(b)(5) by failing or refusing to sign the agreement embodying AWS for the ACS unit.

The Judge rejected the agency's contention that the charge, upon which the complaint is based, was filed more than six months after March, 1984, the date that the alleged violation took place. The Judge found that the significant date for filing the charge herein was March 20, 1985, the date that the agency refused to execute the AWS agreement for ACS. Since the charge was filed within one month thereafter, it was timely filed under § 7118(a)(4)(A).

DIGEST NOTES

The agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) when it unilaterally discontinued all payments for travel and per diem expenses. Both the parties' prior agreement which continued in effect pending negotiations of a new agreement and a memorandum of understanding between the parties provided for payment of travel and per diem expenses on official time. However, the agreement provided "[i]n the event the FLRA or a court modifies the existing law, this Article will be reopened upon the request of either party regarding the employees['] entitlement to travel, per diem and other benefits." Following the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), in which the Court found that § 7131 does not entitle employees on official time to the payment of travel and per diem expenses, the agency unilaterally discontinued such payments without requesting to reopen contract negotiations as required by the parties' agreement.

Subsequent to the Supreme Court's decisions, the Authority found that authorization of payment for travel and per diem expenses to be within the duty to bargain. Agencies have discretion under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5701 et seq., and implementing regulations, to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. Further, that determination would have to be made on a case-by-case basis. Thus, when the agency unilaterally terminated payment of travel and per diem expenses, it rejected the parties' agreement and violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5).

A nationwide posting of the remedial notice is appropriate for a § 7116(a)(1) and (5) violation where the agency unilaterally terminated payment of travel and per diem expenses for employees on official time. The union represents two nationwide units of agency employees, professional and nonprofessional, and therefore the agency's conduct in unilaterally repudiating provisions in the agreements covering the employees in those units can be effectively remedied only by an order which requires the posting of the remedial notices wherever the affected employees in such units are situated.

DIGEST NOTES

The agency did not violate § 7122(b), § 7116(a)(1) and (8) by taking more than a year to comply with an arbitration award in which compliance involved unusual, difficult and complex circumstances. The Authority noted particularly the Judge's findings, with which it agreed, that the agency fully complied with the arbitrator's award and did not engage in any dilatory tactics in implementing the award. The arbitration award was bifurcated, with the initial award coming five months before the final award. In the preliminary award, the grievant was found not to have been performing her job adequately at the time of her termination; but she was ordered reinstated without backpay whereas the final award included backpay. The agency promptly complied with the only portion of the arbitration award with a clear time frame -- receiving pay at the grievant's GS-7 rate beginning the Monday following the receipt of the preliminary opinion and award. The agency accomplished this by giving the grievant a temporary appointment, which was the most expeditious method available to comply with the award. The rest of the award concerned the restoration of pay and perquisites, with no indication of a time frame within which the agency was to act. Following reinstatement of the grievant, the agency had to resolve indisputably difficult, complex matters of restoring all perquisites and back pay over a period of several years, some of which involved a temporary appointment and leave without pay status.

The Authority has jurisdiction to order compliance with an arbitrator's final award in an unfair labor practice proceeding although the arbitrator's award may involve a matter under 5 U.S.C. § 4303 for which judicial review, if sought, would be governed by the provisions of § 7121(f). (footnote *)

Case No. 7-CA-40064

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT
EMPLOYEES, AFL-CIO, LOCAL 2761

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. The General Counsel filed a brief for the Authority's consideration.

The complaint alleges that the Respondent, the United States Army, Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing to comply with an arbitration award which resolved a grievance filed under the terms of the negotiated grievance procedure between the Respondent and the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 (the Union). The arbitrator's award dealt with the termination of the Union president. This case raises a question which has not been addressed previously by the Authority--whether the Authority has jurisdiction to review in an unfair labor practice proceeding the alleged noncompliance with an arbitration award involving a section 7121(f) subject matter (a termination), where it would not have jurisdiction under section 7122 of the Statute to review the substance of the award.

II. Facts

A grievance over the termination of Union president Dominic J. Licavoli by the Respondent for striking a supervisor was filed pursuant to the parties' negotiated grievance procedure and the matter was eventually submitted to arbitration. On August 5, 1983, Arbitrator Peter J. Maniscalco issued his decision and award setting aside Licavoli's termination on the ground that he had been provoked. On August 25, 1983, the Respondent sent the Arbitrator a letter requesting that he clarify his award. Specifically, the Respondent asked the Arbitrator to "reconsider your arbitration decision and modify your decision to consider what lesser penalty other than removal, if any, should be imposed upon the grievant." The Arbitrator responded in a letter dated August 30, 1983, in which he explained that he ". . . did consider the possibility of mitigation but I did not grant that, due to the fact that I felt this was a case where provocation was present and therefore, to have imposed any penalty would have been unjust." Notwithstanding the above, on October 17, 1983, the Respondent informed Licavoli that he was to be suspended for 60 days for the conduct that had originally led to his termination.

III. Positions of the Parties[1]

The General Counsel argues that the Respondent failed to comply with the Arbitrator's award when it informed Licavoli that he would be suspended for 60 days despite the Arbitrator's decision rejecting the imposition of any disciplinary action. Further, citing Authority precedent, the General Counsel argues that the Authority has jurisdiction to review an agency's noncompliance with an arbitrator's award involving an adverse action under 5 U.S.C. § 7512 when, as here, the agency has refused to comply with that award and has not sought to appeal it through the appropriate statutory procedures.

IV. Analysis

A. Statutory scheme for review under section 7122(a)

Under section 7122(a) of the Statute, either party to arbitration may file exceptions with the Authority to an arbitrator's award other than an award relating to a matter described in section 7121(f).[2] If a party fails or refuses to comply with an arbitrator's award following the Authority's denial of exceptions filed under section 7122(a), or if no timely exceptions to such award are filed but either party thereafter fails or refuses to comply with the award, the Authority will find that such conduct constituted an unfair labor practice. In such cases, the Authority has found that the party is failing to comply with the provisions of section 7122(b)[3] in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[4/] Department of Health and Human Services, Region II, 15 FLRA 710 (1984); United States Marshals Service, 13 FLRA 351 (1983), enforced sub nom. In matters similar to those covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which arise under other personnel systems and which an aggrieved employee has raised under the negotiated grievance procedure, judicial review of an arbitrator's award may be obtained in the same manner and on the same basis as could be obtained of a final decision in such matters raised under applicable appellate procedures.

[3] Section 7122(b) provides:

> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the date the award is served on the party, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of backpay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).

B. Statutory scheme for review under section 7121(f)

Where the arbitrator's award involves a matter covered by section 7121(f), such as a termination, the Respondent is precluded by section 7122(a) of the Statute from filing exceptions to the award with the Authority.[5/] Under section 7121(e) of the Statute,[6] matters involving adverse actions pursuant to section 7512 of title 5 of the United States Code may be raised under the appellate procedures of the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) or under the parties' negotiated grievance procedure if such matters have not been excluded. Where, as here, the latter avenue is pursued and the matter eventually goes to arbitration, the arbitrator is to be governed by section 7701(c)(1) of title 5, United States Code, pertaining to the appellate procedures of MSPB. In addition, section 7121(f) of the Statute states that section 7703, which deals with judicial review of final MSPB decisions, also applies to arbitration awards pertaining to matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512. The courts have accepted review of an arbitrator's decision under section 7121(f).[7] Thus, it appears clear that matters covered by sections 7512 and 4303 were set off from other arbitration issues to assure conformity between arbitrators and the MSPB. In the House-Senate Conference Report No. 95-1717, October 5, 1978, the Conferees adopted the Senate's bill requiring arbitrators to "follow the same rules governing burden of proof and standard of proof that govern adverse actions before the Board . . . in order to promote consistency in the resolution of these issues, and to avoid forum shopping."[8]

[6] Section 7121(e)(1) and (2) of the Statute provides:

> § 7121. Grievance procedures
> (e)(1) Matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which also fall within the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures of section 7701 of this title or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. Similar matters which arise under other personnel systems applicable to employees covered by this chapter may, in the discretion of the aggrieved employee, be raised either under the appellate procedures, if any, applicable to those matters, or under the negotiated grievance procedure, but not both. An employee shall be deemed to have exercised his option under this subsection to raise a matter either under the applicable appellate procedures or under the negotiated grievance procedure at such time as the employee timely files a notice of appeal under the applicable appellate procedures or timely files a grievance in writing in accordance with the provisions of the parties' negotiated grievance procedure, whichever event occurs first.
> (2) In matters covered under sections 4303 and 7512 of this title which have been raised under the negotiated grievance procedure in accordance with this section, an arbitrator shall be governed by section 7701(c)(1) of this title, as applicable.

Pursuant to this framework for judicial review set forth in section 7121(f) and section 7703, agencies adversely affected or aggrieved by the arbitrator's award in these matters are not entitled to obtain judicial review. However, section 7703(d) provides that the Director of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) may seek to obtain review "if the Director determines, in his discretion, that the Board [or arbitrator] erred in interpreting a civil service law, rule, or regulation affecting personnel management and that the Board's [or arbitrator's] decision will have a substantial impact on a civil service law, rule, regulation, or policy directive." Where OPM seeks review, the granting of the petition is at the discretion of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.[9] In the instant case, only the Director of OPM and not the Respondent, as the employing agency, was entitled to seek judicial review. The courts have held "that the Director of the OPM loses his right to appeal final orders or decisions of the MSPB and arbitrators unless he files a petition for review within thirty days of the time he is put on notice of those decisions." Devine v. White, 697 F.2d 421, 430 (D.C. Cir. 1983). Since such a petition for review was not filed within the statutory time limit in this case (section 7703(b)(1)), the award must be considered final and binding and the only remaining issue here is whether the Authority has jurisdiction over matters of compliance with the award.

C. Compliance

As previously noted by the Authority, Congress has established a mechanism for challenging the propriety of arbitration awards covered by section 7122(a) of the Statute. In applying section 7122(b), where no exceptions have been filed, the Authority has held that it will not review the substance of the arbitrator's award in the unfair labor practice proceeding, but will find that noncompliance with the award is a violation. See Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, and United States Marshals Service, cited previously. If, under section 7122(b), a party fails to file exceptions during the 30 day period following the award, such award becomes final and binding and the Authority will not review the merits of the award in a subsequent unfair labor practice proceeding. The Authority stated that to allow for such a review would circumvent Congressional intent with respect to statutory review procedures and the finality of arbitration awards. See also Department of Defense, Department of the Navy, United States Marine Corps, United States Marine Corps Air Station, Cherry Point, North Carolina, 15 FLRA 686 (1984).

While it is clear that the Authority does not have jurisdiction to review exceptions to an arbitrator's award falling within section 7121(f) of the Statute, the question of jurisdiction over matters of compliance with such an award in an unfair labor practice proceeding has not been previously addressed by the Authority. However, like the Authority's decisions under section 7122(b) of the Statute, it seems clear that a final and binding arbitration award in an employee's favor relating to any of the matters covered by section 4303 or section 7512 could be enforced through the unfair labor practice procedures of the Statute without reference to the merits of the award. In the Authority's view, once such an award has become final and binding, regardless of the subject matter, the Authority's review concerning matters of compliance in an unfair labor practice proceeding without reference to the substance of the award does not conflict with Congressional intent or the specific statutory procedures for review as to the merits of the award. The Authority notes that there is no indication in the Statute or its legislative history that awards which involve section 7121(f) matters, once they have become final, are any less binding than awards under section 7122(b) which are reviewable by the Authority. Indeed, the Conferees supported the finality of arbitration awards. In this regard, as stated by the Committee on Conference in its Report which accompanied the bill ultimately enacted and signed into law:[10]

> The House provides that if no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed with the Authority, the award "shall be final and binding" (section 7122(b)). The Senate contained no comparable provision. The conferees adopted the House provision. The intent of the House in adopting this provision was to make it clear that the awards of arbitrators, _when they become final_, are not subject to further review by any other authority or administrative body, including the Comptroller General. [Emphasis added.]

Moreover, even though the first sentence of section 7122(b) refers to a failure to file an exception under subsection (a) which subsection specifically excludes section 7121(f) matters, there is no indication given the statutory scheme that the second sentence, "[a]n agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award," should not appropriately apply also to those awards that become final by reference to other law such as 5 U.S.C. § 7703(d). In other words, once an award becomes final and binding, any substantive differences or differences in review forum become meaningless.

Thus, in the Authority's view, the statutory limitations on review of awards relating to section 7121(f) only extend to substantive review of such awards and, where an arbitration award is final, Authority review of compliance with the award without reference to the substance of the award does not conflict with the concerns expressly stated by Congress. Therefore, the Authority finds, in the circumstances of this case, that inasmuch as the award in question became final and binding when no timely appeal was filed by the Director of OPM under section 7703(d) of title

5, United States Code, and review of compliance would not involve a determination concerning the merits of the award, the Authority has jurisdiction to order compliance with the arbitrator's award in this unfair labor practice proceeding.

Having resolved the threshold jurisdictional issue, the Authority further finds that the Respondent's refusal to comply with Arbitrator Maniscalco's award dated August 5, 1983, interferes with, restrains and coerces bargaining unit employees in the exercise of their rights established under the Statute, in violation of section 7116(a)(1).[11] In this regard, the Authority notes that it is well established that an employee's right to file and process grievances under a collective bargaining agreement is protected activity within the meaning of section 7102 of the Statute,[12] and that management's actions which tend to interfere with or restrain the exercise of such rights constitutes unlawful interference in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 18 FLRA No. 33 (1985); Internal Revenue Service and Brooklyn District Office, 6 FLRA 642 (1981); United States Department of Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Chicago, Illinois, 3 FLRA 724 (1980). Thus, an agency's failure to comply with an arbitrator's award would, in effect, prevent an employee from exercising such protected activity and constitute an unlawful interference with an employee's right to pursue a grievance in violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

[11] The General Counsel failed to allege a section 7116(a)(8) violation in the complaint, and therefore we do not decide whether the Respondent also committed such a violation. Further, in view of the above conclusion, the Authority finds it unnecessary to pass upon whether the Respondent also violated section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute.

[12] Section 7102 provides in pertinent part:

> § 7102. Employees' rights
> Each employee shall have the right to form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from any such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of such right.

V. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all of the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties, and concludes as noted above that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by refusing to comply with Arbitrator Maniscalco's award dated August 5, 1983.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the United States Army, Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to fully implement Arbitrator Peter J. Maniscalco's arbitration award rendered on August 5, 1983 by imposing a 60 day suspension on Dominic J. Licavoli for the conduct that the Arbitrator found was provoked and for which no penalty should have been imposed.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Fully comply with Arbitrator Peter J. Maniscalco's August 5, 1983 arbitration award by revoking the 60 day suspension leveled against Dominic J. Licavoli for the conduct that the Arbitrator found was provoked and for which no penalty should have been imposed.

(b) Post at its facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander of the United States Army Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 23, 1986.

FEDERAL SERVICE LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS

WE HEREBY NOTIFY OUR EMPLOYEES THAT:

WE WILL NOT fail and refuse to fully implement Arbitrator Peter J. Maniscalco's August 5, 1983 arbitration award by imposing a 60 day suspension on Dominic J. Licavoli for the conduct that the Arbitrator found was provoked and for which no penalty should have been imposed.

WE WILL NOT in any like or related manner interfere with, restrain, or coerce our employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

WE WILL fully comply with Arbitrator Peter J. Maniscalco's August 5, 1983 arbitration award by revoking the 60 day suspension leveled against Dominic J. Licavoli for the conduct that the Arbitrator found was provoked and for which no penalty should have been imposed.

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Michael H. Beck filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reason stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award, statement of fees and expenses, and cover letter are dated April 9, 1986, and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, appear to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

Under section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,1/ and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,2/ which amendments are applicable to exceptions pending or filed with the Authority on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority not later than the close of business on May 13, 1986. However, the Union misfiled its exceptions with the Authority's San Francisco Regional Office on May 13, 1986. Although forwarded by the Regional Office that same day, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office in Washington, D.C., until May 19, 1986.

1/ Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

On its copy of the Arbitrator's award, the Union highlighted that it did not receive the award until April 22, 1986. Nevertheless, as the period for filing exceptions to the Arbitrator's award began on the date it was served on the filing party, that is, deposited in the mail (see section 2429.27(d) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations), and not on the date the award was received by that party, the Union's exceptions were untimely filed.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 23, 1986.

NATIONAL TREASURY EMPLOYEES UNION AND NTEU CHAPTER 229

and

Case No. 3-CO-40029

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, HEADQUARTERS

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached decision of the Administrative Law Judge filed by the Respondent. The complaint alleged that the Respondent, National Treasury Employees Union (NTEU) and NTEU Chapter 229 violated section 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), by failing to comply with section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute. The alleged violation is that NTEU promulgated a policy to provide attorneys to represent employees in appeals before the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) based on whether or not such employees were Union members. The complaint also alleged that the Respondent violated these same sections of the Statute when it disseminated a newsletter entitled "RIF Bulletin #3" in which it stated that attorney assistance for unit employees filing and/or pursuing appeals to the MSPB would only be provided to members of the Respondent. The issue before the Authority is whether the Judge properly found that Respondent NTEU violated section 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

II. Facts

During the period between June 1983, when NTEU was chosen to replace the incumbent exclusive representative by certain nonprofessional employees of the Charging Party, Department of Health and Human Services, Office of the Secretary, Headquarters (HHS), and June 1984, when NTEU was certified, HHS developed a plan regarding the Office of the Secretary which would have required a RIF affecting certain unit employees. Before NTEU was certified as the exclusive representative, it began to respond to management's proposal in several ways in order to try to dissuade HHS from separating employees. In order to publicize these efforts and get more employee support, NTEU Chapter 229, with the help and advice of NTEU's Assistant Counsel, issued a series of special bulletins which provided information on how employees could prepare for and oppose the impending RIF. Bulletins one, two, and four were published on the letterhead of the local chapter, while RIF Bulletin #3, the bulletin at issue, was published on NTEU letterhead. Bulletins one and two were issued prior to NTEU's certification, while three and four were issued after certification. Prior to the issuance of RIF Bulletin #3, NTEU's Assistant Counsel learned that a member was not aware that the Union was available to handle Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) appeals. Therefore, during her review of the bulletin, the Assistant Counsel added the following paragraph at the end of the bulletin, and under the heading, "If A RIF Occurs":

> The attorney assigned to NTEU Chapter 229 will be available to provide legal advice and/or assistance in filing and/or pursuing MSPB appeals to members of NTEU Chapter 229. There is no extra fee for such assistance. Your union dues will cover such legal assistance. (Emphasis in original.)

No unit employee was later subjected to a RIF pursuant to HHS' streamlining program; while NTEU gave advice to unit employees, they were not asked whether they were NTEU members. During the hearing, counsel for the General Counsel clarified his position by stating that the allegations contained in the complaint related only to the publication and dissemination of RIF Bulletin #3, and that he was not now alleging that Respondent implemented the policy.

In a sworn statement filed after the hearing, upon the agreement of the parties, the President of NTEU stated that it was NTEU's position that it is not required by law to provide representation to any employee who appeals an action to the MSPB; that NTEU may, at its option, provide representation to some employees before the MSPB; and that NTEU may decide whether or not an employee will be represented based upon membership status with NTEU as well as other factors. This statement is set forth fully on page 6 of the Judge's Decision.

III. The Judge's Decision

The Judge found that Respondent NTEU violated section 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute by publishing a statement which continued a policy of considering union membership as a factor in determining whether to furnish an attorney to unit employees in appeals before the MSPB.[1] In this regard the Judge found that NTEU's current policy is the same as that announced by NTEU's former president in September 1979 to the effect that NTEU would continue a policy, in effect before enactment of the Statute, of not furnishing attorneys to represent nonmembers while furnishing attorneys to represent members. The Judge concluded that it did not matter that the statement of policy in RIF Bulletin #3 had not been implemented, since the Authority will find a violation when the statement reflects an established policy of discrimination.

IV. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions to the Judge's Decision, NTEU argued, essentially, that the statement contained in RIF Bulletin #3 did not constitute a policy statement of the national union; that implementation of a discriminatory policy is necessary before a violation of section 7116(b)(8) of the Statute can occur; and that it had no obligation under section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute to provide attorneys to represent nonmembers in MSPB appeals.

V. Analysis

The Authority finds that the statement in RIF Bulletin #3, in all the circumstances, created the impression that nonmember unit employees seeking NTEU's assistance would not be afforded the same standard of representation as members. Therefore, the statement constituted a violation of section 7116(b)(1) of the Statute because the clear implication that nonmember unit employees would not receive the same level of assistance or standard of representation from the Respondent as members reasonably tended to interfere with the protected right of employees under section 7102 of the Statute to refrain from joining a labor organization.[2/]

[1] The Judge found that NTEU Chapter 229 had acted only in a ministerial capacity. This is consistent with the position of the General Counsel and the Respondent taken during the hearing, and is not at issue before the Authority. See National Treasury Employees Union and National Treasury Employees Union Chapter 121, 16 FLRA 717, 718 (1984), petition for review filed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, No. 85-1053 (D.C. Cir., Jan. 25, 1985).

However, contrary to the Judge, the Authority concludes that by posting the above statement the Respondent did not fail to comply with the requirements of section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute to represent the interests of all unit employees without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership, and thus did not violate section 7116(b)(8) of the Statute.[3/] In this regard, the Authority notes that the General Counsel does not assert--and the record does not establish--that the Respondent implemented a policy of discrimination subsequent to the posting of "RIF Bulletin #3," or that nonmember unit employees were ever denied the assistance of an attorney in connection with MSPB appeals. On the contrary, the Respondent presented unrebutted evidence that any unit employee who requested advice or assistance was provided with such assistance without regard to membership in the Union, although no unit employee subsequently filed an appeal with the MSPB.[4/]

[4/] See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1778, AFL-CIO, 10 FLRA 346 (1982), in which the Authority specifically declined to affirm the Judge's findings that the union Respondent had violated section 7116(b)(8) by failing to comply with section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute since the record failed to establish that there was disparate treatment in the representation of nonmembers by the union.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendations only to the extent consistent with this decision.

The Authority shall dismiss that portion of the complaint which alleges that the Respondent did not comply with section 7114(a)(1) of the Statute and thereby violated section 7116(b)(8) of the Statute, and shall find only that Respondent's conduct constituted an independent violation of section 7116(b)(1) of the Statute.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Treasury Employees Union shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Creating the impression that the National Treasury Employees Union will afford differing standards of employee representation with respect to appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board (MSPB) by employees in units of exclusive recognition on the basis of whether such employees are members of the National Treasury Employees Union.

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing unit employees in the exercise of their right to refrain from joining, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, the National Treasury Employees Union or any other labor organization.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing unit employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purpose and policies of the Statute:

(a) Provide clear notice to all nonmember unit employees seeking representation by their exclusive representative that the National Treasury Employees Union will supply attorneys to nonmembers to help in representational efforts, including representing them on appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board, on the same basis as it supplies attorneys to members.

(b) Post at its Chapter 229 local office and at its normal meeting places, and at all places where notices to members and other employees of the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of the Secretary, Headquarters are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the president of the National Treasury Employees Union, or a designee, and they shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members and other employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the section 7116(b)(8) allegations of the complaint be, and they hereby are, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge of an unfair labor practice filed on August 2, 1984, and amended on October 17, the Regional Director of Region III of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (hereinafter, the Authority) investigated the charge and, on November 28, 1984, served the complaint initiating this action.

The complaint alleges that, in or about July 1984, Respondent "promulgated a policy wherein the decision to provide attorneys employed by Respondent to represent employees included in the units [for which Respondent is certified as exclusive, collective-bargaining representative], in appeals before the Merit Systems Protection Board, is based solely upon whether such employees are members of Respondent." See paragraph 6 of G.C. Exh. 1(e).[1] In answer, Respondent replied that it had "insufficient information to admit or deny this allegation at this time." See paragraph 6 to G.C. Exh. 1(f).

The complaint further alleges that, in or about July 1984, Respondent "disseminated to employees included in the unit . . ., at the Agency's Washington, D.C. location a newsletter dated July 1984 and entitled 'RIF Bulletin #3' which stated, inter alia, that attorney assistance from Respondent for bargaining unit employees filing and/or pursuing appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board would only be provided to members of Respondent." See paragraph 7 of G.C. Exh. 1(e). Respondent admits this allegation. See paragraph 7 to G.C. Exh. 1(g).

Respondent denies that by such alleged acts and conduct it has failed and refused to comply with sections 7102 and 7114(a)(1) of the Statute or thereby violated section 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute, as alleged in the complaint.[2]

Corrections to the transcript are attached hereto and are made pursuant to 5 C.F.R. 2423.19(r).

[2] These statutory provisions are as follows:

Section 7102 concerns "Employees' rights" and provides, in pertinent part, that:

> Each employee shall have the right to form, join, or assist any labor organization, or to refrain from any such activity, freely and without fear of penalty or reprisal, and each employee shall be protected in the exercise of such right.

Section 7114(a)(1) provides that:

> A labor organization which has been accorded exclusive recognition is the exclusive representative of the employees in the unit it represents and is entitled to act for, and negotiate collective

A hearing was held on February 5, 1985, in Washington, D.C. The General Counsel and Respondent entered appearances and a Stipulation of Facts (Jt. Exh. 1); introduced documentary evidence; and examined witnesses. At the hearing, it was agreed that Respondent could offer into evidence a statement by its President. This statement has been received and marked as Respondent's Exhibit 4. Briefs were filed by Respondent on March 6 and by the General Counsel on March 7. Based upon the record evidence, my observation of the demeanor of witnesses, and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law and recommend the entry of the following order.

Findings of Fact

1. It is admitted that, at all times material herein, Respondent has been and is now a labor organization and the Charging Party (also referred to herein as "DHHS") has been and is now an agency, within the meaning of section 7103(a)(4) and (3), respectively, of the Statute.

2. It is also admitted that Respondent has been, since May or June, 1984, and is now certified as the exclusive collective bargaining representative of a unit of the Charging Party's non-professional General Schedule and Wage Grade employees, and a unit of professional employees, all located in the Washington, D.C. metropolitan area, and with certain exceptions not here relevant. These unit employees predominately work in the DHHS North Building, the Hubert S. Humphrey Building, and the Mary Switzer Building.

3. The National Treasury Employees Union ("NTEU") was elected the exclusive representative of approximately 1300-1500 non-professional, > bargaining agreements covering, all employees in the unit. An exclusive representative is responsible for representing the interests of all employees in the unit it represents without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership.

Section 7116 delineates "Unfair labor practices" and Section 7116(b) provides, in pertinent part, that: "it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization - bargaining-unit employees at DHHS in June 1983. The incumbent union filed a challenge to the election, thereby delaying NTEU's certification. This challenge ultimately was resolved in favor of NTEU. In October 1983, some 300 professional employees of DHHS elected NTEU as their exclusive representative in a separate, unchallenged election.

> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter; . . . or

4. Patricia Randle, Assistant Counsel for NTEU's National Office, was assigned to work with these DHHS employees, designated Chapter 229, in June 1983. She is supervised by Sharyn Danch, who is National Counsel for NTEU. As an employee of the national office, the duties of Ms. Randle include recruitment, representation, and organizing at the local level. Her responsibilities at DHHS include organizing the employees for collective action, recruiting members, and representing employees and the chapter in bargaining and in administrative proceedings.

5. During the period between the election for the large non-professional unit, in June 1983, and its certification in May or June 1984, NTEU was not the exclusive representative of this unit. NTEU was active on its behalf, however. Ms. Randle found the unit employees to be confused about the role of the two unions. Conversations with unit employees led her to believe that they were upset that the incumbent union had failed to provide an attorney for pending appeals before the Merit Systems Protection Board ("MSPB") during a reduction-in-force ("RIF"), and that many of them had gone out, on their own, and hired an attorney. In addition, the professional unit, which elected NTEU as its representative in October 1983, had never previously been represented; and unit employees were unaware of their rights and the benefits of having an exclusive representative. Since she was not able to represent the non-professional unit in matters relating to collective bargaining, Ms. Randle concentrated her efforts on providing information, such as advising employees of their statutory rights; educating them on relevant rules, regulations and procedures; and keeping them apprised of NTEU's legislative efforts.

5a. During this interim, pre-certification period, DHHS developed a program for "streamlining" the Office of the Secretary which required a RIF affecting bargaining unit employees. See Tr. 14, 29-30. Employees affected by a RIF have appeal rights to the MSPB.

5b. NTEU responded with several actions designed to dissuade the Agency from separating employees, including lobbying efforts in Congress, local petition drives, and talks with DHHS. In order to publicize these efforts, inform the bargaining unit of their progress, and get more employees involved, Chapter 229, with the help and advice of Ms. Randle, issued a series of "Special Bulletins" to all employees. The first one, entitled "Special Bulletin #1," was issued March 26, 1984, and detailed the plan of action. Three more (designated Bulletins, 2, 3, and 4) were issued as the RIF threat continued through April, July, and August 1984. Each of these bulletins provided updates on the progress of the RIF negotiations, explanations of relevant employee rights, directions for aiding the lobbying effort, and other specific information on how employees could prepare for and oppose the impending RIF.

5c. Prior to the issuance of RIF Bulletin #3, in July of 1984, Ms. Randle learned that a member of NTEU did not know that Ms. Randle, an attorney, was available to employees for handling MSPB appeals. The prior union had not provided attorney assistance. Therefore, during her review of RIF Bulletin #3, she added the following paragraph at the end and under a heading, "If A RIF Occurs":

> The attorney assigned to NTEU Chapter 229 will be available to provide legal advice and/or assistance in filing and/or pursuing MSPB appeals to members of NTEU Chapter 229. There is no extra fee for such assistance. Your union dues will cover such legal assistance.

See Jt. Exh. 1(a) emphasis as in the bulletin. The third bulletin was published on NTEU letterhead. The first, second and fourth bulletins were published on the letterhead of the local chapter. RIF Bulletin #3 was observed by management on an employee bulletin board in the North Building, where it normally would remain for about two weeks. This same bulletin was also observed by management in the Humphrey Building.

5d. No unit employee complained to DHHS regarding RIF Bulletin #3.

5e. No unit employee was made subject to a RIF pursuant to the streamlining program.

6. DHHS reached and signed an agreement with NTEU on July 31, 1984. The agreement has 33 sections, one of which (section 20) states that: "This agreement shall not be construed to deny any employee any right of appeal he/she may have to the Merit Systems Protection Board." See G.C. Exh. 2. Another (section 27(B)9) provides that RIF notices must contain information as to "the employee's grievance or appeal rights."

7. Throughout the interim period described in finding 5, above, and since the NTEU certification at DHHS, no MSPB appeals have been filed by Chapter 229 of NTEU. Ms. Randle has given advice, through Chapter 229's Chief Steward, to unit employees and has not questioned whether they were NTEU members. The Chief Steward, who was not identified as an attorney, has helped a lot of unit employees, regardless of NTEU membership. The Chief Steward is still in a "learning process" (Tr. 54). She was told by Ms. Randle that nonmembers of NTEU have the same rights as members, including "representation before MSPB" (Tr. 56).

8. Ms. Randle cannot herself make policy for NTEU. She has been with NTEU since 1981 and knows that a former NTEU president, Vincent Connery, had a policy that attorney assistance would be provided to NTEU members. She has read an Authority decision concerning this matter, 16 FLRA No. 102. She is unaware of any pronouncement by NTEU's national office that NTEU policy has changed, on the issue. The present NTEU President, Robert Tobias, "has not expressly stated what N.T.E.U.'s policy is," to her knowledge (Tr. 42). She has represented nonmembers of NTEU before the MSPB and before the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

9. In a sworn statement filed after the hearing, upon the agreement of the parties (Tr. 50), the present President of NTEU states:

> My name is Robert M. Tobias. I am the National President of the National Treasury Employees Union. In this position, I may establish and disseminate NTEU's national policy on various issues including the nature and scope of representation provided to employees within bargaining units for which NTEU is the exclusive representative.
> The current representational policy of the National Treasury Employees Union ("NTEU") with regard to appeals to the Merit Systems Protection Board ("MSPB") for employees within such bargaining units may be summarized as follows:
> NTEU is not required by law to provide representation to any employee who appeals an action to the MSPB. NTEU may, at its option, provide representation to some employees before the MSPB, and may make its decision on whether or not an employee will be represented on the basis of membership status with NTEU as well as other factors.
> I hereby solemnly swear and affirm that the foregoing is true and correct.

Counsel for the General Counsel did not file a motion to reopen the hearing to cross-examine Mr. Tobias, a right which was accorded. See Tr. 50.

10. During the hearing, the position of the General Counsel was clarified, as follows:

> The General Counsel's position on this case, and the allegations contained in the complaint relate only to the publication and posting or dissemination of RIF #3. We do not allege that Respondent has implemented the policy.

See Tr. 35.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has established, by a preponderance of the evidence,[3] that Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices, in violation of 5 U.S.C. § 7116(b)(1) and (8), by publishing a statement, in July 1984, which continued an established policy of considering union membership as a factor in determining whether to furnish an attorney to a unit employee in appeals before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

This conclusion is compelled by Authority decisions in National Treasury Employees Union and National Treasury Employees Union Chapter 121, 16 FLRA 717 (Dec. 4, 1984, hereinafter referred to as "NTEU Chapter 121") petition for review filed sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, No. 85-1053 (D.C. Cir., Jan. 25, 1985); National Treasury Employees Union, 10 FLRA 519 (1982), enforced sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 721 F.2d 1402 (D.C. Cir 1983, hereinafter "NTEU") and American Federation of Government Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 916, 18 FLRA No. 2 (May 14, 1985, hereinafter "AFGE Local 916"). Each of these cases holds, inter alia, that the Statute does not allow a union to distinguish between members and nonmembers in providing assistance of attorneys, including attorneys to prosecute appeals before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

See also the recent case of American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, 17 FLRA 446 (1985, hereinafter "AFGE"), involving a union charging nonmembers disparate fees to participate in a class action suit under the Back Pay Act, and holding that:

> The duty of fair representation imposed by the Statute is not restricted to those proceedings under the sole control of the exclusive representative as a consequence of its certification. Rather, when an exclusive representative decides to represent unit employees in any matter which affects their conditions of employment, it has the duty under sections 7114 of the Statute to represent unit employees fairly, and may not discriminate with regard to that representation on the basis of union membership.

See 17 FLRA at 447.

See also the recent case in National Treasury Employees Union Chapter 204, 18 FLRA No. 36 (May 24, 1985, hereinafter "NTEU Chapter 204") holding it to be an unfair labor practice for NTEU to establish different schedules for members and nonmembers to telephone the union president to ascertain whether they were on an agency list of employees tentatively eligible to receive cash rewards. The Authority inferred that NTEU obtained the list from the agency by virtue of its status as the employees' exclusive representative and acted in that capacity in disseminating the information.

I am unpersuaded that the NTEU and NTEU Chapter 121 cases an be validly distinguished, as Respondent argues. See R. Br. 15-20. While the July 1984 statement here at issue does not flatly state a "members only" policy, it clearly creates that impression. And, in answering the complaint, Respondent concedes as much. See paragraph 7 of the answer and complaint in G.C. Exh. 1(e) and (g).

While here the July 1984 statement was not implemented, this apparently is not considered significant by the Authority, when the statement reflects an established policy of discrimination. See footnote 4 to page 15 of the decision of Administrative Law William B. Devaney, which the Authority affirmed in AFGE, Local 916, 18 FLRA No. 2. Judge Devaney distinguishes, on this basis, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1778, AFL-CIO, 10 FLRA No. 62, 10 FLRA 346 (1982), upon which Respondent here relies. See R. Br. 19-20.

Respondent argues that the July 1984 statement is not an established policy of discrimination, but, rather, "an entirely different policy" that that articulated in NTEU and NTEU Chapter 121. Those cases both involve a September 7, 1979 statement promulgated by NTEU's past National President, Vincent Connery, to the effect that NTEU would continue a policy, in effect before enactment of the Statute, of not furnishing attorneys to represent nonmembers while furnishing attorneys to represent members. See 10 FLRA at 520 and 527 and 16 FLRA at 728. NTEU is currently defending its September 9, 1979 policy before the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in No. 85-1053. NTEU has apparently never advised its staff that any different policy is in effect. See finding 8, above. And this policy was affirmed by a sworn statement made by the current President for NTEU for this record. See R. Exh. 4, set forth in finding 9 above, which is a statement by President Robert Tobias that NTEU "may, at its option, provide representation to some employees before the MSPB, and may make its decision on whether or not an employee will be represented on the basis of membership status with NTEU as well as other factors." There is no basic difference discernible between this statement of policy and that involved in NTEU and NTEU Chapter 121. See 10 FLRA at 527 and 16 FLRA at 728.

Respondent argues that RIF Bulletin #3, and the statement therein referring to legal representation available to NTEU members, did not constitute a policy statement by NTEU because Ms. Randle wrote it and she could not state with certainty what the national policy was. See R. Br. 5-8. It is undisputed, however, that Ms. Randle is a national officer sent to a pledging chapter to assist it; that she knew that NTEU policy had been to provide legal assistance to members and, from her admitted reading of NTEU Chapter 121, must have known that nonmembers were provided such assistance only on an optional basis. See 16 FLRA at 727. It is also undisputed that RIF Bulletin #3 was posted on NTEU letterhead, in contrast to the other three union bulletins issued on the RIF, which went out on letterhead of Chapter 229. See finding 5c, above. Under these circumstances, Respondent cannot disavow RIF Bulletin #3 as stating national policy.

The fact that NTEU's Assistant Counsel, Ms. Randle, has not questioned the union membership of unit employees seeking her help does not save the day for Respondent. As already explained, the Authority does not require proof of implementation where a statement of an established, discriminatory policy is involved. Obviously, the statement itself tends to serve to screen out nonmembers from soliciting her help. See the testimony given by Ms. Randle's supervisor, NTEU Associate Counsel Sharyn Danch, in NTEU, to the effect that she never questioned union status is rendering assistance to unit employees because she "assume[d] that cases referred to [her were] cases involving a member [of NTEU]" (10 FLRA at 532, finding 4).

Respondent also distinguishes NTEU on the basis of the court's ruling in that case that a union may not provide attorneys only to members where the representation "pertains directly to enforcement of the fruits of collective bargaining." See R. Br. 17, arguing that the policy involved here is "outside" the fruits of collective bargaining. The Authority, however, views the yardstick of fair representation as applicable to any matter "which affects [the unit employees'] conditions of employment." See AFGE, 17 FLRA at 447. Appeal rights pursuant to a RIF would surely be a condition of employment. But, in any event, Respondent did, through collective bargaining, obtain for unit employees the "fruit" of having RIF notices contain information as to employees' appeal rights. See finding 6, above. Appeal rights lead to the MSPB, which leads to the need of representation by an attorney.

The Remedy

The General Counsel takes the position, consistent with the Authority's decision in NTEU Chapter 121, 16 FLRA at 718, that Chapter 229 here involved performed only a ministerial function, and seeks no remedy against it. See G.C. Br. 8. Respondent concurs. See R. Br. 20. On the basis of the record made in this case, so do I.

As to the national union, a broad cease and desist order similar to that entered in NTEU Chapter 121, 16 FLRA at 719-720 is deemed appropriate here and for the same reasons expressed by the Authority in that case.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

Respondent has engaged in unfair labor practices, in violation of section 7116(b)(1) and (8) of the Statute.

Accordingly, and pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the National Treasury Employees Union shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Affording differing standards of employee representation to employees in units of exclusive recognition on the basis of whether such employees are members of the National Treasury Employees Union.

(b) Interfering with, restraining, or coercing unit employees in the exercise of their right to refrain from joining, freely and without fear or penalty or reprisal, the National Treasury Employees Union or any other labor organization.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing unit employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) National Treasury Employees Union, by its President, shall forthwith notify all national office officials, including its legal staff, and each Chapter President, in writing, that the National Treasury Employees Union's policy has changed; that the National Treasury Employees Union will supply attorneys to nonmembers to help in representational efforts on the same basis as its supplies attorneys to members to help in representational efforts including representing them on appeals to the Merit Systems Protective Board; and that the prior policy to the contrary is hereby withdrawn and rescinded.

(b) National Treasury Employees Union will represent the interests of all employees in units where it holds exclusive recognition without discrimination and without regard to labor organization membership.

(c) Post at its national headquarters, at the local business office of each of its chapters, and at each agency or activity, including but not limited to Department of the Health and Human Services, Office of the Secretary, Headquarters, for which the National Treasury Employees Union, and/or any chapter of the National Treasury Employees Union holds exclusive recognition, and at all places where notices to members and other employees are customarily posted, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the President of the National Treasury Employees Union and they shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all places where notices to members and other employees are customarily posted. The National Treasury Employees Union shall take reasonable steps to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced or covered by any other material.

(d) Submit appropriate signed copies of such Notices to the Department of Health and Human Services, Office of the Secretary, Headquarters, Washington, D.C.; and, upon request, to an appropriate officer of each other agency or activity for which the National Treasury Employees Union and/or any chapter of the National Treasury Employees Union holds exclusive recognition, for posting in conspicuous places where the respective unit employees are located, where that shall be maintained for a period of 60 consecutive days from the date of posting.

(e) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director of Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Case No. O-NG-784

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), concerning the negotiability of one five-part Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

Article 36. BASE/POST PRIVILEGES

1. All unit employees will be granted the use of the following base/post facilities:

   A. Base/Post Exchanges at the site to which the employee is assigned.

   B. All retail food outlets operated by the Navy Exchange, AAFES, or Coast Guard Exchange at the site to which the employee is assigned, or

   C. Access to the nearest exchange system and its retail food outlets in any case in which an employee is assigned to a site at which the facilities described in subsection A and B are not operated.

D. Base/post/station/fort special services recreation and morale support facilities at the site to which the employee is assigned.

E. Hospital facilities on a paid basis.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency asserts that the proposal is nonnegotiable for four reasons: (1) it does not concern matters affecting working conditions of bargaining unit employees, within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute; (2) the Agency is without authority to bargain over the proposed benefits; (3) bargaining on the proposal is barred by regulations for which a compelling need exists; (4) negotiation on parts D and E of the proposal is foreclosed by applicable law.

The Union did not provide any arguments in its petition for review supporting the negotiability of the proposal, nor did it file a reply brief.

We will examine the Agency's contentions, in turn.

B. Analysis

1. Conditions of Employment of Bargaining Unit Employees

Under the statutory scheme established by sections 7103(a)(12), 7106, 7114 and 7117 a matter proposed to be bargained which is consistent with Federal law, including the Statute, Government-wide regulations or agency regulations is, nonetheless, outside the duty to bargain unless such matter directly affects the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The term "conditions of employment" is defined in section 7103(a)(14) as "personnel policies, practices, and matters whether established by rule, regulation, or otherwise, affecting working conditions . . . ."

In deciding whether a proposal involves a condition of employment of bargaining unit employees the Authority considers two basic factors:

(1) Whether the matter proposed to be bargained pertains to bargaining unit employees; and

(2) The nature and extent of the effect of the matter proposed to be bargained on working conditions of those employees.

For example, as to the first factor, the question of whether the proposal pertains to bargaining unit employees, a proposal which is principally focused on nonbargaining unit positions or employees does not directly affect the work situation or employment relationship of bargaining unit employees. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1451 and Naval Training Center, Orlando, Florida, 3 FLRA 88 (1980) aff'd sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees v. FLRA, 652 F.2d 191 (D.C. Cir. 1981) (Proposal requiring management to designate a particular number of representatives to negotiations was held to be outside the duty to bargain). But, a proposal which is principally focused on bargaining unit positions or employees and which is otherwise consistent with applicable laws and regulations is not rendered nonnegotiable merely because it also would have some impact on employees outside the bargaining unit. See Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1982) (Union Proposal 1 defining the competitive area for reduction-in-force as coextensive with the bargaining unit was held to be within the duty to bargain even though it had an impact on nonbargaining unit employees).

Part 1 of the Appendix to this decision references other Authority decisions concerning the nature and extent of the affect of a proposal on bargaining unit employees.

As to the second factor, relating to the effect of a proposal on working conditions, the question is whether the record establishes that there is a direct connection between the proposal and the work situation or employment relationship of bargaining unit employees. For example, a proposal concerning off-duty hour activities of employees was found to be outside the duty to bargain where no such connection was established. See International Association of Fire Fighters, AFL-CIO, CLC, Local F-116 and Department of the Air Force, Vandenberg Air Force Base, California, 7 FLRA 123 (1981) (Proposal to permit employees to utilize on-base recreational facilities during off-duty hours found not to concern personnel policies, practices, or matters affecting working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

On the other hand, a proposal concerning off-duty hour activities of employees was held to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees where the requisite connection was established. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1363 and Headquarters, U.S. Army Garrison, Yongsan, Korea, 4 FLRA 139 (1980) (Proposal to revise the agency's "ration control" policy was found to concern standards of health and decency which were conditions of employment under agency regulations).

Part 2 of the Appendix to this decision references other Authority decisions concerning the nature and effect of a proposal on bargaining unit employees' working conditions.

Applying the first factor to the disputed proposal we find that the proposal expressly pertains only to bargaining unit employees. No claim is made that the proposal has any impact on nonbargaining unit employees. However, we must also assess the nature and effect of the proposal on bargaining unit employees' working conditions under the second factor. Here the Agency argues without contravention that access to the retail, recreational and medical facilities denoted in the proposal would occur primarily during the employees' non-duty hours. Further, the Union has provided no evidence, whatever, and the record does not otherwise establish that access to the facilities in question is in any manner related to the work situation or employment relationship or is otherwise linked to the employees' assignments within the school system in Puerto Rico. As a result we find the disputed proposal is to the same effect as the proposal permitting employees to use on-base recreational facilities during off-duty hours found outside the agency's obligation to bargain in Vandenberg Air Force Base, 7 FLRA 123 (1981). Thus, the disputed proposal also does not directly affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees and is outside the Agency's obligation to bargain.

2. Matters within the Agency's Authority to Bargain

It is well established that the duty of an agency under the Statute is to negotiate with an exclusive representative of an appropriate unit of its employees concerning conditions of employment affecting them to the extent of its discretion, that is, except as provided otherwise by Federal law including the Statute, or by Government-wide rule or regulation or by an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. For example, see National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

It is also well established that an agency may not foreclose bargaining on an otherwise negotiable matter by delegating authority as to that matter only to an organizational level within the agency different from the organizational level of recognition. Rather, under section 7114(b)(2) of the Statute, an agency is obligated to provide representatives who are empowered to negotiate and enter into agreement on all matters within the statutorily prescribed scope of negotiations. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and United States Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61 (1982) (Union Proposal 1). Thus, the Agency's claim that the Superintendent of the Department of Navy Antilles School System is without authority to bargain on access to Navy retail, recreational or medical facilities because such facilities are in separate chains of command within the Department of Navy from the school system cannot be sustained. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1409 and U.S. Adjutant General Publications Center, Baltimore, Maryland, 18 FLRA No. 68 (1985). Similarly, the Agency's argument that the Superintendent is without authority to bargain on access to Army facilities which are under the jurisdiction of a separate subdivision of DOD also cannot be sustained. See Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, 15 FLRA 750 (1984).

As to Coast Guard facilities, there is nothing in the record in this case which indicates that the Agency lacks the discretion to at least request the Department of Transportation to extend access to such Coast Guard facilities to Antilles School System employees. Thus, the Agency is obligated to bargain on access to Coast Guard facilities to this extent. See American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO and Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 578 (1982) (Union Proposals XI-XVI), enf'd sub nom. Library of Congress v. FLRA, 699 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1983).

3. Compelling Need

The Agency has argued that a compelling need exists for certain of its regulations to bar civilian employee access to the retail and recreational facilities in Puerto Rico. We note, however, an apparent inconsistency between this argument and DOD Directive 1400.6 which could be interpreted to permit access to such facilities by the employees in Puerto Rico. Neither party in this case addressed this specific question or otherwise discussed the effect of DOD Directive 1400.6 on civilian employees in Puerto Rico. Therefore, we consider it inappropriate, based on the record in this case, to pass on the compelling need issue raised by the Agency.

4. Consistency with law of Parts D and E of the Proposal

a. Part D of the Proposal

According to the record this part of the proposal would permit the Antilles School System employees to patronize on-post retail liquor stores. While the Agency's claims that Puerto Rico law precludes the sale of Commonwealth tax-free alcoholic beverages to these civilian employees we find such claim unsupported in the record. That is, the DOD regulations, which were included in the record by the Agency, specifically permit patronage of on-post retail liquor stores by other categories of persons, such as dependents of military personnel, who, like the civilian employees in this case, are not expressly listed as exempt under the Puerto Rico Statute. See Puerto Rico Laws Annotated tit. 13 § 6019 (1976). Thus, we do not find that the Agency has established that Part D of the proposal is inconsistent with law.

b. Part E of the Proposal

Part E of the proposal would permit employees to use the local Navy hospital on a paid basis. However, under 24 U.S.C. § 34 Federal employees located outside the continental limits of the United States and in Alaska may receive medical care at a naval hospital only "where facilities are not otherwise available in reasonably accessible and appropriate non-Federal hospitals." Also, under 24 U.S.C. § 35, such employees may be hospitalized in a naval hospital "only for acute medical and surgical conditions . . . ." Since Part E of the proposal contains no limitations on access to the local naval hospital, it is inconsistent with the express statutory provisions governing such access.

C. Conclusion

The Authority finds, for the reasons set forth in the preceding analysis, that the entire proposal in this case concerns matters which are not conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. Consequently, it is not within the duty to bargain although the Agency could negotiate on the proposal if it chose to do so, except for Part E.

Further, the Authority concludes that as Part E of the proposal is inconsistent with Federal law, it is outside the scope of the duty to bargain pursuant to section 7117(a)(1) of the Statute.

III. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

APPENDIX

Part 1

The following cases involve examples of proposals found outside the duty to bargain because of the impact on individuals or positions outside the bargaining unit.

National Council of Field Labor Locals, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 290 (1980) (Proposal I establishing the method management will use in filling supervisory and management positions found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

American Federation of Government Employees, National Council of EEOC Locals No. 216, AFL-CIO and Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 504 (1980) (Proposal relating to the assessment and training of supervisors found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 6 FLRA 522 (1981) (Proposal VI requiring management to notify individuals who telephone the agency for tax information that such calls are subject to monitoring found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

National Association of Government Employees, Local R7-23 and Headquarters, 375th Air Base Group, Scott Air Force Base, Illinois, 7 FLRA 710 (1982) (Proposal concerning discipline of management officials and supervisors found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2272 and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, District of Columbia, 9 FLRA 1004 (1982) (The portion of Proposal 5 which required management to prosecute private citizens who file false reports found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

Association of Civilian Technicians, State of New York, Division of Military and Naval Affairs, Albany, New York, 11 FLRA 475 (1983) (Proposal 2 concerning procedures for filling military positions found not to affect the working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2302 and U.S. Army Armor Center and Fort Knox, Fort Knox, Kentucky, 19 FLRA No. 95 (1985) (Proposal 4 prescribing the content of certain management records relating to employees, the manner in which such records are maintained and restrictions on management access to such records found not to affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

A. The following cases involve examples of proposals found outside the duty to bargain because of the absence of a direct affect on bargaining unit employees' working conditions.

National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 6 FLRA 588 (1981) (Proposal IV permitting employee allotments from pay for "Political Action Fund" to be used in "political efforts to improve working conditions" found to affect working conditions in only a remote and speculative manner).

National Federation of Federal Employees, Council of Consolidated Social Security Administration Locals and Social Security Administration, 13 FLRA 422 (1983) (Proposals 3 and 4 requiring management to utilize recycled paper products and to provide the union with such recycled paper products upon request found not to directly affect bargaining unit employees' working conditions as there was no demonstration in the record of any such effect).

Maritime Metal Trades Council and Panama Canal Commission, 17 FLRA 890 (1985) (Proposals 1 and 2 permitting employees to cash personal checks at the agency's treasury found not to directly affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees).

B. The following cases involve examples of proposals found to directly affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees.

American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980) (Union Proposal 1), enf'd as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982) (A proposal to establish a union operated day care facility on agency property was found to directly affect bargaining unit employees by enhancing an individual's ability to accept employment or to continue employment with the agency and to promote workforce stability and prevent tardiness and absenteeism).

National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 3 FLRA 693 (1980) (Union Proposal I establishing criteria for approval of outside employment was found to directly affect working conditions of unit employees because agency regulations which set forth policies governing outside employment were determinative of employee eligibility for certain positions and even prescribed whether employees could continue to be employed).

Planners, Estimators and Progressmen Association, Local No. 8 and Department of the Navy, Charleston Naval Shipyard, Charleston, South Carolina, 13 FLRA 455 (1983) (A proposal to permit bargaining unit employees to record their time and attendance manually instead of mechanically through use of a time clock found to directly concern working conditions of such employees).

United States Department of Justice, United States Immigration and Naturalization Service and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2509, 14 FLRA 578 (1984) (Assignment of Government-owned housing to employees was found to directly affect working conditions of bargaining unit employees in circumstances where there was a lack of adequate housing in the geographic area and the Government-owned housing in question was constructed for the benefit and use of employees stationed at the hardship location).

American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1770 and Department of the Army, Headquarters, XVIII Airborne Corps and Fort Bragg, Fort Bragg, North Carolina, 17 FLRA 752 (1985) (Proposal 4 requiring the agency to provide lockers or other secure areas for employees' personal items during working hours found to directly affect working conditions of unit employees).

DECISION

Statement of the Case

The hearing in the above-entitled case was held before the undersigned on August 5, 1985 at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. A Complaint and Notice of Hearing was issued on June 28, 1985 by the Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Region II, New York, N.Y.

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. 7101, et. seq. (herein called the Statute). It is based on a First Amended Charge filed on June 17, 1985 by National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 22 (herein called the Union) against Internal Revenue Service, Philadelphia District Office (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that the parties negotiated and reached an agreement regarding alternative work schedules for Respondent's Data Services Staff and its Automatic Collection System Branch; that Respondent refused to execute such agreements, all of which constituted a violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Respondent's Answer dated July 19, 1985, denied the aforesaid allegations[1] as well as the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs were filed which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein the Union has acted as the representative of the National Treasury Employees Union[2] for the purposes of collective bargaining for Respondent's employees, and Respondent has recognized the Union as the bargaining representative of Respondent's employees.

2. A National Agreement between National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service became effective by its terms on January 26, 1981 and remained in effect for four years thereafter.

[1] The Answer admits that from July 1984 through March 1985 the parties negotiated regarding alternative work schedules for unit employees in the Automated Collection System Branch.

[2] National Treasury Employees Union is the exclusive representative of a consolidated nationwide unit of certain employees of Internal Revenue Service, including professional and non-professional employees who are employed in the District, Region and National Offices. No challenge is made to the appropriateness of the unit.

3. Both NTEU and IRS executed a Memorandum of Understanding in November 1982 which established the framework within which local offices and chapters may negotiate agreements re alternative work schedules.

4. Pursuant to the aforesaid Memorandum the Union herein and Respondent executed an agreement on February 25, 1984 providing for alternative work schedules (hereinafter called AWS) for bargaining unit employees. Provision is made therein for flexitour[3] with credit hours[4] and a 5/4-9[5] schedule of work. The said agreement also provides as follows in Section 7(b) thereof:

> This Agreement does not extend to organizational segments implemented after the effective date of this Agreement.[6] AWS for organization segments established after the effective date of this Agreement will be determined at the time of its establishment. (underscoring supplied).

In addition, the procedures set forth in Article 39, Section 3(B) of the National Agreement will apply re notice to the Union when management proposes changes in employment conditions.

5. Subsequent to the AWS agreement pertaining to the District, two new sections were created by Respondent: the Data Services Staff, herein called DSS, and the Automated Collection Systems Branch, herein called ACS. The DSS section takes care of programming for computer operations. The ACS branch was a new system involving the use of [3] Flexitour denotes a flexible schedule which an employee may select but must adhere to until an opportunity for change arises.

[4] Credit hours means any hours worked under the work schedule in excess of an employee's work requirement.

[5] Under this schedule employees may work eight (8) nine and one-half (9-1/2) hour tours and one (1) eight and one-half (8-1/2) hour tour with one (1) non-work day within a pay period of ten (10) days. Starting time is 8:00 a.m.

computers to contact taxpayers and aid in collecting taxes from smaller payers. About 20 individuals (inclusive of managerial staff) comprised DSS, while about 45 are employed in ACS.

6. In a memorandum dated March 29, 1984 Florence Warner, Respondent's Chief of Personnel, advised William H. Walton, Union president, that the DSS had been established; that while the AWS agreement requires that new segments have AWS schedules negotiated as they are established, Respondent does not believe computer operators should participate in AWS. This latter position was based on the fact that these operators will be working set rotating shifts incompatible with either staggered or credit hours. Further, the use of credit hours would pose a problem since only six employees covered 24 hours most of the week.

7. Walton replied to the aforesaid memo by a letter dated April 16, 1984 wherein it was stated that the Union wished to negotiate the substance, impact and implementation of AWS for DSS computer operators. The Union also requested a briefing in order to draft proposals.

8. Following a briefing between the parties, Respondent sent a memorandum dated May 4, 1984 to Walton requesting that specific proposals of the Union re AWS for DSS be submitted by C.O.B. May 9, 1984.

9. By memo dated May 9, 1984 the Union submitted to Respondent its proposals re AWS for the DSS that (a) Computer operators have a compressed schedule of 10-1/2 hours per day for eight days of the biweekly period to complete the basic work requirement of 80 hours; (b) Computer Operators be allowed to exchange shifts and/or days off.

10. Later in that month, Union President Walton met with John Ferraro, Chief of DSS, Mark Hart, a manager in that section, and Judy Jones, personnel specialist. A briefing was held re AWS for the DSS at which time management expressed concern about the computer operators who worked three shifts, and how their schedules would work out.

11. Several short meetings were held in July 1984 regarding the implementation of AWS for DSS, and these were attended by the same individuals, i.e. Walton, Ferraro, Hart and Jones. Testimony by Walton[7] reflects that while management continued to express concerns re the adaptability of AWS for computer operators, he finally drafted a written instrument covering these concerns. Walton testified that the agreement he drafted (G.C. 9) was written to "go along with what me and the managers came up with;" that it was his "feeling" that the parties came to an agreement in July with regard to AWS for the data services computer operators. Further, Walton testified Judy Jones was to have the agreement typed up and send him a copy. However, she left the agency around July or August and he never received a typewritten or signed copy.

12. The drafted agreement is entitled "Proposed Agreement Regarding Alternative Work Schedules/Staggered Work Hours for the Data Services Staff." It provides, in substance, that bargaining unit employees will be provided the opportunity to work flexitour with credit hours or a 5/4-9 schedule, except those required to work rotating shifts. Further, that computer operators on rotating shifts will be allowed to work a 10 hour day, 4 day work week if all agree to a set schedule and the number of operators does not go below six. Provision is also made, subject to approval, for exchange of shifts between employees.

13. About a month later Walton asked William Wagner, Chief of Labor-Management Relations, about the agreement since he had not received a typewritten copy. Wagner told the Union official to speak with Sandy Coffman, a labor relations specialist for Respondent. Record facts reflect that Walton met with Coffman and asked her about the agreement; that Coffman stated she was not sure of its status but would check with management and get back to him. Walton testified that he later met with Coffman again who "sort of indicated everything seemed to be okay."[8] Further, that Walton assumed Coffman must have obtained approval from management as to AWS for data services.

8/ Coffman denies meeting with Walton or discussing the agreement with him. I credit Walton with respect to his having met with Coffman and the substance of their conversations.

14. Testimony adduced from Coffman reflects that she reviewed the files re AWS for DSS; that notes therein concerning the meeting in July 1984 indicated management would get proposals along with examples of how the 4-10 schedule would work and then the parties would get back together; that no such schedules were submitted to management, and the proposals were deemed incomplete.[9]

15. Walton's testimony reflects that in several discussions with Wagner the latter stated that management was working on the agreement; that it would be signed and sent to him for signature. Wagner testified that he assigned the Union's proposals to Coffman; that he assumed that everything had been worked out, and, in fact, two bargaining unit people were already under AWS. Record facts also show that in April, 1985 Wagner met with Walton; that the management official stated he thought everyone was happy, and he assumed there was an informal resolution of the problem.

16. In December, 1983 NTEU and IRS negotiated an agreement covering ACS implementation at districts throughout IRS (G.C. Exhibit 10). Section 9(a) thereof provides that bargaining over matters relating to AWS would be conducted at the local level, but any agreements re AWS must be consistent with the AWS agreement negotiated at the national level.[10]

17. By memo dated December 5, 1983 R. K. Burgess, Chief, Personnel Branch of Respondent advised Raymond Wolownik, President of the Union herein, that AWS coverage for ACS employees would be handled under Section 7-B of the locally negotiated AWS agreement.[11]

[9] The record reflects that some proposed schedules were submitted by both parties; that the computer operators had also given management a schedule for certain shiftwork; that the parties continued to discuss working out schedules for the computer operators regarding AWS in the data services section.

[10] The Agreement for ACS also provided that issues re restrictions on food and drink in work areas, office space and furniture placements, rest/break areas and facilities, would be negotiated locally.

18. In a letter dated March 23, 1984 Walton advised Respondent's District Director, Charles E. Roddy, that the Union desired to negotiate the implementation of ACS. Included therein were ten proposals by the Union concerning employment conditions for ACS employees. Proposal No. 6 stated:

> "That the hours of work remain generally as they are currently in the Collective Office Branch."12/

19. Respondent replied to the Union in a memo dated April 13, 1984 in which management set forth eight proposals re ACS negotiations along with Interim ACS Office Rules. Item number 6 proposed that "AWS for ACS will be negotiated beginning as soon as possible in October, 1984 to provide experience under the ACS system."

20. Prior to commencement of negotiations re ACS implementation, Respondent's negotiating teams, consisting of Michael Harkins, Chief of Special Procedures, William Cressman, former Chief of ACS, and Judy Jones, met with Jay West, Chief of Collection Division. Record facts disclose that West told the team that he and the District Director made the final decision re any working rules which may be adopted. Further, that the group's authority was limited to "hammering" out tentative agreements which must then be discussed with the Division Chief.

21. The first negotiation session for ACS13/ was held on May 8, 1984. The Union was represented by Al Jones, Vice-President of the Union, Francis Greene, Secretary of the local and steward for the Union, and Raymond Wolownik. Management requested, and the Union agreed, that the parties hold off on AWS negotiations for 60-90 days. Subsequent to the meeting the Union submitted 24 proposals, although the list did not include items concerning AWS for the employees in ACS.

22. Sessions continued thereafter, and the record reflects that meetings were held on May 15 and 30, 1984, as well as June 12 and July 19, 1984 and August 29, 1984. Management's representatives Harkins, Cressman and Raymond Pfeiffer[14] testified, and I find, that at each meeting in June and July, 1984 it was stated by either Harkins or another official that the alternative work schedule (AWS) for the ACS unit would be part of the entire package or negotiations for that unit. No discussion or agreement was made that a separate agreement would be executed for the AWS, independent of one for the work rules which would govern ACS.[15] I also find that at various meetings representatives of management mentioned that any agreement reached would not be final and binding until signed and approved by the District Director. While Union agent Greene testified no such limitation was stated by management, I credit Harkins and Cressman that the Union agents were told that any agreement reached had to be approved by the Director.

23. The parties continued negotiations for ACS and had resolved all issues except three by January, 1985. With respect to AWS for the new unit the only material dispute concerned starting time. The Union decided to forego its demand for 7:00 a.m. for the start of work, and the parties

14/ Although not in attendance on May 8, Pfeiffer was present at the meetings held thereafter in May, as well as June 12 and July 19.

15/ Union witnesses Greene and Al Jones testified, in contradiction, that no mention was made of the "package" deal at the 1984 sessions. Greene insists it was not mentioned until March 20, 1985 when Wagner mentioned that there could be no AWS agreement separate and apart from an agreement for the ACS unit. The undersigned is persuaded that management did previously declare that a total agreement must be negotiated, inclusive of an arrangement for the alternative work schedule. Weight is attached to the fact that both Harkins and Pfeiffer made notes of meetings confirming that the Union was apprised of the connection between AWS and other terms applicable to ACS. Moreover, the record reflects no discussion or consent to consider them separate agreements. Although it is true that later in February, 1985 management submitted a "proposed agreement" for AWS in ACS, it was never signed and no date of implementation was specified. Moreover, the subsequent implementation of a few work rules at ACS is not necessarily supportive of the Union's contention in this regard.

agreed to an 8:15 a.m. starting time. Except for minor items as correct spelling and the like, the parties agreed on the alternative work schedule for ACS. The three issues remaining, and which were unresolved, concerned food and drinks at the work place, an electronic bulletin board for employee notices, and radios for employees. In January, 1985 the parties submitted the unresolved issues to the Federal Services Impasse Panel.[16]

24. Record facts disclose that some items, which were agreed to by the parties concerning the ACS unit, were implemented. Thus, a work rule was implemented excluding permanent employees from being required to sign in and out; it was agreed a cork board would be provided and notices must be placed therein and nothing would be hung or taped on walls: that nobody would turn machines on or off unless authorized.[17]

25. On February 21, 1985 the Union received a proposed agreement for AWS in ACS. In March, Sandra Coffman told Greene that the AWS provisions were agreed to, but no commitment was made as to date of implementation. She agreed to bring the AWS items with her to a meeting scheduled for March 20. The proposed agreement (G.C. Exhibit 17) set forth the alternative work schedule provisions but omitted the date for implementation thereof. It also left blank the date when it would become effective. It was also unsigned and not initialed.

26. On March 20, 1985 Greene and two other Union representatives met with Wagner as scheduled. The latter mentioned the three unresolved issues as to ACS. The Union did not agree to the language concerning those items, and it suggested these issues be tabled and that the parties should sign an agreement re AWS. Wagner stated that there would be no AWS agreement in view of the unresolved ACS issues. The remaining three issues in respect to working rules at ACS were never resolved, and the parties continued to negotiate thereon.

[16] The parties subsequently agreed to continue negotiations on these issues and the submission to the Impasses Panel was withdrawn.

[17] This was not deemed to be a rule about which the parties had to negotiate or change. The parties understood that no employee should tamper with equipment.

Conclusion

The key issues for determination herein are twofold: (1) Whether Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) & (5) of the Statute by failing and refusing to execute an agreement re alternative work schedules (AWS) for the Data Services Staff; (2) Whether Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) & (5) of the Statute by failing and refusing to execute an agreement re AWS for the Automated Collection System Branch (ACS).

Under Section 7114(b)(5) of the Statute an obligation is imposed upon an agency to execute an agreement reached with the exclusive representative. Thus, the statutory provision in that regard states as follows:

> "(b) The duty of an agency and an exclusive representative to negotiate in good faith under subsection (a) of this Section shall include the obligation-
> "(5) if agreement is reached, to execute on the request of any party to the negotiation of a written document embodying the agreed terms, and to take such steps as are necessary to implement such agreement."

It becomes clear from the foregoing statutory language that an imposition is placed upon a party to sign a document provided that an agreement is reached after negotiations thereon. The central dispute, which is at the heart of the issues herein, revolves around a determination as to whether the Union and Respondent actually negotiated an agreement concerning alternative work schedules for the Data Services Staff and the Automated Collection System Branch. If such agreements were reached with respect to the units herein, and were deemed to be operative agreements to be executed, the agency may be faulted for not signing same in such instances.18/ See and compare American Federation of

18/ In the case of the ACS section, the collateral issue is posed as to whether any agreement reached re alternative work schedules, if it be part of the overall package for ACS, should have been executed separately by Respondent.

Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3732 and Department of Transportation, Maritime Administration, U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, Kings Point, N.Y., 16 FLRA No. 50.

(1) General Counsel contends that, with respect to the Data Services Staff, the parties reached an agreement as to the alternative work schedules which was embodied in a written instrument and submitted for typing and execution. It is argued that for the first time, in April, 1985, Respondent raised the point that no agreement seemed necessary and thus none was needed. Further, that no disagreement with the terms of the AWS agreement were raised theretofore by Respondent, and management was only attempting to escape its obligation to execute the instrument.

While no basis may have existed for Wagner's conclusion in April, 1985 that he believed the AWS issue for Data Services had been resolved to Wagner's satisfaction, I am not persuaded that, in fact, a meeting of the minds took place in respect to this work condition. Record facts establish that, at the outset of negotiations in May, 1984, Respondent manifested concern re the applicability of AWS for computer operators. Management continued to express misgivings about the computer operators utilizing the alternative work schedules. Since they worked three shifts, it was questioned whether such schedules were a feasible arrangement for these employees.

It is true that the Union drafted a proposed agreement re AWS for the Data Services Staff which made provision for computer operators on rotating shifts to work a specified number of hours. Moreover, Walton testified it was his "feeling" that the parties came to an agreement in July, 1984 re AWS for this unit. However, I am not convinced that there was an express agreement or understanding in this regard in view of the doubts declared by Respondent as to the coverage of computer operators. At most it appears to the undersigned there was a misunderstanding concerning the sentiment expressed by Coffman that all "seemed to be okay." It may be argued that such declaration signified the parties had reached agreement re AWS for this group. However, record facts disclose that, apart from the fact that the proposed terms were not initialed, the parties had not signified to each other that the dispute regarding the computer operators had been resolved. Thus, I am constrained to conclude that no final agreement had been reached re the alternative work schedules for the Data Services Staff; that Respondent's refusal or failure to sign an agreement embodying such schedules was not violative of Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

(2) It is asserted by the General Counsel that the parties reached an agreement in March, 1985 concerning AWS for the ACS section; that the failure or refusal by Respondent to execute such agreement constituted an unfair labor practice. The essential terms re the alternative work schedule, as applicable to the ACS unit, were allegedly agreed upon by January, 1985 and no major modifications were necessary. Respondent challenges the contention that it was required to sign the AWS agreement even if it be conceded that the parties agreed to these schedules for the ACS branch.[19] The principal argument advanced by Respondent is that negotiations for the ACS unit were meant to be a complete package; that the alternative work schedules for that unit were a part of the working conditions negotiated for ACS; and that the two were not separable or to be bargained separately.

It is true that by February, 1985 the parties had agreed to the alternative work schedules for ACS employees. While most of the other terms for this unit had been resolved, there were three main issues which had become the "bone of contention" between the Union and management: food and drink at the work place, electronic bulletin boards for employee notices, and radios for employees. These matters, although submitted to the Impasses Panel and then withdrawn, were never resolved. Thus, in March, 1985 Negotiations for the ACS Branch had not been concluded, and a complete agreement was never reached covering all the terms and conditions for that unit. Moreover, management did state at the various bargaining sessions in 1984 that AWS would be part and parcel of an agreement embracing other terms applicable to ACS. There was no mutual understanding or written confirmation upholding the Union's view that an AWS agreement was to be a separate one and independent of other negotiable conditions for these employees. I am satisfied that alternative work schedules were part of negotiations for the entire unit; that management so declared to the union on various occasions during negotiations; and that Respondent indicated to the Union representatives that no separate agreement would be made re alternative work schedules for ACS. Accordingly, I conclude that Respondent did not breach the duty imposed upon it under 7114(b)(5) of the Statute by failing or refusing to sign the agreement embodying alternative work schedules for the Automated Collective System unit. Accordingly, I also conclude Respondent did not violate Section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.20/[19] Respondent also raises an issue of timeliness in respect to filing the charge concerning the failure to negotiate in good faith and execute the AWS agreement for the ACS Branch. It is urged that, if an unfair labor practice occurred, it took place in March, 1984 and thus the occurrence was more than 6 months before the charge was untimely filed on April 19, 1985. Accordingly, Respondent argues, said charge was untimely filed under Section 7118(a)(4)(A) of the Statute. I do not agree. The significant date for the purpose of calculating the 6 month limitation period, is March 20, 1985. This is the date when it is alleged the unfair labor practice occurred, i.e. the refusal to execute the AWS agreement for ACS. The Complaint is predicated thereon. Since the charge was filed within one month thereafter, I conclude it was timely filed under 7118(a)(4)(A).

Having concluded Respondent did not violate the Statute as far as, it is recommended that the Authority adopt the following Order:

Case No. 3-CA-40176

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD UNION

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority based on the Regional Director's "Order Transferring Case to the Authority" in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The complaint alleges that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by unilaterally rejecting provisions of the parties' collective bargaining agreements and Memorandum of Understanding, all of which authorized payment of travel and per diem expenses, and by refusing to negotiate with the Charging Party regarding payment of travel and per diem expenses.

II. Background

The Charging Party is the exclusive representative for two separate professional and nonprofessional units of the Respondent's employees. Separate collective bargaining agreements were negotiated covering the two units. The agreements were executed on August 1, 1980 for three-year terms. On July 8, 1983, the parties agreed to extend the agreements until new agreements were reached or until 30 days after either party notified the other of a desire to terminate.

Each of the agreements contained the following provisions relative to the payment of travel and per diem expenses.

> (a) Official Time - In accordance with existing law, official time has the same meaning as when an employee is otherwise on official duty status and shall include entitlements to payment for such time, travel, per diem and other benefits. In the event the FLRA or a court modifies the existing law, this Article will be reopened upon the request of either party regarding the employees['] entitlement to travel, per diem and other benefits.
> (b) Administrative Leave - Administrative leave is leave granted which is not charged to annual, sick, or leave without pay. Employees on such leave shall not be entitled to travel or per diem.

In September 1983, the parties executed a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) containing ground rules governing the parties' negotiations for new collective bargaining agreements for both units. Section 1 of the MOU provided as follows:

> 1. The NLRBU may have up to five bargaining committee members on official time for scheduled negotiating sessions regardless of the number of management committee members;[1] at its option, the NLRBU may have a sixth committee member present, not on official time, and share the committee's administrative leave among such six members. The foregoing shall not apply where the parties agree to negotiate in subcommittee.
> [1] Whenever bargaining sessions are held in a field office site as provided in paragraph 3 herein, the NLRBU may have up to four bargaining committee members on official time and one bargaining committee member on administrative leave. A sixth bargaining committee member may be present and share only in administrative leave as noted above.

since September 1983, the parties were engaged in negotiating new collective bargaining agreements. As of the date of the stipulation in this case, no new agreements had been reached.

Payments of travel and per diem expenses were made by the Respondent until January 26, 1984. At that time, the Respondent informed the Charging Party that it would no longer make such payments on the basis that payment of travel and per diem expenses was not in the primary interest of the Government and the Respondent was precluded by law from making such payments. The Respondent then offered to bargain over the impact and implementation of its decision to no longer make payments and apparently rejected the Charging Party's claim that the decision itself was a negotiable matter. The parties met and reached agreement on the Charging Party's impact and implementation proposals. During the bargaining sessions which followed the Respondent's decision to stop paying travel and per diem expenses, the Charging Party reduced its bargaining team from five members to three and also paid the travel and per diem expenses of the employees acting as its negotiators.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent argues basically that payments of travel and per diem expenses are contrary to law and therefore the refusal to make such payments is not a violation of the Statute; that it acted lawfully in refusing to negotiate over whether payment of travel and per diem expenses is in the primary interest of the Government; and that under the collective bargaining agreements, the provisions relating to travel and per diem expenses could be reopened by either party if the Authority or a court modified existing case law on the subject matter as occurred here.

The General Counsel takes the position that the Respondent's agreement to pay travel and per diem expenses is enforceable under the Statute in the absence of any showing that such matter is inconsistent with Federal law or is not a condition of employment. Therefore, the General Counsel asserts that the Respondent's repudiation of its agreement to make such payments and its further declaration that the refusal to make such payments was nonnegotiable constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. To remedy this conduct, the General Counsel requests that the Respondent be ordered to make whole any unit employees who expended funds for their travel and per diem expenses for negotiations after January 26, 1984. The General Counsel also requests a nationwide posting of the remedial notice.

The Charging Party essentially argues that the Respondent unlawfully terminated payment of travel and per diem expenses and requests that an appropriate remedy include retroactive payment of travel and per diem to the Charging Party. As to the language of the provisions in the collective bargaining agreements permitting their reopener upon modification of case precedent, the Charging Party argues that rather than reopening the agreements and allowing negotiations to take place, the Respondent chose to abrogate the provisions and refuse to bargain.

In an amicus curiae brief filed by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), it is argued that an agency's decision to authorize payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances is outside the scope of bargaining under the Statute. Here, OPM argues, the Respondent was correct in abrogating the provisions of the agreements calling for payment of travel and per diem expenses.

IV. Analysis

Turning first to the Respondent's contentions that payment of travel and per diem expenses is contrary to law, and that the Respondent did not unlawfully refuse to bargain over whether such payments are in the primary interest of the Government, the Authority found in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986), that agencies have discretion under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and implementing regulations to determine whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds. Further, the Authority held that the exercise of such discretion is subject to negotiations.[1] The Authority noted, however, that determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and per diem expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulations would have to be made on a case-by-case basis.

[1] See also American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of Federal Grain Inspection Locals and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service, 21 FLRA No. 21 (1986) and National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 21 FLRA No. 19 (1986), in which proposals authorizing payment of various travel and per diem expenses were found to be within the duty to bargain.

In this case, the parties had negotiated for the payment of travel and per diem expenses and had included such provisions in their collective bargaining agreements, which were extended pending the negotiation of new collective bargaining agreements, and had also included such payments in the MOU covering ground rules for the negotiations. In Department of Defense Dependents Schools System, 21 FLRA No. 125 (1986), the Authority concluded that an agency's conduct in repudiating provisions of a negotiated agreement authorizing the payment of travel and per diem expenses violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. Similarly, in Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 124 (1986), the Authority found that the unilateral termination and repudiation of a memorandum of understanding setting forth ground rules for upcoming negotiations which provided for the payment of travel and per diem expenses of employees serving as the union's negotiators violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. On the same basis, the Authority finds that the Respondent's repudiation of the agreements and the MOU in this case violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

As to the Respondent's contention that it had the right to reopen the provisions of the agreements as a result of the modification of existing law,2/ there is no evidence that the Respondent had in fact reopened the agreements or requested to do so. The language of the "Official Time" provisions of the agreements, as set forth above, specifies

2/ The modification of existing law referred to by the Respondent is the United States Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), in which the Court found that section 7131(a) of the Statute does not entitle employees on official time to the payment of travel and per diem expenses. Subsequent to that decision, of course, the Authority found the authorization of payment for travel and per diem expenses to be within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, supra.

that "[i]n the event the FLRA or a court modifies the existing law, this Article will be reopened upon the request of either party regarding the employees['] entitlement to travel, per diem and other benefits." The stipulated facts here indicate that the parties were engaged in negotiations for new collective bargaining agreements commencing in September 1983 and that payments of travel and per diem expenses were made by the Respondent until January 26, 1984. At that time, the Respondent informed the Charging Party that payments would no longer be made based upon its decision that such payments could not be certified as being in the primary interest of the Government. The Authority does not view such notification to the Charging Party as a request to reopen the agreements. However, even if it could be found that the provisions of the agreements had been reopened, the Respondent's conduct would still be a violation of the Statute. As previously noted, determinations as to whether and under what circumstances travel related to labor-management relations activities is sufficiently within the interest of the United States so as to constitute official business for which employees may receive appropriate expenses from Federal funds is within the duty to bargain. Here, when the Respondent notified the Charging Party of its unilateral decision to no longer make such payments, it also rejected the Charging Party's assertion that the Respondent was obligated to bargain over the decision itself. Instead, the Respondent chose to limit bargaining only to the effects of its decision to discontinue the payment of travel and per diem expenses. Such conduct is contrary to the Respondent's duty to bargain in good faith in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

V. Remedy

The General Counsel has requested that there be a nationwide posting of the remedial unfair labor practice notice and that the Respondent be ordered to make whole any unit employee who expended funds for travel and per diem expenses in connection with negotiations after January 26, 1984. The Charging Party, on the other hand, requests that it be given retroactive payment for the amount spent on travel and per diem expenses which, the parties stipulated, was taken from union membership dues funds.

As noted above, the Respondent paid travel and per diem expenses until January 26, 1984. Thereafter, the Charging Party made such payments to unit employees who served as its negotiators. In our view, it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to issue an order requiring the Respondent to make whole the Charging Party for those travel and per diem expenses which it incurred by reimbursing the affected employees who should have received such payments directly from the Respondent. A contrary conclusion would result in a windfall to the Respondent for its unlawful conduct. Such an order assumes, of course, that payment of the travel and per diem expenses involved would be consistent with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations. Further, although it does not appear from the record before us that bargaining unit employees themselves expended funds for their travel and per diem expenses, in the event that there are such employees who either did not receive the payments to which they were entitled or were not compensated fully for such expenses, we shall order the Respondent to reimburse them for the travel and per diem expenses they incurred upon their submission of properly documented claims for such payments. These payments too must be consistent with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations.

As requested, we shall also order a nationwide posting of the remedial notice. The Charging Party represents two nationwide units of the Respondent's employees, professional and nonprofessional, and therefore the Respondent's conduct in unilaterally repudiating provisions in the agreements covering the employees in those units can be effectively remedied only by an Order which requires the posting of the remedial notices wherever the affected employees in such units are situated.

VI. Conclusion

The Authority concludes that the Respondent's repudiation of the collective bargaining agreements and the MOU and its subsequent refusal to bargain in good faith violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute. The Authority shall therefore issue the following Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Repudiating the terms of the 1980 collective bargaining agreements and the September 1983 Memorandum of Understanding negotiated with the National Labor Relations Board Union, the exclusive representative of units of its professional and nonprofessional employees, which authorize payment of travel and per diem expenses to unit employees.

(b) Failing or refusing to bargain with the National Labor Relations Board Union, the exclusive representative of units of its professional and nonprofessional employees, concerning payment for travel and per diem expenses to unit employees.

(c) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Comply with the terms of the 1980 collective bargaining agreements and the September 1983 Memorandum of Understanding negotiated with the National Labor Relations Board Union, the exclusive representative of units of its professional and nonprofessional employees, which authorize payment of travel and per diem expenses to unit employees.

(b) Negotiate upon request of the National Labor Relations Board Union concerning payment for travel and per diem expenses to unit employees.

(c) Make the National Labor Relations Board Union whole for the costs it incurred by paying the travel and per diem expenses of bargaining unit employees who acted as its negotiators after January 26, 1984, for which the employees otherwise would have been entitled to reimbursement directly by the Respondent.

(d) Pay travel and per diem expenses, consistent with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations, to all bargaining unit employees who submit or previously submitted appropriate claims for such payments for negotiations which occurred after January 26, 1984, to the extent that such expenses have not been reimbursed by the National Labor Relations Board Union.

(e) Post at all its facilities where bargaining unit employees represented by the National Labor Relations Board Union are located, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(f) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 25, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondents had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. The Respondents and the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision, and the General Counsel filed an opposition to the Respondents' exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation that the complaint be dismissed.

In adopting the Judge's conclusion, we note particularly the Judge's findings, with which we agree, that the Respondents here in fact fully complied with the arbitrator's award, and that in light of all the facts and circumstances presented, the Respondents acted promptly enough, and did not engage in any dilatory tactics, in implementing the award. Thus, we do not agree with the General Counsel's assertion that the "standard" applied by the Judge in reaching her conclusion was one of gross negligence or deliberate delay.*/

IT IS ORDERED that the complaint in Case No. 9-CA-40337 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge of an unfair labor practice filed on July 20, 1984, and amended on October 1 and October 5, the Regional Director of Region IX of the Federal Labor Relations Authority (hereinafter, the Authority) investigated the charge and, on October 30, served the complaint initiating this action. The complaint was amended on November 13. Answers were served on November 15 and 29.

The amended complaint alleges, as to the Social Security Administration (SSA) that since on or about February 13, 1984, SSA has failed to comply with an arbitration award by failing to reinstate a grievant with full pay and with reinstitution of all other perquisites in accordance with the arbitration award and/or by complying in a dilatory manner. By such acts and conduct, it is alleged that SSA has failed and is failing to comply with section 7122(b) of the Statute, as modified by section 7121(f), and thereby has engaged in and is engaging in unfair labor practices within the meaning of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[1]

As to the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) it is alleged that DHHS has not processed the documentation necessary to effectuate the arbitration award at issue and/or has processed such documentation in a dilatory manner which has precluded prompt compliance with such award by SSA. By such acts and conduct, it is alleged that DHHS has interfered with SSA's obligation to comply with section 7122(b) of the Statute to implement and effectuate final and binding arbitration awards that result from SSA's collective bargaining agreement with the Charging Party, and thereby has engaged in unfair labor practices within the meaning of sections 7116(a)(1), (5) and (8) of the Statute.[1]

[1] The pertinent statutory provisions are as follows:

> (b) If no exception to an arbitrator's award is filed under subsection (a) of this section during the 30-day period beginning on the date of such award, the award shall be final and binding. An agency shall take the actions required by an arbitrator's final award. The award may include the payment of backpay (as provided in section 5596 of this title).
> § 7121. Grievance procedures
> (f) In matters covered under sections 4303 [pertaining to actions based on unacceptable performance] and 7512 [pertaining to certain adverse actions such as removals] of this title which have been raised under the negotiated grievance procedure in accordance with this section, section 7703 of this title pertaining to judicial review shall apply to the award of an arbitrator in the same manner and under the same conditions as if the matter had been decided by the [Merit Systems Protection] Board. . . .
> [Section 7703 provides that the Director of OPM may obtain judicial review upon a determination that an error was made in interpreting a civil service law, rule, or regulation and that the error would have a substantial impact.]

Respondents admit that there has been an arbitration proceeding under the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement with the Charging Party over a termination, but deny any violations concerning it.

A hearing was held on December 20, 1984, in Seattle, Washington. The parties appeared, entered into a stipulation of facts, examined witnesses, and adduced exhibits. Briefs were filed on February 3, 1985, by the General Counsel and on February 4 by Respondents. Based upon the record made in this case, my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law and recommend the entry of the following order.

Findings of Fact[2]

Background facts

1. At all times material herein, DHHS has been and is an agency and SSA an organizational subcomponent thereof, within the meaning of section 7103(a)(3) of the Statute.

> § 7116. Unfair labor practices

> > (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;
> > . . .
> > (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter; . . . or

[2] The following abbreviations will be used herein. "Tr." refers to the transcript of the hearing. "Jt. 1" refers to the stipulation entered into by the parties, with the exhibits thereto indicated by a parenthetical reference as, for example, "Jt. 1(9)(a)." "G.C. Exh." refers to exhibits of the General Counsel and "R. Exh." to those of Respondents. "G.C. Br." refers to the brief of the General Counsel and "R. Br." to that of Respondents.

The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the transcript is granted.

2. At all times material herein, the Charging Party (also referred to herein as the Union) has been and is a labor organization within the meaning of section 7103(a)(4) of the Statute.

3. At all times material herein, the Union has been certified as the exclusive representative of an appropriate nationwide consolidated unit within the meaning of section 7112 of the Statute. The unit includes employees employed in SSA's Seattle and Renton Districts.

4. At all times material herein, SSA and the Union have been parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering employees in the unit. The agreement includes a grievance procedure culminating in final and binding arbitration.

5. On or about April 26 and 29, 1983, in accordance with the collective bargaining agreement of the parties, an arbitration was held before Arbitrator George Schatzki in the matter of the Madge Wolfe termination. Ms. Wolfe is a member of the bargaining unit and has been an employee of SSA since 1970. At the time of her termination she was serving as a Service Representative at SSA's Renton Branch Office. Prior to her termination, Ms. Wolfe was a permanent career employee of SSA. Her termination was effective November 26, 1982, and was grieved by the Union.

6a. On July 13, 1983, the arbitrator issued a preliminary opinion and award directing that Ms. Wolfe be reinstated and that she have a fitness-for-duty examination. He also directed the restoration, retroactive to November 26, 1982, of all the perquisites of her position other than back pay. The arbitrator retained jurisdiction over the case to address any issues not voluntarily resolved following the examination.

b. The opinion stated that the arbitrator was "fully persuaded that at the time Madge Wolfe was discharged, she was not performing her job adequately;" that her supervisors acted in good faith and put in a great deal of effort to help her improve; but that they should have realized that a fitness-for-duty examination was called for pursuant to SSA's Personnel Guides for Supervisors. See pages 4 and 5 of Jt. 1(1).

c. The opinion stated that she should receive pay at her GS-7 rate "during the period between the Monday following management's receiving the Opinion and Award and the time the course of action following the examination [was] implemented." See page 6 of Jt. 1 (1). No other time limits were set by the arbitrator.

7. SSA received the July 13, 1983 opinion and award of the arbitrator on July 15 (a Friday). Pamela Smith, the SSA Branch Chief for the Human Resource Management Branch in the Regional Office for Region 10 had been the management representative at the arbitration and had some responsility for implementing the July 13 award. She was confused by its interim nature, and the fact that Ms. Wolfe was to be reinstated at once with no backpay but all other perquisites. SSA felt that "the most expeditious thing to get her into pay was to do a temporary appointment" (Tr. 124).

Ms. Smith personally took the papers to accomplish this over to the necessary authorizing and implementing officials. Ms. Wolfe was reinstated into a pay status on Monday, July 18.

8. Within the next couple of weeks discussions were held as to where Ms. Wolfe should be placed. It was decided to place her in a less stressful position, in another office. The Union was informed and interposed no objection.

9. During the same time frame, Ms. Smith proceeded to resolve questions about this "very unusual award" (Tr. 126). Advice was sought from SSA's central office, from DHHS, and the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) in Washington, D.C.

10a. The Union raised a question with management officials about the appropriateness of a temporary appointment for Ms. Wolfe in that there is a significant difference in perquisites, the most critical one being, in Ms. Wolfe's case, her ineligibility for group health insurance. As a result of the temporary appointment, she was forced to take insurance with a private plan, Blue Shield, with higher premiums. Also, career employees are covered under and pay into the Civil Service Retirement System (CSRS) whereas temporary employees make so-called FICA payments into and are covered under the Social Security Act. Also, time served in a temporary appointment does not count towards longevity for retirement purposes under the CSRS and does not apply towards tenure for purposes of promotion and within-grade salary increases. Also, temporary employees are not eligible for promotion, reassignment, or transfer as are career employees. Also, as a career employee, Ms. Wolfe had been eligible for and had carried group life insurance (FEGLI) for which she was ineligible as a temporary employee. The Union urged conversion of the appointment to permanent career.

b. SSA found that the temporary appointment was also creating problems for it. Therefore, SSA came to a decision and an agreement with the Union to convert Ms. Wolfe to a career appointment "in order to get all those back benefits paid" (Tr. 127). This decision was reached in late August 1983 by Ms. Smith, after getting approval from the Regional Personnel Office.

c. The necessary papers to effect this conversion were received by DHHS on September 29, 1983. A number of personnel actions had to be processed to effect the conversion. See Jt. 1 (3(a)-(f)) and paragraph 7 to the Stipulation. The computer system was unable to process them; and permission had to be sought to prepare them manually.

d. The Regional Personnel Officer signed the necessary conversion papers on October 4, 5 and 31, 1983. The conversion became effective on October 5. Ms. Wolfe was placed on leave without pay (LWOP) for the period November 26, 1982 to July 18, 1983. Health benefits were first deducted from her paychecks for the pay period ending October 15, 1983.

FICA payments were deducted through the pay period ending October 29, 1983 after which Civil Service Retirement was deducted.

11a. In accordance with applicable procedures of the Federal Personnel Manual, SSA set up the required fitness-for-duty examination and convened a panel, including a Public Health Service physician. The panel had to determine what type of examination was appropriate, whether a clinical or psychiatric one. The panel determined that there was no basis for a psychiatric examination. Accordingly, the employee was given a neurological fitness-for-duty examination. Management asked the neurologist if he thought a psychiatric examination was warranted. He determined that there was no such need and that the employee was fit for duty.

b. On November 23, 1983, SSA informed the arbitrator that two doctors had agreed that Ms. Wolfe was fit for duty.

c. On November 30, 1983, the Union wrote to the arbitrator to complain of the absence of a psychiatric examination. The Union asked the arbitrator to review the records of a psychiatrist whom Ms. Wolfe had consulted.

d. Apparently SSA did not inform the arbitrator, before his supplemental opinion and final award, that it had sought a psychiatry examination and been told that there was no need for one.

12. On December 15, 1983, the arbitrator issued a supplemental opinion and final award. According to the arbitrator, the examining doctors agreed that Ms. Wolfe was presently "neurologically capable of performing duties." See Jt. 1 (4). The arbitrator expressed surprise that a psychiatric examination had not been ordered, since it appeared that her performance problems could have been the product of a mental problem, and the Union had requested one. Expressing the view that SSA, for the second time, had chosen not to give Ms. Wolfe the examination she should have had, the arbitrator declined to order one himself and, instead, ordered that "Ms. Wolfe be reinstated with full back pay and with reinstitution of all other perquisites." See Jt. 1 (4).

13. SSA received the December 15, 1983, award on December 21. Upon receipt, SSA referred the award to DHHS which, in turn, referred it to OPM for determination as to whether to seek review in accordance with provisions of the Statute. OPM received the award on or about January 11, 1984.

14. On or about February 10, 1984, OPM verbally informed DHHS and SSA that it would not seek review of the July 13, 1983 and December 15, 1983 arbitration awards. In a letter to DHHS dated February 24, 1984, OPM stated its reasons for declining to seek review. One was that the OPM regulations relied upon by SSA for agency-ordered medical examinations had become obsolete and replaced by new ones which became final on February 10, 1984.

The beginning of the alleged unfair labor practices

15. By letter dated February 13, 1984, DHHS wrote to the arbitrator to request his reconsideration of his awards. On February 27, 1984, the arbitrator declined the request.

16. In early March 1984, SSA decided to move forward in complying with the final award. This entailed going back and dealing with the retroactive period of Ms. Wolfe's non-pay status, from November 1982 through July 1983; and sorting out what perquisites had and had not been given. Ms. Smith met with the SSA official responsible for handling the necessary personnel actions; discussed the case and some of the time frame problems; and asked that implementation take place "as expeditiously as possible" (Tr. 139).

17a. In handling personnel actions for SSA Region 10 employees, SSA requests them of DHHS's Region 10 Personnel Office which, in turn, processes them and forwards them to DHHS's Central Payroll for effectuation.

b. Actions involving retroactive application create a "different situation in terms of the Automated Personnel Data System" (Tr. 167). They require manual processing at the regional level of DHHS and submission of documents by mail to Central Payroll in order for Central Payroll to access the system.

c. The Wolfe case took a considerable amount of special procedures in Central Payroll, and special permission from Central Payroll to DHHS's Region 10 to cut the action manually.

18a. By requests for personnel action on March 26, 1984, SSA requested effectuation of the arbitration order of December 15, 1983, for back pay. On March 30, 1984, DHHS's Region 10 processed these requests. It normally takes 12 weeks for Central Payroll to process such corrective actions.

b. Although SSA and DHHS management officials had been discussing the award since July 1983, most of the discussions had dealt with the fitness-for-duty process.

19. About March 30, 1984, the Union filed an unfair labor practice charge over failure of management to implement the arbitration award. This was later withdrawn, in May 1984, as "possibly [being] premature" (Tr. 80-81). On at least five occasions between the filing of the charge and its withdrawal, a union official spoke with SSA Management Analyst, Richard Morris, about the Wolfe case and the charge. Mr. Morris pointed out that it takes a long time to process papers. The union official brought up the matter of Ms. Wolfe's having paid out her own money for health benefits and being due a refund. Mr. Morris did not understand the exact personnel problem that was involved, and discussed the matter with somebody in the Regional Personnel Office. Mr. Morris so informed the union official and told him, on April 25, that the Regional Personnel

Office was looking into it and determining what the proper course of action was and if, in fact, the premiums paid by Ms. Wolfe could be refunded.

20a. By letter dated May 31, 1984, the Union complained to Douglas McDonald, the DHHS Region 10 Personnel Officer about the status of Ms. Wolfe's retroactive salary and reinstatement of health benefits.

b. On June 1, 1984, DHHS's payroll liaison person for DHHS's Region 10, Lila Anderson, suggested that she take over for the two timekeepers involved in the matter and write up the necessary Error Notices. Error Notices are used to alert Central Payroll to handle a case as an exception to the automated process or to review a case for corrective action or follow up. One Error Notice was needed to determine how much back pay Ms. Wolfe was owed. Another Error Notice was needed to correct annual and sick leave notices. The preparation of these Error Notices took a lot of time to work out and necessitated calling the timekeepers where Ms. Wolfe had worked to get more information and to clarify points. Ms. Anderson could not determine all the deductions that would have to be made and decided she would have to rely on Central Payroll to do the final audit on the back pay involved.

c. On June 11, 1984, Ms. Anderson mailed to Central Payroll the Error Notices, with a request that they be given "priority" because the employee had already waited six months since a favorable arbitration award. (Jt. 1 (12(b)). Error Notices are forwarded by mail.

d. On June 12, 1984, DHHS replied to the Union's May 31 letter; explained that the necessary paperwork had been sent to Central Payroll during the first week in April and that normal processing time was 12 weeks; and assured the Union that DHHS had followed up with Central Payroll, taken additional steps to expedite the matter, and would continue to monitor it.

e. If there is some "urgent aspect to [a] case" that "deserves special treatment," DHHS follows up on a case before the normal 12-week processing time expires (Tr. 168 and see also Tr. 181).

21. On July 20, 1984, a union official wrote to Mr. McDonald, to complain about the lack of positive action since the Union's May 31 letter, to state that the unfair labor practice charge had been refiled, and to seek his help.

22. On July 26, 1984, Ms. Anderson began calling Central Payroll to check on the matter. On July 27, Ms. Anderson was told that more information was needed, specifically whether Ms. Wolfe had received unemployment compensation. Ms. Anderson replied that she thought she had. Ms. Lewis requested this information so that the State could be notified that Ms. Wolfe had been brought back and given back pay. Ms. Anderson called Ms. Wolfe who brought her a copy of the unemployment compensation papers within a couple of days. Ms. Anderson immediately mailed them off. Ms. Anderson did not know such papers were needed until July 27.

23. In addition to Ms. Anderson's inquiries, Mr. McDonald arranged a meeting with union representatives regarding effectuation of the arbitration award. The meeting was held on August 3, 1984. Present were two union officials and, for DHHS, Mr. McDonald, and the Chief of the Employment Branch for DHHS, Barbara Schmedling. At the meeting, the Union reviewed the history of the case, the delays involved, and the various issues remaining to be settled, such as reimbursement for premiums which Ms. Wolfe had paid Blue Shied. Neither Mr. McDonald nor Ms. Schmedling appeared clear as to what, if anything, would be done concerning Ms. Wolfe's premiums payments. At Mr. McDonald's request, Ms. Schmedling itemized some of the problems which had delayed payment to Ms. Wolfe. This included papers being misplaced and the movement of computers from Washington, D.C. to Rockville, Maryland, or vice versa. The meeting ended with Mr. McDonald agreeing to contact Central Payroll to try to get the matter resolved.

24. On or about August 23, 1984, Ms. Wolfe received a check in the amount of $7,397.59 representing back salary for the period November 1982 to July 1983 ($12,262), less Federal taxes ($1772.40), federal retirement contributions ($1248.55), Medicare ($137.22) and leave reimbursement ($1707.04). The leave reimbursement represents the amount of money Wolfe had received for her accrued annual leave at the time of her termination in November 1982. With the deduction of this money from her back pay, Ms. Wolfe was credited with 206.7 hours of annual leave and 68 hours of sick leave as of the payperiod September 29, 1984. No deduction was made for health benefits premiums. No reimbursement was made for Ms. Wolfe's Social Security (FICA) payments which she had made during the period of her temporary appointment.

25a. On September 10, 1984, the Union wrote to DHHS's Regional Personnel Officer and asked for an explanation of the check. The Union acknowledged, in its letter, that the "case has been difficult" (Jt. 1 (13)).

b. On September 19, 1984, DHHS's Regional Personnel Officer gave a written explanation and an offer to meet with the Union and Ms. Wolfe to clarify the explanation and answer questions. The explanation included a discussion of deductions for health benefits, Medicare, reimbursements for FICA and FEGLI, refund of unemployment benefits, leave deductions and restoration, and options for health benefits.

26. On September 24, 1984, a Labor Relations Specialist for SSA and DHHS arranged a meeting with Ms. Wolfe and a union representative to finish up any unresolved matters in the Wolfe case. Several management representatives attended, including Lila Anderson, Payroll Liaison for DHHS.

a. One unresolved matter concerned Ms. Wolfe's medical benefits. Ms. Anderson explained to Ms. Wolfe what her options were. Prior to her termination, Ms. Wolfe carried medical benefits with Washington Physicians Service (WPS), a group medical insurance plan. Upon her termination, she was informed by DHHS that WPS did not offer individual coverage. Ms. Wolfe then elected to enroll with Blue Shield, which did offer individual coverage. The cost of her health insurance, after November 26, 1982, was to be paid in full by Ms. Wolfe. Her premiums under Blue Shield were $71.05 per month. Under the arbitration award, Ms. Wolfe was entitled to reinstatement with WPS retroactive to November 27, 1982, but had to pay premiums to WPS for this retroactive period. Following the meeting, DHHS wrote a letter, dated September 24, 1984, to Blue Shield asking for assistance in refunding the dues paid by Ms. Wolfe to Blue Shield "as soon as possible," for the period she paid (January through June 1983). See Jt. 1 (16). Blue Shield refunded the dues to Ms. Wolfe on October 22, 1984; and Ms. Wolfe reimbursed DHHS for the retroactive premiums due to WPS on October 29. DHHS had agreed, at the September 24 meeting, to hold off any collection of the retroactive premiums from Ms. Wolfe until she received a refund from Blue Shield. See Tr. 96-97 and 115-117. On or about October 11, 1983, Ms. Wolfe's enrollment in WPS was reinstated.

b. Another unresolved matter was leave. Ms. Anderson explained to Ms. Wolfe that 113 hours of her annual leave could not be put on the pay slip because they would result in an excess of annual leave that can be carried over. Ms. Anderson told Ms. Wolfe that the 113 hours could be placed in a restored leave account, or she might be able to receive cash for the 113 hours. Ms. Wolfe indicated that she would prefer cash.

c. On September 25, 1985, DHHS's Regional Personnel Officer sent a memorandum to the Supervisor Leave Unit approving the restoration of 113 hours of leave to Ms. Wolfe, and another to the Director Pay Systems Divisions seeking assistance in resolving the leave and health benefits problems of the Wolfe case and asking that Ms. Wolfe be paid a lump sum for her 113 hours of leave.

d. As it turned out, regulations prohibited a cash payment for the 113 hours. The 113 hours were placed in a restored leave account, from which Ms. Wolfe would receive payment within 44 or 51 days following her retirement, which apparently took place prior to the hearing. See Tr. 190, DHHS learned that the 113 hours would be placed in a restored leave account on October 11, 1984.

27. On October 10, 1984, the Union wrote to SSA that Ms. Wolfe had received credit for 240 hours of annual leave, but had not received her lump sum payment for her 113 hours or her FICA money refund. The Union explained that Ms. Wolfe had retirement plans which she could not finalize until all her pay problems were adjusted. The Union asked for advice as soon as possible as to when a final resolution could be reached on the payroll processing issues.

28. On November 11, 1984, the Union wrote to Mr. McDonald to complain about the failure to implement the arbitration award as to the FICA and 113 annual leave hours, and to seek his assistance. The Union did not learn that Ms. Wolfe would not get "a cash-out" for her 113 hours of annual leave until the day of the hearing.

29. On December 18, 1984, Ms. Wolfe received reimbursement from SSA for the FICA contribution which had been deducted from her salary while she was in a temporary appointment during the period July to October 1983. See paragraph 21 of Jt. 1, as explained at G.C. Br. 12.

30. There was "just nothing in the books" as to how Respondents had to proceed in this unusual, difficult, and complex case, involving issues not only of retroactive back pay (with which they had dealt before), but also adjustments for health benefits, life insurance, taxes, unemployment benefits and leave (Tr. 141 and see also Tr. 174).

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has not established, by a preponderance of the evidence,[3] that Respondents engaged in dilatory conduct in complying with an arbitration award, or that they have failed to comply with it.

In reaching this conclusion, the following facts of record have been most persuasive. In the first place, the arbitration award was bifurcated, with the initial award coming some five months before the final award. This presented difficulties for Respondents. In the preliminary award, an employee was found not to have been performing her job adequately at the time of her termination; but she was ordered reinstated with all perquisites but back pay, and directed to have a fitness-for-duty examination. In the final order, five months later and after a finding that she was fit for duty, the arbitrator ordered reinstatement with full back pay and reinstitution of all other perquisites.

Secondly, Respondents promptly complied with the only portion of the arbitration award with a clear time frame -- receiving pay at the grievant's GS-7 rate beginning the Monday following the receipt of the July 13, 1983 preliminary opinion and award. Respondents accomplished this by giving the grievant a temporary appointment, which was the most expeditious method available to comply with the award. The rest of the award concerned the restoration of pay and perquisites, with no indication of a time frame within which Respondents were to act. This serves to distinguish the case relied upon by the General Counsel at page 24 of the brief, SSA, Field Office Operations, New York Region, 2-CA-30127, decided by Judge Chaitovitz on June 8, 1984, wherein the arbitrator ordered backpay made be within 20 days.

Thirdly, having reinstated the grievant with full pay, Respondents had to face resolution of what was indisputably a difficult, complex matter of restoring all perquisites and back pay over a period of several years, some of which involved a temporary appointment and LWOP status. Social Security taxes, life and health insurance, unemployment benefits, and leave accumulation were among the issues to be resolved. These issues were complicated by Respondents' compliance with the preliminary award edict, that they get the employee back on the payroll the Monday following receipt of the award, which they accomplished by giving her a temporary appointment. This decision resulted in the employee paying into the Social Security system rather than the Civil Service one, losing leave and life insurance entitlements, and having to pay for private health benefits rather than less-expensive group health ones. While Respondents made this decision on their own, it was not done to deprive the grievant of any rights but, rather, to get her back on the payroll as expeditiously as possible. Furthermore, personnel actions to effect restoration of all these perquisites and payback could not simply be cut and processed. First, decisions had to be made on how to effectuate them, and involved consultations between various levels of management of SSA and DHHS. A further complication was that the computer system in use had to be accessed manually and normally takes 12 weeks to process corrective actions such as the ones here involved.

The final fact is that nothing in the record suggests any deliberate delay or gross neglect in effectuating the award. To the contrary, Respondents did take some steps to expedite it. And during the entire period, Respondents acted with compassion toward the employee and her job performance problems. The arbitrator found that the grievants' supervisors acted in good faith and put in a great deal of effort to help her improve, before finally reaching the decision to terminate her. On this record it was established that Respondents reinstated her in a job involving a less stressful situation, after consulting with the Union which voiced no objections.

The General Counsel cites, as an example of "unreasonable interference with compliance" with the award, the conduct, on February 13, 1984, of DHHS in soliciting the arbitrator to reconsider his decision. See G.C. Br. 20-21. The General Counsel correctly points out that nothing in the collective bargaining agreement or the Statute gives DHHS a right to seek reconsideration of an arbitrator's award.[4/] However, while this attempt by DHHS to obtain reconsideration may be characterized as a feckless one, it did not unduly delay the SSA decision, made in early March, to move forward in complying with the final award.

The General Counsel notes that the award had been the subject of discussion among Respondents since July 1983, and yet it took SSA until March 26, 1984 to complete the forms necessary to initiate effectuation of the December 13, 1983 final award. See G.C. Br. 21. However, most of the pre-March 1984 discussions dealt with the fitness-for-duty process, rather than the complications of restoring perquisites and backpay. Even the Union took the position, in discussions with management, to defer arguments regarding retroactivity until receipt of the final award. See Tr. 63.

[4/] In the case of terminations for performance deficiencies, the Statute gives only OPM appeal rights; and one Federal Court has held that even OPM is not permitted to seek reconsideration of arbitrators' decisions. See 5 U.S.C. 7121(f) and 7703 and Devine v. White, 697 F.2d 421, 112 LRRM 2374, 2379-2383 (C.A.D.C., Jan. 7, 1983).

The General Counsel also makes the point that, until her retirement, the grievant was not paid for 113 hours of excess annual leave placed in her restored leave account, and that the Union, despite two communications on the problem, was not kept advised on this issue. See G.C. Br. 23. Management officials were derelict in not keeping the Union advised on this issue. However, overall, management officials responded promptly to Union communications, which were numerous over the period of time here involved; and I do not find that this particular dereliction, in itself, lifts this case into the status of an unfair labor practice.

Superficially, taking a year to comply with an arbitrator's award would seem to be proof of an unfair labor practice. But the facts here show that Respondents did act promptly enough in starting up the process. While they could have probably moved it along at a faster rate, they were under no specific order to give it special, expedited treatment. The administrative process ground slowly, but surely; and full compliance with the award was eventually accomplished. There is no evidence that the employee suffered unduly from the delay. At most, it may have delayed her retirement plans somewhat.

Other issues have been raised by the parties. However, in view of the conclusions expressed above, that Respondents did not engage in dilatory tactics in complying with the arbitration award and have now fully complied therewith, the resolution of other issues is deemed to be unnecessary.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

Respondents have not engaged in the unfair labor practice alleged in the complaint.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that the complaint should be and hereby is dismissed.

DIGEST NOTES

At the time that the parties agreed upon ground rules for negotiating a local supplementary agreement, official time under § 7131 had been interpreted by the Authority and was understood by the parties to encompass related travel and per diem expenses. The parties agreed that official time would be granted "in accordance with [section] 7131(a)". Thereafter the activity initially paid the travel and per diem of union negotiators but reversed its position; then refused to pay additional travel and per diem expenses of union negotiators; and sought the return of those expenses which it alleged were erroneously paid. The U.S. Supreme Court and the Authority have subsequently held that under § 7131(a) there is no entitlement to travel expenses and per diem allowances merely by virtue of finding that official time is required. However, such payment is a negotiable matter.

In this case, the Authority held that since there was no requirement to grant travel and per diem under § 7131(a), the activity's refusal to do so did not constitute a § 7116(a)(8) violation. If there had been an allegation of a § 7116(a)(5) violation in the complaint, the Authority stated it would have found a violation. Finally, the activity violated § 7116(a)(1) by its failure and refusal to meet its obligation under an agreement with the exclusive representative to grant to employees representing the union in supplemental negotiations "in accordance with" § 7131(a) as it was understood by the parties at that time which included an agreement to pay travel and per diem expenses. Such actions interfered with the employee's protected rights under § 7102 "to form, join, and assist a labor organization".

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is a negotiable appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3) that requires the agency, first, to notify employees who are to be furloughed that they would be entitled to unemployment compensation for any furlough of more than five continuous days and, second, to offer those employees the opportunity to take their furlough on continuous days so as to qualify for unemployment compensation. Under the proposal, when an employee chooses to be furloughed on continuous days, management is not able to assign work to that employee during that period, even if management should determine that it is necessary for that employee to work. In this way, the proposal would restrict management's ability to determine when assigned work will be performed.

However, although the proposal directly interferes with management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work, the burden placed by the proposal does not constitute excessive interference with that right so as to render the proposal an "inappropriate" arrangement. The most significant impact on the agency's ability to accomplish its workload comes from management's own decision to furlough employees rather than from any consequences which might flow from implementation of the proposal. Whether employees are furloughed on a continuous or discontinuous basis, the amount of worktime lost due to furlough would be the same. Moreover, the proposal permits management to schedule furloughs so as to enable it to get its work done when that is necessary.

Contrary to the agency's allegations, the proposal would not directly interfere with management's right to furlough employees or determine its budget. Ultimately, Federal agencies must reimburse states for unemployment compensation received by Federal employees. Anything that increases an agency's obligation for unemployment compensation might have a fiscal impact on the agency and force the agency to take corrective action. However, it is not possible to know in advance how many, if any, employees would take advantage of the option afforded by the proposal. Even if employees choose to make their furloughs continuous and the agency thereby incurs some liability for unemployment compensation, it would not necessarily follow that there must be more and longer furloughs to make up for the savings lost. That would only be the result if the agency chooses that alternative from other possible actions it could take to achieve the necessary savings. Thus, contrary to the agency's contention, the proposal would not require management to increase the number of employees furloughed or the duration of their furloughs, or to initiate further RIF actions, even though it might make such a decision more probable. Similarly, the impact on the agency's budget is speculative. Even if the proposal ultimately results in increased agency liability for unemployment compensation, the proposal would not prevent management from achieving the necessary savings to meet the anticipated shortage of funds. (proposal 1)

Both the language and the legislative history of the Statute indicates that § 7106 was intended as a limitation on the scope of bargaining. Thus, contrary to the union's contention, the Authority is precluded from issuing a bargaining order where it is determined that a proposal violates management's rights. (footnote 8)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require management to assign work strictly on the basis of criteria specified in a guide to managers. The right to assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(B) includes the discretion to determine the particular employees to whom or positions to which work will be performed. Since the proposal would make it impossible for the agency to deviate from the criteria established in the document in assigning particular employees to perform work, the proposal directly interferes with management's right to assign work and does not constitute a procedure under § 7106(b)(2). Moreover, the proposal is not an appropriate arrangement under § 7106(b)(3) because through the arbitration process management's decision to assign work to a particular employee could be completely negated if such assignments were not strictly in accordance with the criteria. However, contrary to the agency's contention, the proposal does not interfere with its right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine its organization because the proposal does not require the agency to modify its internal structure. (proposal 1)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would require the agency to request government cars from GSA for the purpose of providing those cars to employees whose work involves travel. The mode of transportation to be used for accomplishing an agency's mission is a decision as to the "means" to be used for its accomplishment. The proposal is not an appropriate arrangement because it would completely negate the agency's § 7106(b)(1) right to decide the means to be used in the accomplishment of its mission, rather than merely ameliorating the adverse affect on employees of the agency's exercise of its rights. (proposal 2)

A proposal that would allocate available Government cars to employees on the basis of hardship is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2). The proposal contemplates a situation where there would be an insufficient number of cars available for employees' use as a result of the implementation of a temporary agency program. The proposal does not directly concern the technology, methods and means of performing work under § 7106(b)(1). Nor does the proposal appear to be inconsistent with the current GSA regulation [GSA Bulletin FPMR A-40, Supp.5, effective June 19, 1983] governing the assignment of cars to employees on official Government business. Accordingly, the agency did not meet its burden of proof for the compelling need for its regulation barring the proposal which the agency alleged was dictated by GSA regulations. (proposal 3)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would permit employees to secure GSA cars, or rental cars, under certain conditions for local transportation in the performance of their work. The proposal concerns and excessively interferes with management's right to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work, under § 7106(b)(1). However the agency did not support the compelling need for its regulation barring the proposal since, contrary to the agency, the applicable GSA regulations [GSA Bulletin FPMR A-40, Supp.5, effective June 19, 1983] does not appear to be inconsistent with the proposal. [p. 4]

A proposal is nonnegotiable that applies a preference, hardship and seniority test in determining which employee is to perform what work. The proposal would have the effect of interfering with management's discretion under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine the particular employees to whom work will be assigned. Moreover, the phrase "as far as possible" included in the proposal does not guarantee that management would retain its rights. Under the proposal, an arbitrator could overturn a manager's decision to assign work to a particular employee by concluding that the manager had not taken into account the factors specified in the proposal "as far as possible." The deputization of activity attorneys as Special Assistant U.S. Attorneys in order to prosecute misdemeanor offenses at the activity's supply center, did not change working conditions of unit employees. Bargaining unit employees had always been subject to prosecution by the U.S. Attorney for their unlawful acts committed at the supply center. The implementation of an agreement to deputize center attorneys in order for those attorneys to assist in the prosecution of misdemeanor offenses did not result in the imposition of any new penalties, new investigative procedures or regulations. Absence evidence that the activity's actions constituted a change in personnel policies, practices or matters affecting working conditions, no violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (5) was established.

DIGEST NOTES

The activity had a legitimate reason for requiring union negotiators at collective bargaining meetings to wear their uniforms when they were on-call as firefighters. Although a firefighter is not in a duty status during negotiations, he is subject to being recalled to full duty status at moment's notice. The response of firefighters must be instantaneous, and full readiness to respond in an appropriate uniform is critical to the efficient accomplishment of essential duties without undue delay. Thus the Authority adopted the Judge's conclusion that the activity did not violate § 7116(a)(1), (2) and (5) when it directed the union president to wear his firefighter uniform to a collective bargaining meeting; suspended him for three days for his refusal to do so; and required all employee/union negotiators who would otherwise be in a duty status to wear the firefighter uniform to collective bargaining meetings as a condition for being allowed official time to participate in such meetings.

ORDER DISMISSING PETITION FOR REVIEW

This case is before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations on a petition for review of negotiability issues filed by the Union. For the reasons indicated below, it has been determined that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and must be dismissed on that basis.

Under section 7117(c)(2) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the time limit for filing a petition for review of negotiability issues is 15 days after service on the Union of the Agency's allegation that the duty to bargain in good faith does not extend to the matter proposed to be bargained.

The Agency's allegation of nonnegotiability in this case apparently was served on the Union by mail on April 16, 1986. Therefore, under section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 which also are applicable to computation of the time limit here involved, the petition for review had to be filed, that is, received in the national office of the Authority, no later than the close of business on May 6, 1986. However, the petition for review was not filed until May 12, 1986, and thus was untimely.

Accordingly, as the Union's petition for review was untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, it is hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case arose as a result of the Respondent's refusal to grant certain employees travel expenses and per diem allowances in connection with their representing the Union in negotiations for a local supplemental agreement, during time they otherwise would have been in a duty status. This refusal is alleged to have violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute.[1] The Respondent also sought to reclaim money it had paid to other employees during an earlier round of the negotiations, and this is alleged to be an independent violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute. The issue is whether the employees were entitled to such travel and per diem expenses.

[1] Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) provides:

> § 7116. Unfair labor practices
> (a) For the purpose of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter;
> . . . .
> (8) to otherwise fail or refuse to comply with any provision of this chapter[.]

The Administrative Law Judge found that the Activity had committed the violations as alleged. The case is before the Authority now because the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

II. Facts

The Internal Revenue Service and the National Treasury Employees Union are parties to a Multi-District Agreement which covers the Columbia, South Carolina District. The undisputed evidence establishes that negotiations between the parties over a local supplemental agreement, as provided for by the Multi-District Agreement, took place during June and July of 1980. Ground rules for the negotiations included an agreement that official time would be granted "in accordance with [section] 7131(a)" of the Statute. Following the negotiations, various members of the Union negotiating team submitted travel vouchers claiming travel and per diem expenses covering the period of the negotiations. The Respondent paid travel and per diem expenses to three of the Union negotiators for the June negotiating sessions and later refused to pay other members of the team for sessions held in July. The Union paid the travel and per diem expenses for two members of its negotiating team for the July sessions that Respondent refused to pay. After paying travel and per diem expenses to the Union negotiators, the Respondent notified them that they had been paid erroneously and that they should return the money. The employees declined. The refusal to reimburse certain employees for travel and per diem expenses, and the attempt to recover money which the Respondent asserts it paid in error to other employees, led to the complaint.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge concluded that the Respondent failed to comply with section 7131(a) of the Statute,[2] in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, by refusing to reimburse travel expenses and per diem allowances to employees representing the Union in negotiations for the local supplemental agreement during the time they otherwise would have been in a duty status. He also found that the

§ 7131. Official time

Respondent's attempt to reclaim travel and per diem expenses paid to certain employees entitled to them constituted a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

IV. Exceptions to the Judge's Decision

The Respondent excepted to the Judge's reliance on decisions of the Authority which it contends are without support in the Civil Service Reform Act or its legislative history. The Respondent also contends that it is without legal authority to expend appropriated funds for travel and per diem expenses and also noted that two members of the Union negotiating team paid by the Union for the July negotiating sessions would receive double reimbursement if paid by the Respondent. On that basis, Respondent argues that since no expenses were incurred by these two members no 7ravel and per diem expenses were due. Finally, the Respondent takes the position that official time does not include travel and per diem expenses and can only be negotiated for during mid-term bargaining under section 7131(d) of the Statute.

V. Analysis

The questions to be answered here are (A) Does the official time requirement of section 7131 include travel expenses and per diem allowances alleged to have been improperly denied in this case; and (B) if not, what is the effect of the parties' agreement to grant official time "in accordance with [section] 7131(a)" which, at the time of that agreement and at the time of the denial of travel and per diem expenses, included travel and per diem according to existing case law?

After the Judge issued his Decision in this case, the United States Court of Appeals for the District of

(a) Any employee representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement under this chapter shall be authorized official time for such purposes, including attendance at impasse proceeding, during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status. The number of employees for whom official time is authorized under this subsection shall not exceed the number of individuals designated as representing the agency for such purposes.

Columbia Circuit ruled that the official time provisions of section 7131(a) of the Statute encompass the negotiation of local agreements supplementing master agreements where such local negotiations are authorized by the parties at the level of exclusive recognition. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO v. FLRA, 750 F.2d 143 (D.C. Cir., 1984).3/ The Authority has found itself constrained to follow the court's legal interpretation of the language of section 7131(a) of the Statute, for the reasons set forth in the court's opinion, Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 19 FLRA No. 17 (1985), and continues to follow that interpretation in cases such as this one. Thus, the employees negotiating on behalf of the Union were entitled to official time for the negotiations which occurred while they otherwise would be in a duty status.

(A) Prior to the United States Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms (BATF) v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983), the Authority had interpreted "official time" under section 7131(a) of the Statute as encompassing travel expenses and per diem allowances. See, for example, Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 264 (1979). However, in BATF, the Supreme Court concluded that the section 7131(a) obligation to provide official time does not encompass travel expenses and per diem allowances. Therefore, as they are not included within official time under section 7131, there is no entitlement to travel and per diem merely by virtue of a finding that official time is required because of negotiations for certain kinds of agreements. Thus, since there is no requirement to grant travel and per diem under section 7131(a), the refusal to do so cannot be a failure to comply with that section of the Statute. Therefore, the section 7116(a)(8) allegation of the complaint must be dismissed. However, in BATF the Court stated, "unions may presumably negotiate for such payments [of travel expenses and per diem allowances] in collective bargaining as they do in the private sector." 464 U.S. at 107, n. 17. The Authority has since determined that a union's proposal requiring the Agency to pay travel expenses incurred by employees using official time was not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation and therefore was within the duty to bargain. National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986).

3/ This decision reversed the Authority's position as set forth in Interpretation and Guidance, 7 FLRA 682 (1982).

petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). Thus, the remaining question is the effect of the parties' agreement to pay official time "in accordance with [section] 7131(a)."

(B) The parties agreed that employees representing the exclusive representative in negotiations for a local supplemental agreement would be granted official time "in accordance with [section] 7131(a)" of the Statute. At the time that the parties entered into this agreement, official time under section 7131 had been interpreted by the Authority and was understood by the parties to encompass related travel and per diem expenses. Moreover, the Respondent initially acted on that understanding when it paid some travel expenses in accordance with the parties' agreement. Therefore, the Authority finds that, in effect, the agreement encompassed payment of travel and per diem expenses.

There is no allegation in the complaint that the Respondent's refusal to pay travel and per diem to some employees, and its attempt to reclaim payments to others it determined had been "erroneously" paid, was a refusal to honor the negotiated agreement in violation of section 7116(a)(5) of the Statute. If there had been such an allegation, the Authority, noting particularly Respondent's statements that no payment for travel and per diem would be forthcoming, could have found that the Respondent's actions were contrary to the clearly understood meaning of the parties' agreement, and constituted a repudiation of the agreement amounting to a section 7116(a)(5) violation. See Great Lakes Program Service Center, Social Security Administration, Department of Health and Human Services, Chicago, Illinois, 9 FLRA 499 (1982), American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 88 (1985). Nevertheless, the Authority does find that the Respondent's actions amount to a violation of section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, as alleged, because the Respondent's failure and refusal to meet its obligation under an agreement with the exclusive representative of its employees to grant official time to employees representing the Union in supplemental negotiations "in accordance with" section 7131(a) of the Statute as it was understood by the parties at that time, which, as noted above, we find to include agreement to pay travel and per diem expenses, interfered with the employees' protected rights under section 7102 of the Statute "to form, join, and assist a labor organization" and to receive the benefit of those provisions of an agreement negotiated on their behalf by the exclusive representative. Adjutant General, State of Ohio, Ohio Air National Guard, Worthington, Ohio, 21 FLRA No. 124 (1986); Department of Defense, Dependents Schools System, 21 FLRA No. 125 (1986); Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 22 FLRA No. 25 (1986).

VI. Remedy

The Respondent paid travel and per diem expenses of Union representatives for the June 1980 negotiating sessions. Thereafter, the Charging Party made such payments to unit employees who served as its negotiators when the Respondent refused to do so. In our view, it will effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute to issue an order requiring the Respondent to make whole the Charging Party for those travel and per diem expenses which it incurred by reimbursing the affected employees who should have received such payments directly from the Respondent. Further, in the event that there are bargaining unit employees who either did not receive the payments to which they were entitled or were not compensated fully for such expenses, we shall order the Respondent to reimburse them for the travel and per diem expenses they incurred upon their submission of properly documented claims for such payments. See Office of the General Counsel, National Labor Relations Board, 22 FLRA No. 25 (1986).

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings made by the Judge at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms the rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision and the entire record, including the parties' contentions, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order only to the extent consistent with this decision.

In view of the above, the Authority concludes that the Respondent's refusal to pay travel expenses and per diem allowances to certain employees, and its attempt to reclaim such payments it had made to other employees, was not a failure or refusal to comply with the provisions of section 7131(a) of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(8). That allegation shall be dismissed. Such actions by the Respondent are found to have violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute, however, and an appropriate remedy shall be ordered.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is ordered that the Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Columbia District, Columbia, South Carolina, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Make the National Treasury Employees Union whole for the costs it incurred by paying the travel and per diem expenses of bargaining unit employees who acted as its negotiators in July 1980, for which the employees otherwise would have been entitled to reimbursement directly by the Respondent.

(b) Pay travel and per diem expenses, consistent with law and regulation, including the Federal Travel Regulations, to all bargaining unit employees who submit or previously submitted appropriate claims for such payments for negotiations which occurred in July 1980, to the extent that such expenses have not been reimbursed by the National Treasury Employees Union.[4]

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This is a proceeding under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 92 Stat. 1191, 5 U.S.C. 7101, et. seq., (hereinafter referred to as the Statute), and the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority, 5 C.F.R. Chapter XIV, §2410 et seq.

Pursuant to a charge filed September 30, 1980 by the National Treasury Employees Union (hereinafter called the Union and NTEU) against Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Columbia District, Columbia, South Carolina (hereinafter called IRS and Respondent) the General Counsel of the Federal Labor Relations Authority by the Regional Director for Region 4 issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing on October 21, 1980 which was thereafter amended on October 27, 1980. The Amended Complaint alleges that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute when it refused to reimburse employees who were representing the Union in negotiations for a Local Supplemental Agreement, for travel and per diem expenses incurred during during the course of the negotiations which were held during the time the employees otherwise would be in a duty status. The Amended Complaint further alleges that Respondent violated Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute by seeking to reclaim employees' travel and/or per diem expenses incurred during negotiations for the local supplemental agreement. Respondent filed an answer denying that if violated the Statute.

A hearing in this matter was conducted before the undersigned in Columbia, South Carolina. All parties were represented by counsel and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and argue orally. The parties were given an opportunity to file briefs, which have been fully considered.

Based on the entire record herein, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

The Internal Revenue Service and the National Treasury Employees Union are parties to a collective bargaining agreement covering the period from January 31, 1977 through January 31, 1981. The collective bargaining agreement is a Multi-District Agreement which includes Respondent's Columbia, South Carolina District.

The uncontroverted evidence establishes that on June 25, 26, 27, 30 and July 1, 2 and 3, 1980, the Union and Respondent met in Columbia, South Carolina for the purpose of negotiating a Local Supplemental Agreement to the Multi-District Agreement (herein MDA).1/ Representing IRS at negotiation meetings were Stephen Giroux, Chief of Personnel, Leo Chaussie, Chief of Taxpayer Service, Hugh Wagner, Group Manager and Joe Orzichowski, Chief Negotiator. All the management negotiators, except for Group Manager Wagner, worked in the Columbia, South Carolina office of Respondent. Wagner worked in the Greenville, South Carolina office and travelled to Columbia, South Carolina for the negotiations. Wagner received reimbursement from Respondent for his travel and per diem expenses incurred while engaged in these negotiations. The Union negotiating team was composed, at various times, of Wayne Golden, Lavon Hair, John Thompson, Ben Smith, Donzetta Lindsay, Loreta Pinion and Willmeta Dobbs. Hair worked in Respondent's Aiken, South Carolina office, Thompson worked in Respondent's Anderson, South Carolina office, Smith worked in Respondent's Charleston, South Carolina office and Dobbs worked in Respondent's Greenville, South Carolina office. Hair, Thompson, Smith and Dobbs travelled from their respective home cities to Columbia, South Carolina to negotiate the Local Supplemental Agreement. At each meeting NTEU and IRS had an equal number of negotiators.

Negotiations for the Local Supplemental Agreement commenced at approximately 10:00 a.m. on June 25, 1980. A ground rules agreement was reached by the parties at this initial negotiation session and all five articles were discussed. Negotiations continued through July 3, 1980, when a Local Supplemental Agreement was executed.[2]

Lavon Hair, NTEU Chapter 55 President and Chief Negotiator for the Union attended all the Local Supplemental Agreement negotiating sessions. Hair travelled by privately owned vehicle from Aiken, South Carolina to Columbia, South Carolina on June 25, 1980. Hair left Aiken, South Carolina at approximately 8:00 a.m. and arrived in Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 9:35 a.m., travelling some 59 miles. Hair remained in Columbia, South Carolina and engaged in negotiations on June 25, 26, 27, 1980. On June 27, 1980, Hair departed Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 3:40 p.m. and arrived in Aiken, South Carolina at approximately 5:15 p.m. Thus, from June 25, 1980 through June 27, 1980, Hair incurred both travel and per diem expenses in connection with the above-mentioned negotiations. Hair again travelled to Columbia, South Carolina by privately owned vehicle on June 30, 1980. He left Aiken, South Carolina at approximately 8:00 a.m. and arrived in Columbia, South Carolina at 9:35 a.m. Hair engaged in the negotiations through the execution of the Local Supplemental Agreement on July 3, 1980. At the conclusion of the negotiations, Hair left Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 3:40 p.m. and arrived in Aiken, South Carolina at approximately 5:40 p.m. Hair again incurred travel and per diem expenses for the period of June 30, 1980 to July 3, 1980 while he was engaged in negotiations in Columbia, South Carolina or travelling to engage in such negotiations.

Hair recorded the expenses he incurred while engaged in negotiations on his June 1980 and July 1980 travel vouchers. On or about July 15th or 16th, 1980, Hair received a travel check for his June travel expenses including the expenses incurred as a result of participating in the negotiations in Columbia, South Carolina. Hair did not receive reimbursement for the negotiating expenses incurred on July 1-3, 1980. On or about August 6, 1980, Hair received a memo from his Group Manager, D. F. Ramage advising that a disallowance of $104.55 was made from Hair's July, 1980 travel voucher due to the fact that Hair claimed mileage and per diem for District negotiations to which he was not entitled. Hair later received a Travel Voucher Action Notice, covering the period of July 1 through July 31, 1980, advising that his July travel voucher was approved in the amount of $146.80 and that $104.55 was disallowed, per a memo submited by Hair's Group Manager. Hair also received a letter from Stephen D. Giroux, Chief, Personnel Branch, which stated, in part, the following:

> "We regret that your June travel voucher was submitted and approved claiming travel and per diem for the June negotiations. Efforts are being made to correct your June travel voucher and reclaim the expense erroneously paid. No future vouchers, including the July voucher, will be approved with these expenses claimed. Your July voucher is being processed without the travel and per diem related to the negotiations in an effort to expedite the payment of the allowable items."

Hair received a second Travel Voucher Action Notice covering the period of June 1 through June 30, 1980 advising him that $149.15 should be forwarded to Respondent as that amount was overpaid to him and that amount was not allowable inasmuch as the expenses claimed were for the Union negotiations. Hair did not reimburse Respondent for the June negotiation expenses.

Benjamin Smith, NTEU Chapter 55 Treasurer attended the Local Supplemental Agreement negotiation sessions of June 25, 26 and 27, 1980. Smith travelled from Mount Pleasant, South Carolina to Columbia, South Carolina on June 24, 1980. Smith departed Mt. Pleasant, South Carolina at approximately 5:00 p.m. and arrived in Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 7:30 p.m. ITR 35) Smith participated in the negotiation sessions which began at approximately 10:00 a.m. on June 25, 1981. Smith remained in Columbia, South Carolina and engaged in negotiations held on June 26 and 27, 1980. At the conclusion of the negotiation session on June 27, 1980, at approximately 3:00 p.m., Smith left Columbia, South Carolina for his residence. Smith arrived home shortly after 6:00 p.m. While engaged in the negotiation sessions, Smith incurred travel and per diem expenses. Smith recorded these expenses on his June 1980 travel voucher.[3] Smith submitted his June, 1980 travel voucher and received reimbursement sometime in the middle of July, 1980. During mid-August, 1980, Smith's Group Manager, John Stribling, told Smith that his June travel expenses had been paid in error. Stribling gave Smith a letter from Giroux, Chief of Personnel, which informed him that "efforts are being made to correct your June travel voucher and reclaim the expenses claimed." In early September, 1980 Smith received a Travel Voucher Action Notice for the period of June 1, 1980 through June 30, 1980, advising that a post audit of his voucher had resulted in an overpayment of $135.90 which consisted of expenses incurred during the Local Supplemental Agreement negotiations. Respondent requested Smith to reimburse the amount overpaid. Smith has not repaid the amount requested.

John Thompson, NTEU National Vice President for the first district, participated in the negotiation session on June 30, 1980. Thompson departed Taylor, South Carolina on June 30, 1980 at 7:00 and arrived in Columbia, South Carolina sometime after 9:00 a.m. Thompson participated in the June 30, 1980 negotiation session until the close of the negotiations at about 4:45 p.m. Thompson departed Columbia, South Carolina sometime after 5:00 p.m. and the average driving time from Columbia, South Carolina to Thompson's home was 2 hours. As a result of engaging in negotiations, Thompson incurred travel expenses, which he reported on his June, 1980 travel voucher. Thompson received payment for his June travel expenses sometime around the 15th of July, 1980. In approximately mid-August, 1980, Thompson received a letter from Giroux, Chief, Personnel Branch, advising that the June negotiation expenses were erroneously paid and efforts were being made to reclaim the expenses. In the beginning of September, 1980, Thompson received a Travel Voucher Action Notice covering the period June 1, 1980 through June 30, 1980 advising that $39.40 was claimed for Union negotiations which was not allowable. The Travel Voucher Action Notice requested that Thompson forward the stated amount to Respondent. The Travel Voucher Action Notice was attached to a memo signed by Donald L. Breihan, District Director, Columbia District stating that normal procedures should be followed in reclaiming travel and per diem expenses from John Thompson. Thompson has not paid the amount requested.

[3] Smith did not claim per diem expenses for June 24, 1980, as he travelled for his personal convenience.

Willmeta Dobbs, Executive Vice President of NTEU Chapter 55, attended the negotiation sessions of July 1 - July 3, 1980. Dobbs departed Taylor, South Carolina at approximately 7:15 a.m. and arrived in Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 9:45 a.m. Dobbs remained in Columbia, South Carolina, engaged in negotiations, until July 3, 1980 when she departed Columbia, South Carolina at approximately 2:00 p.m. and arrived home at approximately 4:30 p.m. While engaged in negotiations in columbia, South Carolina, Dobbs incurred travel and per diem expenses which she recorded on her July, 1980 travel voucher. Dobb's July travel voucher was not processed because Dobb's Group Manager, Al Howard, informed her that the negotiation expenses were not covered. Howard asked Dobbs to submit another travel voucher, deleting the negotiation expenses. This second travel voucher was prepared, submitted and paid by Respondent.

All the Union negotiators participated in the negotiations and provided input on the articles under discussion.

At all times material herein, the regular working hours of Respondent's employees, including the above-mentioned employees engaged in negotiations, were 8:00 a.m. to 4:45 p.m. Both Dobbs and Hair were reimbursed by NTEU for the expenses they incurred in connection with the July negotiating sessions.

Discussion and Conclusions

Section 7131(a) of the Statute provides:

> "(a) Any employee representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement under this chapter shall be authorized official time for such purposes, including attendance at impasse proceeding, during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status. The number of employees for whom official time is authorized under this subsection shall not exceed the number of individuals designated as representing the agency for such purposes..."

The Federal Labor Relations Authority (FLRA) has held that Section 7131(a) requires agencies to reimburse union negotiators for their travel and per diem expenses incurred due to their participation in negotiations. Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA No. 31 (1979). FLRA held further that Section 7131(a) provides that such a union negotiator is entitled to travel and per diem expenses when engaged in mid-term negotiations and that failure to pay it violates Section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, Western Region, Department of the Treasury, San Francisco, California, 4 FLRA No. 40 (1980). IRS's contention that FLRA was without authority to issue its decision in Interpretations and Guidance, supra is rejected as is the argument that IRS can not be required to expend appropriated funds for the payment of travel and per diem expenses of Union negotiators. Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms, Western Region, Department of the Treasury, San Francisco, California, supra.

Further IRS's contention that because the Union negotiators were reimbursed for their travel and per diem expenses IRS is not obliged to comply with §7131 of the Statute is rejected. Such an interpretation of the Statute would permit IRS to benefit because it violated the Statute and NTEU attempted to mitigate the harm to the employees.

Accordingly it is concluded that IRS violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by its failure to reimburse employees Hair and Dobbs for their travel and per diem expenses incurred while they were engaged as members of NTEU's bargaining team in Columbia, South Carolina.

Further it is concluded that IRS' attempts, though unsuccessful, to reclaim the travel and per diem expenses that were paid to Union negotiator-employees Hair, Smith and Thompson for time spent representing NTEU at negotiations, interferres with, restrains and coerces these employees in their rights as set forth in Section 7102 of the Statute and therefore violates Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

Having found and concluded that IRS violated Sections 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute, I recommend that the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's rules and regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Columbia District,Columbia, South Carolina shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to provide and pay necessary travel and per diem expenses to Lavon Hair, Willmeta Dobbs, or any Agency employee, for the time said employees engaged in representing the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, during Union - Agency negotiations of a collective bargaining agreement.

(b) Attempting to reclaim or recover travel and per diem expenses paid to Lavon Hair, Benjamin Smith, John Thompson or any Agency employee, for the time said employees engaged in representing the National Treasury Employees Union, the employees' exclusive representative, during Union - Agency negotiations of a collective bargaining agreement.

(c) In any like or related matter, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative actions in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Provide Union representatives Lavon Hair and Willmeta Dobbs ordinary travel and per diem expenses for July 1 through July 3, 1980.

(b) Post at its various offices in the Columbia District wherein unit employees are located, copies of the attached notice marked "Appendix." Copies of said notice, to be furnished by the Regional Director for Region 4, after being signed by an authorized representative, shall be posted by it immediately upon receipt thereof and be maintained by it for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all places where notice to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that said notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Notify the Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this order as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of the underlined portions of the following Union proposal:

> 1. In the event OPM uses a limited furlough as a result of the December 15 budget reductions, 30 calendar days or less, such furloughs will be continuous or discontinuous, at the employee's option. The employees to be furloughed will be only the employees for which the union was given notice.
> 2. Employees will be allowed to request a specific schedule for the furlough time. An employee's request will be honored unless management determines that mission and workload requires otherwise, in which case management will make every reasonable attempt to work out a schedule which is suitable to the employee's needs. Should an employee request be denied, the employee will be provided written reasons for the denial.

3. OPM will have a liberal LWOP policy during the period of the furloughs but will not coerce any employee into using LWOP. The agency will inform employees that they can get unemployment benefits for any continuous furlough of more than 5 days, but not for LWOP of any length of time.

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the Union's proposal directly interferes with management's right to determine its budget under section 7106(a)(1) and its right to layoff and retain employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A). The Union contends that the proposal is a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) or, in the alternative, constitutes an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). The Union also contends generally that, depending on the circumstances of the case, section 7106 does not prevent the Authority from issuing a bargaining order, even if the proposal is inconsistent with management's rights.

III. Analysis and Conclusions

The Union's proposal was made in response to the Agency's decision to furlough employees in order to compensate for a shortage of appropriated funds. The proposal requires the Agency, first, to notify employees who are to be furloughed that they would be entitled to unemployment compensation for any furlough of more than five continuous days and, second, to offer those employees the opportunity to take their furlough on continuous days so as to qualify for unemployment compensation. While the proposal permits employees to request a particular schedule for their furloughs, it reserves to management the right to deny those requests for reasons related to the Agency's workload. Employees would also have the option under the proposal to take leave without pay (LWOP) in lieu of a furlough. In short, the proposal does not prevent management from furloughing employees; it does not require management to make all furloughs continuous, only those where employees choose that option; and it does not dictate when furloughs must be scheduled. The proposal does, however, have consequences which directly affect the exercise of management's rights.

A. Whether The Proposal Violates Management's Rights

Under the proposal, when an employee chooses to be furloughed on continuous days, management is not able to assign work to that employee during that period, even if management should determine that it is necessary for the employee to work. In this way, the proposal is like those requiring management to grant employee requests for leave which the Authority has held directly interfere with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B). See American Federation Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2263 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 160th Air Base Wing (MAC), Kirtland Air Force Base, New Mexico, 15 FLRA 580, 583 (1984) (Union Proposal 4); National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 15 and U.S. Army Armament Munitions and Chemical Command, Rock Island Arsenal, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 6 (1985) (Union Proposal 1). As with the proposals in those cases the proposal in this case similarly would restrict management's ability to determine when assigned work will be performed.

Our conclusion that the proposal violates management's right to assign work is based on considerations other than those argued by the Agency. The Agency contends that the proposal directly interferes with management's rights to determine its budget and to layoff employees. For the following reasons we do not find those Agency contentions persuasive.

The Agency's position is based on its assessment of the potential consequences of the proposal. In particular, the effect of the proposal is to give employees who are being furloughed the opportunity to qualify for unemployment compensation.1/ Payments to Agency employees who have been laid off are ultimately funded by the Agency. That is, when Federal employees qualify for unemployment compensation under

1/ The bargaining unit in this case consists of employees in the headquarters of the Office of Personnel Management which is located in the District of Columbia. Entitlement to unemployment compensation is determined by the law of the jurisdiction in which a person is employed. The Agency states, without contradiction, that under D.C. law, D.C. Code, §§ 46-101 and 110, any continuous furlough of as few as five workdays would establish entitlement to unemployment compensation. Agency Statement of Position at 3. The planned furloughs were intended to take up no more than 10 workdays but could involve as many as 22 work days. Agency Statement of Position at 2 and Attachment A to the Agency's Statement of Position.

the laws of the state in which they are employed -- or in this case, the laws of the District of Columbia -- the state makes the payment to those employees and applies to the U.S. Department of Labor for reimbursement. The Department of Labor reimburses the state and, in turn, bills the Federal agency which had employed those individuals for that amount.[2] The Agency claims that by creating the possibility of such an entitlement the proposal would result in a decrease in the savings which it would realize from the planned furloughs.[3] In order to comply with the proposal and still achieve the savings necessary to make up for the shortage of appropriated funds, the Agency claims that it would be required to lengthen the duration of the furloughs, furlough more employees and/or conduct further reductions in force.[4]

The effects which the Agency contends would result from implementation of the Union's proposal do not amount to a direct interference with management's rights. At most, the effect of the proposal on those rights is indirect and secondary. That is, the consequences which the Agency foresees are not an inevitable result of the proposal but are dependent on factors outside the proposal. In the first place, it is not possible to know in advance how many, if any, employees subject to furlough would take advantage of the option afforded by the proposal. In this respect, the Agency's claims about the impact of the proposal are speculative. Secondly, and more importantly, the consequences which are alleged to flow from the proposal are wholly within the control of management. Thus, even if employees choose to make their furloughs continuous and the Agency thereby incurs some liability for unemployment compensation, it would not necessarily follow that there must be more and longer furloughs to make up for the savings lost. That would only be the result if the Agency chooses that alternative from other possible actions it could take to achieve the necessary savings. Contrary to the Agency, therefore, the proposal would not require management to increase the number of employees furloughed or the duration of their furloughs, or to initiate further RIF actions, even though it might make such a decision more probable.

[4] Agency Statement of Position at 4-5.

The Agency also has not shown that implementation of the proposal would directly interfere with management's right to determine its budget under the test set forth in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604 (1980), enforced as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 995 (1982). The Agency concedes that the proposal does not on its face prescribe a particular program or operation which must be included in the Agency's budget or an amount to be allocated for such a program or operation.5/ Nor does the proposal result in an increase of costs. Rather, implementation of the proposal could possibly involve the reallocation of a portion of the funds intended for employee salaries to cover the Agency's liability, if any, for unemployment compensation. The effect of the proposal, therefore, is potentially to reduce the amount of savings to be achieved by the proposed furloughs. It is a speculative result at best, because it is impossible to determine at this point whether, or how many, employees will choose to make their furloughs continuous so as to qualify for unemployment compensation. Even if the proposal ultimately results in an Agency liability for unemployment compensation the proposal would not prevent management from achieving the necessary savings to meet the anticipated shortage of funds. The Agency has not shown that it has no other options by which to make up the necessary amount.6/

B. "Appropriate Arrangements"

Because the proposal directly interferes with the exercise of management's right to assign work, it is not, contrary to the Union's claim, a negotiable procedure. We turn then to the Union's additional claim that it constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the exercise of management's

---

5/ Agency Statement of Position at 3.

6/ The record indicates that the Agency had determined that it could make up the entire budgetary shortfall through a combination of actions: attrition, i.e., not filling positions which become vacant, ($11.5 million), reduction in force ($1.2 million), reimbursable details ($2.0 million), miscellaneous expenses (including travel) ($3.0 million), a pay raise supplemental ($3.3 million), and the planned furloughs ($3.3 million). Agency Statement of Position at 2.

rights within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). There can be little question but that the proposal is intended as an "arrangement" for employees adversely affected by management's decision to furlough. The literal language of the proposal indicates that it is intended to mitigate against the loss of wages due to the furlough by providing employees a basis for claiming unemployment compensation. The basic issue is whether the burden placed by the proposal upon the exercise of management's right to assign work constitutes excessive interference with that right so as to render the proposal an "inappropriate" arrangement. See National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986).

Management's right to assign work is reserved in the Statute in order to protect management's ability, among other things, to manage its workload. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 604, 613 (1980), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 995 (1982) (right to assign employees to positions under section 7106(a)(2)(A) protects management discretion to determine qualifications necessary to perform the work of a position). The effect of the Union's proposal on that important interest is insubstantial. In the first place, the most significant impact on the Agency's ability to accomplish its workload comes from management's own decision to furlough employees rather than from any consequences which might flow from implementation of the proposal. That is, the Agency's decision to furlough employees results in the loss of a certain amount of employee worktime. The proposal would do nothing to change that amount. Whether employees are furloughed on a continuous or discontinuous basis, the amount of worktime lost due to furlough would be the same.[7] Moreover, the proposal permits management to schedule furloughs so as to enable it to get its work done when that is necessary. In short, the proposal protects the Agency's ability to manage its workload with a reduced workforce. For this reason, and because the proposal would not preclude the Agency from making the necessary savings, we conclude that it would not have a detrimental impact on the achievement of effective and efficient government operations. Indeed, even if implementation of the proposal makes it more difficult to accomplish those savings, it would not necessarily mean the proposal is inconsistent with that objective. See American Federation of Government

Employees, AFL-CIO v. Federal Labor Relations Authority, 785 F.2d 333, 337-38 (D.C. Cir. 1986). Compared to the adverse effect on employees of management's decision to furlough and the benefit conferred by the proposal of an opportunity to qualify for unemployment compensation so as to potentially offset the loss of pay, the minimal burden imposed on management's right to assign work does not rise to the level of excessive interference. The proposal, therefore, constitutes a negotiable appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.8/

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain on the Union's proposal.9/

FEDERAL LABOR RELATIONS AUTHORITY

8/ We note the Union's general contention that section 7106 does not preclude the issuance of a bargaining order even where it is determined that a proposal violates management's rights. Essentially the same arguments were made to the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of CSA Locals and Community Services Administration, 5 FLRA 748, 752-53 (1981) and the Authority rejected them, finding that both the language and the legislative history of the Statute indicated that section 7106 was intended as a limitation on the scope of bargaining. Nothing the Union has argued here has persuaded us that we reached the wrong conclusion in that case.

9/ In deciding that the Union's proposal is within the Agency's duty to bargain, we make no judgment as to the merits of the proposal.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of five Union proposals[1] dealing with impact and implementation bargaining on changes in working conditions of certain unit employees caused by the institution of a temporary program in one of the Agency's divisions.

II. Preliminary Issues

A. Motion to Dismiss

The Agency filed a motion to dismiss the petition for review in this case. The Agency based its motion on the grounds that the petition was untimely filed and did not contain necessary attachments. However, the record establishes that the petition for review was filed within the time limits required under sections 2424.3, 2429.21, and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Moreover, the Union submitted the necessary attachments within the time limits normally afforded parties by the Authority to correct procedural deficiencies. Accordingly, the Agency's motion to dismiss must be denied.

[1] The Union's petition for review requested negotiability determinations on six proposals. In its response to the Agency's statement of position, the Union withdrew its second proposal. Accordingly, it will not be considered further by the Authority here.

B. More Than "De Minimis" Impact

The Agency contends that it is under no obligation to negotiate any of the Union's proposals because the temporary program it instituted caused no significant changes in the working conditions of affected employees. For the following reason the Authority disagrees.

In conjunction with the petition for review of the negotiability of its proposals, the Union also filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Agency. The charge alleged a failure to give the Union adequate prior notice of the implementation of its program and a refusal to bargain at the Union's request concerning procedures to be utilized in implementing the change and appropriate arrangements for the affected employees. The Union elected to have the unfair labor practice charge resolved prior to any determination being made on the negotiability issues. As a result, in Internal Revenue Service, 16 FLRA 845 (1984), the Authority adopted an Administrative Law Judge's finding that the Agency violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged by the Union. The Authority found that the impact of the Agency's program on unit employees was more than de minimis. Therefore, in terms of this case, the Authority concludes that the Agency's contention that its program caused no significant impact in the working conditions of affected employees is without merit, and must be denied.

III. Union Proposal 1

> Management agrees that in grading cases it will follow IRM MT 7500-23 (1-12-79)

A. Positions of the Parties

IRM MT 7500-23 refers to Internal Revenue Manual, Manual Transmittal 7500-23, a document used by the Agency for the purpose of assigning work to its employees. The Agency contends that the proposal would affect its determinations as to the content of the work performed by employees and, therefore, interferes with the Agency's right to determine its organization under section 7106(a)(1) and its right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Agency also contends that the document referred to in the proposal is an internal guide to managers never intended to be mandatory and that it already uses the guidelines whenever possible, so that bargaining over the proposal would serve no useful purpose.

The Union contends that the document referred to in the proposal is binding on management officials. The proposal would merely insure that whatever work is assigned is properly graded and that where an employee believes work is misgraded, a contractual remedy would exist. The Union further states in its petition for review that all of its proposals, including Union Proposal 1, "fall within the ambit" of section 7106(b)(2) and section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute.

B. Analysis

In previous decisions, the Authority has indicated that an agency's right to determine its organization refers primarily to its right to determine the internal structure of the organization. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, 17 FLRA 790 (1985). The proposal in this case would not require the Agency to modify its internal structure, and, therefore, does not interfere with the Agency's right to determine its organization under section 7106(a)(1).

As to the Agency's argument concerning assignment of work, the document referred to in the proposal contains criteria used by management officials in grading the level of difficulty of the work to be performed by their employees. Presumably, by correlating the level of difficulty with a specific GS level, the more difficult the work, the higher the GS level of the employee assigned to perform the work. The proposal would require management to assign work to its employees strictly on the basis of the criteria specified in the document and would prevent management from deviating from those criteria. In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 775 (1980), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982), the Authority established that the right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) includes the discretion to determine "the particular employees to whom or positions to which [work] will be assigned." Since the proposal would make it impossible for the Agency to deviate from the criteria established in the document in assigning particular employees to perform work, the proposal directly interferes with management's right to assign work and does not constitute a procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute.

Subsequent to the filings in this case, the Authority issued National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-87 and Kansas Army National Guard, 21 FLRA No. 4 (1986). There the Authority stated that henceforth we will determine whether a proposal constitutes a negotiable "appropriate arrangement" under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute by determining whether the proposal "excessively interferes" with the exercise of management's rights. In making such a determination, the Authority will first examine the record in each case to ascertain as a threshold question whether a proposal is in fact intended to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's exercise of it rights. If the Authority concludes that a proposal is in fact intended as an arrangement, we will then determine whether the arrangement is appropriate or whether it is inappropriate because it excessively interferes.

The record fails to clearly indicate how this proposal is intended to operate as an appropriate arrangement. However, it would seem, and we assume for purposes of this decision, that the Union intends the proposal to be an arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. That is, the proposal would be intended to ameliorate the adverse affects on employees as a result of management's right to assign work by binding management to the criteria for grading and assigning work in the document as a matter of contract. However, the Authority finds that the proposed amelioration could totally preclude the Agency from exercising its right to assign work to a particular employee if such assignment were not strictly in accordance with the criteria. Through the arbitration process management's decision to assign work to a particular employee could be completely negated. Such a proposed amelioration which totally abrogates the exercise of a management right clearly does not constitute an appropriate arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3). See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2782 v. FLRA, 702 F.2d 1183, 1188 (D.C. Cir. 1983), reversing and remanding American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2782 and Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 91 (1981).

C. Conclusion

The Authority concludes, therefore, based on the reasons and cases cited above, that Union Proposal 1 does not interfere with management's right to determine its organization, under section 7106(a)(1). The proposal does directly interfere with management's right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute and does not constitute a procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2). In addition, the proposal does not constitute an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by management's right to assign work under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute, because it excessively interferes with that right. Accordingly, the proposal is outside the duty to bargain.[2]

IV. Union Proposal 2

> The Agency agrees to request from GSA, a sufficient number of government cars for qualified EP employees who are involved in the TCMP program and request it.

A. Positions of the Parties

TCMP refers to the Agency's Taxpayer Compliance Measurement Program, the Agency's temporary program in this case. EP refers to the Agency's Exempt Plan agents, the particular employees affected by the Agency's temporary program. The Agency contends that the proposal involves a subject which is negotiable only at its election, under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, and it elects not to negotiate the matter. The Union, on the other hand, argues that the Agency has already determined the technology, methods and means by which the work is to be performed. The proposal, therefore, properly concerns the impact and implementation of management's prior decision upon the conditions of employment of unit employees and is negotiable.

B. Analysis

The proposal would require the Agency to request cars from GSA for the purpose of providing those cars to employees involved in the Agency's temporary TCMP. Based on the record in this case it is clear that travel is a necessary aspect of the Agency's temporary program. The Authority has previously determined that the choice of the mode of transportation to be used for accomplishing an agency's mission is a decision as to the "means" to be used for its accomplishment, that is, the instrumentalities or agents, tools, or devices used to accomplish the agency's work. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Madison Region, 21 FLRA No. 104 (1986) (Union Proposal 10). In requiring management to negotiate on this proposal, therefore, the Union is requiring management to bargain over a particular "means" of performing the work assignments associated with its temporary program. See also National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 2 FLRA 254 (1979).

[2] In making this negotiability determination, the Authority finds irrelevant whether, as asserted by the Agency, the document referred to in the proposal was ever intended to be mandatory or whether bargaining over the proposal would serve a "useful purpose."

The Union has indicated that its proposal concerns the impact and implementation of the Agency's prior decision to use cars for the performance of work associated with its temporary program. The proposal therefore concerns how the cars shall be provided. The record fails to clearly indicate how this proposal is intended to operate as a procedure, under section 7106(b)(2), or as an appropriate arrangement, under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. In any event, having determined that the proposal directly interferes with management's substantive rights under section 7106(b)(1), we find further that it cannot constitute a negotiable procedure. Moreover, assuming the proposal is intended as an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's right to implement its temporary program, that is, its right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B), we find the proposal would be inappropriate because it would excessively interfere with management's right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work. It would be inappropriate because it would completely negate the Agency's section 7106(b)(1) right to decide the means to be used in the accomplishment of its mission, rather than merely ameliorating the adverse affect on employees of the Agency's exercise of its rights. See analysis of Proposal 1 above.

C. Conclusion

Union Proposal 2 concerns a matter negotiable only at the election of management under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, as alleged by the Agency. Moreover, the proposal does not constitute a procedure nor is it an appropriate arrangement, under section 7106(b)(3), because it would completely negate the exercise of management's rights. Therefore, the Agency is under no obligation to bargain over the proposal.

V. Union Proposal 3

> If GSA refuses or is unable to provide sufficient number of cars for employees in the TCMP program, then those which are provided will be assigned on a hardship basis. Indications of hardship will include:
> 1. Only one car in the family.
> 2. Ownership of a car whose age and condition is such that it is suitable only for local travel.

Union Proposal 4

> Those employees working TCMP whose assignments are more than 150 miles from their POD [Post of Duty] who choose to fly will be permitted to secure GSA cars when available or rental cars from authorized GSA supplier for local transportation.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposals conflict with agency-wide regulation IRM 1(14)47.1, "Motor Vehicle Management Handbook." It further claims that its regulation is "dictated" by the GSA regulations which govern the matters at issue. The Agency asserts, therefore, that in the absence of a finding by the Authority that no compelling need exists for this regulation, under section 7117(a)(2) of the Statute, the Agency has no obligation to bargain over these proposals. The Agency also contends that the proposals concern the technology, methods and means of performing work under section 7106(b)(1), matters which are negotiable only at the election of the Agency. Finally, with respect to Union Proposal 4, the Agency states that because it is already voluntarily complying with the substance of the proposal, any negotiations would be meaningless.

The Union contends that the burden of proof is on the Agency to demonstrate a compelling need for its regulations, and that the Agency has failed to meet that burden. As to the Agency's view that the proposals concern matters negotiable only at its election, the Union asserts that Union Proposal 3 is a procedure for determining how a previous management decision is to be implemented, and, therefore, concerns a mandatory subject of bargaining. The Union also contends that the Agency has merely asserted, without any rationale, that Union Proposal 4 involves a permissive subject of bargaining, and that mere assertion is insufficient to demonstrate that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain.

B. Analysis

1. Compelling Need Under Section 7117(a)(2)

The Authority has consistently held that when an agency alleges the nonnegotiability of a proposal because it conflicts with one of its regulations under section 7117(a)(2), the agency bears the burden of demonstrating that a compelling need exists for that particular regulation. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 450 (1980). In agreement with the Union, the Agency in this case has failed to demonstrate that there is a compelling need for its regulation.

The Agency's compelling need argument is based on its contention that its regulation implements a mandate under GSA regulations. See section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's rules. The Agency does not specifically contend that the proposals are inconsistent with GSA regulations governing the assignment of cars to employees on official Government business. However, the Agency variously states that its own regulations "incorporate," are "dictated by," and are "based on" the GSA regulations. An examination of the current GSA regulations governing the matters covered by the proposals, as stated in GSA Bulletin FPMR A-40, Supp. 5, effective June 19, 1983, fails to reveal any inconsistency between the proposals and GSA's current guidelines. Specifically, it does not appear that current GSA guidelines include a mileage test, which the Agency claims to have incorporated into its regulations, and which it further claims is inconsistent with Union Proposal 3. Therefore, the Agency has not supported its suggestion that its regulations somehow are mandated by the GSA regulations.

2. Management Rights Under Section 7106(b)(1) and Procedures and Appropriate Arrangements

Union Proposal 3 contemplates a situation where an insufficient number of cars will be available for employees' use as a result of the implementation of the Agency's temporary program. It provides that in such a circumstance, cars will be allocated to employees on the basis of hardship. Therefore, contrary to the Agency's position, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 3 concerns a procedure for implementing management's previous decision to use cars in performing the Agency's mission during the existence of its temporary program, and does not directly concern the technology, methods and means of performing work, under section 7106(b)(1).

As to Proposal 4, the Union contends that the mere assertion by the Agency that it involves permissive subjects of bargaining is not sufficient to establish the assertion. The Authority agrees. However, the Authority is required to find nonnegotiable proposals which appear to conflict with law or Government-wide regulations. In the case of Union Proposal 4, despite a lack of articulated rationale on the part of the Agency in support of its assertion, the proposal does nonetheless conflict with section 7106(b)(1) on its face. It would permit affected employees to secure GSA cars, or rental cars, under the conditions specified in the proposal, for local transportation in the performance of their work. See discussion of Union Proposal 2 above. For this reason, the proposal directly concerns the technology, methods and means of performing work, under section 7106(b)(1).

As with the other proposals, the record does not clearly indicate how Union Proposals 3 and 4 are intended to operate as procedures, under section 7106(b)(2), or as appropriate arrangements, under section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. Inasmuch as we have determined that Union Proposal 3 constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute which does not directly interfere with any substantive management rights, the ambiguousness of the record in this regard is irrelevant. Concerning Union Proposal 4, the Authority has determined above that it would directly interfere with management's right, under section 7106(b)(1), to determine the technology, methods and means of performing work. Therefore, regardless of whether the proposal is intended as a procedure, it would be outside the duty to bargain. On the other hand, assuming that the proposal is intended as an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B), in connection with the implementation of its temporary program, the Authority finds as follows. The proposal would be inappropriate because it would completely negate the Agency's section 7106(b)(1) right to decide the means to be used in the accomplishment of its mission, rather than merely ameliorating the adverse affect on employees of the Agency's exercise of its right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B). See analysis of Proposal 2 above.

C. Conclusion

The Agency has failed to demonstrate either that Union Proposals 3 and 4 are inconsistent with an agency-wide regulation for which there is a compelling need, or that they violate applicable GSA Government-wide regulations. Union Proposal 3 constitutes a procedure which management will observe in exercising its rights, under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute, and does not concern matters negotiable only at the election of the Agency. Union Proposal 4 concerns the technology, methods and means of performing work, under section 7106(b)(1). Because the proposal directly interferes with the Agency's rights under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute, it does not constitute a procedure within the meaning of section 7106(b)(2). Moreover, it excessively interferes with the Agency's rights under section 7106(b)(1) and is not an appropriate arrangement under section 7106(b)(3). Therefore, for the reasons and cases cited in the foregoing analysis, Union Proposal 3 is within the duty to bargain and Union Proposal 4 is outside the duty to bargain.3/3/ Further, the Agency's contention that negotiations on Union Proposal 4 would be "meaningless" because the Agency is already voluntarily complying with the substance of the proposal, is, of course, concerned with the merits rather than the legality of the proposal and is therefore irrelevant in determining whether the proposal is outside the duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 5

As far as possible case assignments will be made in the following manner:

1. Employees will be canvassed to determine their area of work preference.
2. Management will take into account the preference and any hardship reasons which dictate that preference.
3. In the case of 2 or more employees with the same preference and no overriding hardship reasons for that preference, the employee with the earliest service computation date shall be accommodated.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal conflicts with management's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) by substituting a "preference, hardship, and seniority test" for the discretion and judgment of management officials in determining which employee is to perform what work.

The Union contends that the Agency has misinterpreted the proposal.

B. Analysis

According to the Union, the phrase "area of work" in the proposal refers to the geographical locations of the work to be performed and not to the actual work assignment. Therefore, the Union interprets the proposal as constituting a procedure for the just and equitable assignment of geographical locations to employees. Moreover, the Union argues that the phrase "as far as possible" guarantees that management retains the right to assign cases and would not prevent management from acting at all in the exercise of its right.

The Authority finds no merit in the Union's contention that by interpreting the phrase "area of work" to mean the geographical locations of the work, the effect of the proposal is altered. On the contrary, the proposal would have the effect of interfering with management's discretion, under section 7106(a)(2)(B), to determine the particular employees to whom work will be assigned. The record indicates that the geographical locations of the work to be performed are determinative of the particular job assignments. Therefore, if an employee has the right to choose the geographical location of the work to be done, management is precluded from assigning the employee to perform a particular job in a different geographical location. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769 (1980), aff'd sub nom. NTEU v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Moreover, under the proposal, an arbitrator could overturn a manager's decision to assign work to a particular employee by concluding that the manager had not taken into account the factors specified in the proposal "as far as possible." Such a result would have the effect of directly interfering with management's right to assign work. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 19 FLRA No. 9 (1985) (Union Proposals 1, 2, and 3).

For this reason, Union Proposal 5 is distinguishable from cases involving proposals which are negotiable because they concern the selection of individual employees to temporarily perform assigned work in different locations. In such cases, the decision as to where the work of a given position is to be performed is not, as it is here, determinative of the particular work to be assigned. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 5 FLRA 83, 86 (1981) (criteria for selecting which employee will temporarily perform previously assigned duties at a different location are within the duty to bargain).

As with Union Proposals 1, 2, 3 and 4, the record fails to clearly indicate how this proposal is intended to operate as a procedure or an appropriate arrangement. The proposal is not a procedure because it directly interferes with the Agency's right to assign work. If the proposal is intended as an appropriate arrangement for employees adversely affected by the Agency's right to assign a particular employee to perform a particular job, the Authority finds that it could have the effect of completely abrogating that right. Therefore, it excessively interferes with management's right to assign work so as to be inappropriate as an arrangement within the meaning of section 7106(b)(3) of the Statute. See analysis in connection with Union Proposal 1 above.

C. Conclusion

The Authority concludes, for the reasons and cases cited in the foregoing analysis, that Union Proposal 5 directly interferes with management's right to assign work, under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, and, therefore, does not constitute a procedure under section 7106(b)(2). The Authority also concludes that if the Union intends the proposal as an appropriate arrangement, it would excessively interfere with management's right to assign work, so as to be nonnegotiable under section 7106(b)(3). Therefore, Union Proposal 5 is outside the duty to bargain.

VII. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Proposal 3.[4] Furthermore, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Proposals 1, 2, 4 and 5 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. June 30, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint, and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions and a supporting brief to the Judge's Decision and Respondent filed a brief in opposition to such exceptions.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority hereby adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order to the extent consistent herewith.

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority concludes that, under the circumstances in this case, the General Counsel failed to establish that the Respondent implemented a change in the working conditions of unit employees. Thus, as found by the Judge, the Respondent, Defense Construction Supply Center (the Center), executed an agreement with the U.S. Attorney to have three of the Respondent's attorneys appointed as Special Assistant U.S. Attorneys under the supervision and direction of the local U.S. Attorney. The three were needed to prosecute misdemeanor offenses arising on the Center's facilities because the U.S. Attorney had a large backlog of cases and was short-staffed, although he had jurisdiction to prosecute such misdemeanor cases and had done so in the past.

The Authority notes, in agreement with the Judge, that bargaining unit employees have always been subject to prosecution by the U.S. Attorney for their unlawful acts committed at the Center, and that the implementation of the agreement with the U.S. Attorney did not result in the imposition of any new penalties, new investigative procedures or regulations. Given the Authority's finding that there was no change, the Authority concludes that the complaint should be dismissed. See, for example, Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland, 19 FLRA No. 79 (1985), where the Authority determined that in the absence of evidence that Respondent's actions constituted a change in personnel policies, practices or matters affecting working conditions, no violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute had been established.*/

The complaint in Case No. 5-CA-40131 is dismissed in its entirety.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 30, 1986.

*/ With regard to the Judge's conclusion that the matter in this case did not involve conditions of employment of unit employees, Chairman Calhoun agrees with the Judge's conclusion; Member Frazier finds it unnecessary to pass upon this conclusion of the Judge, in light of the Authority's finding that no change was involved.

DECISION

This is a proceeding under Title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-454, 92 Stat. 1192, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (1982), commonly known as the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, and hereinafter referred to as the Statute, and the rules and regulations issued thereunder and published at 5 CFR 2411 et seq.

On February 17, 1984, the Charging Party filed with the Federal Labor Relations Authority (the Authority) a charge that Respondent had committed an unfair labor practice. Amended charges were filed on February 27 and March 16. The charges were investigated by the Authority's Region V Office and, on April 20, the complaint initiating this action was filed by the Acting Regional Director of that Office.

The complaint alleges that, Respondent has failed and refused to bargain in good faith with the Union, in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5),[1] by the following acts and conduct:

> Commencing in or about the month of January, 1984, the exact date being unknown to the Regional Director, and continuing to date, at the Center, Respondent unilaterally changed established personnel policies, practices or terms and conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees, by implementing a system whereby minor criminal offenses that occur on the premises of the Center are processed through the U.S. Magistrate System and prosecuted by the Center's Office of Counsel, as representatives of the United States Attorney. Said action was taken by Respondent without Respondent's having given advance notice to the Union of said change and without having afforded an opportunity to the Union to bargain with Respondent concerning the impact and implementation of said change.

See G.C. 1(d), paragraph V.[2] Respondent denies that it has committed any acts violative of the Statute.

A hearing was held on June 5, 1984, in Columbus, Ohio. The parties appeared, adduced evidence, and examined witnesses. Briefs were filed by Respondent and the General Counsel on July 23, pursuant to an order extending the briefing time until that date, as requested by Respondent. Based upon the record made in this proceeding, my observation of the demeanor of the witnesses, and the briefs, I enter the following findings of fact and conclusions of law, and recommend entry of the following order.

[1] 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5) provide as follows:

> (a) For the purposes of this chapter, it shall be an unfair labor practice for an agency--
> (1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce any employee in the exercise by the employee of any right under this chapter; . . . [or]
> (5) to refuse to consult or negotiate in good faith with a labor organization as required by this chapter . . . .

[2] "G.C." refers to the exhibits of the General Counsel. Other abbreviations to be used herein are as follows. "Jt." refers to the joint exhibits, including the stipulated facts. "G.C. Br." refers to the brief of the General Counsel, and "R. Br." to that of Respondent. "R." refers to the exhibit of Respondent. "Tr." refers to the transcript.

Findings of Fact

1. It is admitted that, at all times material herein, the Defense Logistics Agency (DLA) has operated and supervised a facility in Alexander, Virginia, known as the Defense Logistics Center (DLC) and, through DLC, has operated and supervised a facility in Columbus, Ohio, known as the Defense Construction Supply Center (DCSC or Center).

2. It is also admitted that, at all times material herein, the DLA Council of American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Locals (AFGE) has been the exclusive representative of a consolidated bargaining unit of employees, including, inter alia, Respondent's non-supervisory employees at the Center, with certain exclusions not material to this case, and that Local 1148 (Union) is the agent of AFGE with respect to employees at the Center in Columbus. Carmelita Burge Riley is the President of Local 1148 and the union official to whom management at the Center provides notice of proposed changes in working conditions.

3. In the latter part of 1982 and during 1983, Ms. Riley was engaged periodically in negotiations with management concerning a new Magistrate System for the supervision of traffic violations at the Center. At no time before or during these negotiations, which began in about October 1982 and ended with the implementation of the new system in January 1984, did management advise Ms. Riley that it was, during the same period, implementing some new procedures for the prosecution of minor criminal offenses (misdemeanors) at the Center. Ms. Riley became aware of this when she read an article about it in the November 1983 issue of the Center's newsletter, The Supply Line. She then took the initiative to question management about the matter, on two occasions early in January, at a monthly personnel meeting and at a staff meeting. On these occasions, she attempted to determine what exactly it was to which The Supply Line article had referred, but obtained little information. Meanwhile, on December 19, 1983, a memorandum concerning the "Federal Magistrate System" was issued to all employees. It informed them that moving traffic violations, as well as minor criminal offenses that occur on the Center's premises, will "be processed through the Federal Courts." It stated that Ohio traffic laws will be so enforced, as well as "minor offenses such as assault, theft or trespassing," which are governed by Federal statutes.

4. Still having little information about the misdemeanor procedures, Ms. Riley wrote a memorandum to Fred Harris, the Center's Labor Relations Officer, on January 31, 1984. She asked, inter alia, why the employer had not consulted/negotiated with the Union concerning the matter.

5. On February 6, 1984, Mr. Harris responded to Mr. Riley. He stated, inter alia, that: "There was no negotiation on this system because we cannot negotiate laws" (G.C. 8).

6. In a subsequent telephone conversation with Mr. Harris, Ms. Riley brought up the subject again, stating that she believed that the Union had the right to negotiate the impact and implementation of the matter.

7. Shortly thereafter, Ms. Riley filed the unfair labor practice charge. At the time, she was still not entirely sure of what the new misdemeanor procedures were or when they had been implemented. Because of the above circumstances, Local 1148 has not yet submitted any proposals to Respondent.

The alleged violative acts and conduct

8. Certain Department of Defense (DOD) directives have, since 1978, directed that the Department's investigation agency (now called the Defense Criminal Investigative Service or DCIS), provide criminal investigative support to DOD components, including the Center. When investigations have produced evidence of crimes, including misdemeanors, they have been referred to the local U.S. Attorney for possible prosecution. The U.S. Attorney "frequently declined" prosecution of misdemeanor cases so referred "because of a heavy case load and limited manpower" (Jt. 1, para. 9 at page 3). This problem at the U.S. Attorney's office was having "some impact" at the Center, in that it was decreasing the number of prosecutions of employees at the Center, and hindering and slowing down those which were brought (Tr. 81).

9. A number of events occurred prior to January 1984 that considerably increased the likelihood that a person committing a minor criminal offense on the Center would be prosecuted. These included the issuance of a complete revision of DLA Regulation 5705.2, Criminal Investigative Support to the Defense Logistics Agency, on January 23, 1979, and a revision of DLA Regulation 5700.5, Command Security Program, on January 15, 1979. The latter regulation established a new Command Security Program and required the appointment of a Command Security Office at each primary level field activity, such as the Center. Also, fraud, waste, and abuse is now given "high priorty in the Department of Justice" (Tr. 82).

10. Another important event that significantly increased the likelihood of criminal prosecution of minor criminal offenses at the Center was the hiring of two detectives in February 1982, particularly since one of them, George Lutz, was experienced, highly motiviated, and very determined in investigating offenses, and very effective in presenting cases for prosecution. The work of Mr. Lutz was a major factor in the increased likelihood of prosecution of misdemeanor offenses occurring on the Center.

11. The DCIS office providing support to the Center is located in Dayton, Ohio. It was not shown to be bound by any agreements between Respondent and Local 1148. The Center's Office of Counsel provides legal services to the Dayton DCIS offices. In June 1983, DCIS officials talked with Walter R. Pierce, an Attorney in the Center's Office of Counsel, about difficulties they were having persuading the U.S. Attorney to prosecute criminal offenses because of his heavy case load. At Mr. Pierce's suggestion, he and one of the DCIS officials met with an Assistant U.S. Attorney, James Rattan, on June 17, to discuss the possibility of having attorneys at the Center appointed as Special Assistant U.S. Attorneys to prosecute minor misdemeanors committed on the Center. They discussed the fact that such an arrangement already existed between Counsel's Office at the Defense Electronic Supply Center (DESC), Dayton, Ohio, and the U.S. Attorney.

12. On June 29, 1983, the Dayton DCIS office provided information about the DESC Counsel-U.S. Attorney agreement and encouraged Mr. Newton, head of the Center's Office of Counsel, to seek a similar agreement.

13. On July 12, 1983, the Center's Command Security Officer wrote a memorandum to the Office of Counsel, stressing the importance of filing criminal charges, where warranted, and requested that a procedure be established for presenting all criminal investigations to the U.S. Attorney's Office for prosecution. The memorandum cited the delegation of additional investigative responsibilities to the Office of Command Security by the Office of Assistant Inspector General for Investigations, an activity under DOD, and the increase in cases warranting criminal prosecution because of the activities of the Detective Section.

14. On July 13, 1983, Mr. Pierce followed up on the meeting of June 17, by submitting to the U.S. Attorney a proposed Memorandum of Understanding and a request that he and two other attorneys, Daniel A. Bellman and Philip L. Brady, be appointed as Special Assistants to he U.S. Attorney.

15. On September 2, 1983, the U.S. Attorney signed the Memorandum of Understanding, returned it to Mr. Pierce, and sent a letter to the U.S. Department of Justice, requesting the appointment of Messrs. Pierce, Bellman and Brady as Special Assistants to the U.S. Attorney.

16. On September 9, 1983, the Department of Justice appointed Messrs. Pierce, Bellman and Brady as Special Assistants to the U.S. Attorney. On November 1, 1983, Mr. Newton authorized the three attorneys to perform their duties under these appointments. The appointments were valid through September 30, 1984.

17. On December 23, 1983, the three judges of the local U.S. District Court issued an order directing that misdemeanor complaints and information offenses occurring within the jurisdiction of any agency scheduled pursuant to the Court's rule 6.2.3 be referred to the U.S. Magistrate. This included offenses occurring at the Center.

18. Prior to the court order of December 23, 1983, misdemeanor cases were tried before the U.S. Magistrate, but were initially filed with the Clerk of the U.S. District Court and then referred to a District Court Judge, who would decide whether to refer it to the U.S. Magistrate. The court order by the U.S. District Court Judges was issued "[b]ecause they were advised that DCSC . . . is referring additional cases . . . into the U.S. Attorney's office, and the U.S. Attorney's office has decided to prosecute those" (Tr. 87). Respondent concedes that the appointment of three Center attorneys as Special Assistants to prosecute misdemeanors from the Center before the U.S. Magistrate was a factor in the court order of December 23. However, the change was not made because of "any particular desire or any overt action taken by DCSC officials" (Tr. 52).

19. At the present time, both DCIS and the Center's Command Security Office submit reports of suspected misdemeanor offenses to Mr. Pierce. In his capacity as a Special Assistant to the U.S. Attorney, he reviews the reports and forwards to the U.S. Attorney's office the cases that he believes warrant criminal prosecution. The U.S. Attorney makes the final decision on the cases that should be prosecuted, signs the necessary criminal informations or complaints, and files them in the U.S. District Court. The Clerk of the Court sends the cases to the Magistrate. The U.S. Attorney's Office advises Mr. Pierce of the filing of criminal informations and complaints and he, Mr. Bellman, and Mr. Brady are assigned to represent the U.S. Attorney in prosecuting the cases before the Magistrate.

20. Between June 17, 1983 and May 31, 1984, 11 investigations of suspected misdemeanor offenses at the Center have been referred to Mr. Pierce for possible prosecution. Three of these cases were investigated by DCIS and the remainder by the Center's security personnel. Acting in his capacity as Special Assistant U.S. Attorney, Mr. Pierce determined that six of these should be prosecuted. Of these six cases, the U.S. Attorney declined prosecution in one case. The remaining five cases resulted in convictions or guilty pleas. One of the five persons convicted was a supervisor and a second person was not in the bargaining unit. There are 4,000 to 4,200 bargaining unit employees at the Center.

21. It was not established just how many, if any, misdemeanors committed by bargaining unit employees at the Center were prosecuted before the three Center attorneys were deputized as Special Assistants to the U.S. Attorney. Ms. Riley, who has been an employee at the Center since 1965, and the President of Local 1148 since December 1981, knew of none. Mr. Pierce, the only witness for Respondent, had no knowledge of any either. He has been employed at the Center since 1974. He explained that, prior to his deputization, misdemeanor cases "weren't referred through [him]" (Tr. 83). Paragraph 8 of the Stipulation of Facts (Jt. 1, page 3) states that the U.S. Attorney "frequently" declined to prosecute misdemeanors committed at the Center and referred to him, prior to June 1983. There is an inference from this stipulation that at least some may have been prosecuted.

22. Employees who are prosecuted under these procedures are and have always been also subject to administrative disciplinary action.

23. No new agency regulations or procedures were established, or old ones changed, when the three Center Attorneys were deputized to assist the U.S. Attorney in prosecuting misdemeanors occurring at the Center.

Retroactive relief

24. In response to the fact that the General Counsel is seeking an order that would "[a]pply retroactively to January 1984, as appropriate, any agreements reached as a result of bargaining done" pursuant to any bargaining order that may issue (G.C. 3, page 2), Respondent's counsel questioned Mr. Pierce as to what impact such an order would have on Respondent. See Tr. 73-79. Mr. Pierce opined that "[g]enerally, it could have a devastating affect, depending on how it is framed" (Tr. 73). Mr. Pierce was unable to be specific, since no union proposals have ever been made.

Discussion and Conclusions

The General Counsel has not established, by a preponderance of the evidence,[3] that Respondent has failed to bargain in good faith with the Charging Party, and, thereby, interfered with its bargaining rights, as alleged in the complaint.

As the General Counsel recognizes, proof of the alleged failure to bargain hinges upon proof that the failure concerned "conditions of employment." See G.C. Br. 9 and Sections 7114(b)(2) of the Statute, declaring that the duty to negotiate includes the obligation "to discuss and negotiate on any conditions of employment," and Section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute, defining the term "conditions of employment" as meaning "personnel policies, practices, and matters, whether established by rule, regulation, or otherwise, affecting working conditions . . . ."

The General Counsel rests his case on the failure to bargain over the assignment of attorneys in its Office of Counsel to serve "as supplemental staff to the U.S. Attorney, so that employees are now being prosecuted before the U.S. Magistrate for misdemeanors committed at the workplace" (G.C. Br. 16). It was stipulated that before this change, the U.S. Attorney "frequently declined" prosecution of misdemeanor cases occurring on the premises of the Center "because of a heavy case load and limited manpower." See finding 8, above. It was also stipulated that between November 1, 1983, when three attorneys in the Office of Counsel were deputized as Special Assistant U.S. Attorneys, and May 11, 1984, three bargaining unit employees were prosecuted for misdemeanors. See finding 20. It is not clear how many misdemeanor prosecutions took place prior to this deputization.

The General Counsel acknowledges the holdings of the Authority that "conditions of employment" are only those which "directly relate" to personal policies, practices, and matters affecting working conditions. See G.C. Br. 12, citing National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 3 FLRA No. 112, 3 FLRA 692, 695 (1980) holding negotiable a union proposal which would set criteria for approving applications for outside employment, where the agency had a written policy concerning outside employment that was determinative of whether employees would be eligible for certain positions within the agency or could continue to be employed by the agency, and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA No. 77, 2 FLRA 604, 605 (1980), holding negotiable a union proposal that the agency provide space and facilities for a day care center, after noting that the availability of such facilities could be determinative of whether an individual would be able to accept a job with the agency and of whether the employee could continue employment, and could affect employee morale, tardiness and absenteeism, thus having an affect on use of leave and productivity. Two other Authority cases cited by the General Counsel each involve a finding of a failure to bargain over changes in agency policy and regulations concerning traffic and parking violations, which resulted in an additional penalty being imposed, namely a monetary penalty. See G.C. Br. 14, citing Department of the Air Force, Malmstrom Air Force Base, Montana and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2609, AFL-CIO, 2 FLRA No. 2, 2 FLRA 12, 18-19 (1979) and Philadelphia Naval Shipyard, Department of the Navy and International Federation of Professional and Technical Engineers, Local 3 and Philadelphia Naval Shipyard, Department of the Navy and Philadelphia Metal Trades Council, 15 FLRA No. 7, 15 FLRA 26, 35 (1984). The last case relied upon by the General Counsel involved a holding of negotiability as to a union proposal that an agency try to keep cafeteria prices down. See G.C. Br. 14, citing American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 8 FLRA No. 87, 8 FLRA 409 (1982).

Each of the above-cited cases bears a marked difference to the one here involved. Day-care centers and cafeteria prices have a clearly seen, immediate, and continuing impact on the work situation. In contrast, the increased possibility of prosecution for violation of Federal criminal statutes has a remote, nebulous impact on the work situation and the employment relationship, particularly since the possibility of prosecution has always been present anyway.

The cases involving traffic and parking violations have a somewhat closer nexus to this case. However, in those cases employees were presumably invited to bring their cars onto the agency's premises and to park them there and may not have had any other reasonable mode of transportation to their jobs. Here, the agency certainly does not invite employees onto its premises to commit assaults, engage in acts of thievery, or engage in other misdemeanors. Indeed, such unlawful acts are the antithesis of a bona fide employment relationship and disrupt the work situation.

A case which I find more persuasive is International Association of Fire Fighters, AFL-CIO, CLC, Local F-116 and Department of the Air Force, Vandenburg Air Force Base, California, 7 FLRA No. 18, 7 FLRA 123 and 127 (1981), in which the Authority found nonnegotiable a union proposal to allow employees and their dependents to hunt and fish on the premises of the base. While the hunting and fishing activities would take place on the agency's premises, and be engaged in by employees, they nevertheless involved personal, recreational acts and not ones directly related to the employment relationship. So here, the increased possibility of prosecution concerns actions which are taken by employees on the agency's premises, but involve actions which are personal, not employment related.

In addition, in this case, bargaining-unit employees at the Center have always been subject to prosecution for their unlawful actions; no new penalties have been imposed; no new investigative procedures have been implemented; and no new regulations have been promulgated. Furthermore,, and in agreement with Respondent, I conclude that nothing in the Statute "clearly gives federal employees any type of right to protection against an increase in the possibility of criminal prosecution, nor does it contain any provisions, implying such a congressional interest" (R. Br. 10). Rather, "Congress stated unequivocally that the public interest demands the highest standards of employee performance" and that '[t]he provisions of the [Statute] should be interpreted in a manner consistent with the requirement of an effective and efficient Government'" (R. Br. 10, citing 5 U.S.C. 7101(a)(2) and (6). It would not promote such a Government to hold that an agency must spend time in bargaining, and perhaps endure a prolonged period of impasse procedures, before it can take steps to protect itself against wayward employees who happen to violate Federal criminal statutes while on its premises.[4]

Because of the above conclusion, other issues raised by the parties need not be resolved.

Ultimate Findings and Recommended Order

Respondent has not engaged in unfair labor practices, in violation of 5 U.S.C. 7116(a)(1) and (5), as alleged in the complaint.

Accordingly, it is hereby ORDERED that the complaint in this case should be, and hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions filed by the General Counsel to the attached decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The complaint alleged that the Respondent: (1) violated section 7116(a)(1) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by directing the Union's President, Jeffrey Allen, to wear his firefighter dress uniform to a collective bargaining meeting; (2) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (2) by suspending him for three days for his refusal to do so; and (3) violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) by requiring, at all times since that incident, all employee/union negotiators who would otherwise be in a duty status to wear the firefighter dress uniform to collective bargaining meetings, as a condition for being allowed official time to participate in such meetings.

II. Background Facts

Department of the Navy Regulations make the wearing of a prescribed or standard blue uniform (without a tie) mandatory during the normal work period. The addition of a tie makes the uniform a "dress" uniform. The standard firefighter's uniform must ordinarily be worn when they are on official business outside the station that brings them into contact with base officials or the public. Building N-26 is specified as one in which the dress uniform must always be worn. The matter at issue (that is, whether uniforms should be required at collective bargaining meetings) is not specifically addressed in the Regulations.

Allen was scheduled to go to a collective bargaining meeting in Building N-26. He was directed by his supervisor, District Chief Washburn, to attend the meeting in his dress uniform and to ride with Washburn to the meeting in a government vehicle. Allen replied that he was attending the meeting as a representative of a labor organization, not as a firefighter, and felt it improper to be so directed. Washburn also told Allen that if he disobeyed the order, he would be leaving the station unauthorized. Allen left in civilian clothes and refused the transportation. Upon arriving at the meeting place, Allen was told that he was on unauthorized absence and out of uniform and should return to his duty station. He did not return directly, but took time to discuss the incident with the Director of the Respondent's Labor and Employee Relations Department. Subsequently, Allen was suspended for three days for disobeying a direct order of the District Chief. Since the day of the incident, firefighters have been required to wear their dress uniforms to collective bargaining meetings.

III. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel contends that the Respondent has no right to dictate the manner in which employee/Union negotiators must be dressed, and therefore disciplining Allen for refusing to wear the proper uniform must also be unlawful. The General Counsel also argues that the requirement for such negotiators to wear the dress uniform to negotiations clearly has a negative psychological impact on the employees, particularly in view of the significantly more impressive uniforms denoting higher rank worn by some of management's negotiators.

The Respondent pointed out in its brief to the Administrative Law Judge, which is part of the record in this case, that, although excused from duty in order to negotiate, Allen here was on call, and if he had to respond to an alarm he must be in uniform for purposes of being identified by the public and other civic firefighters for safety and other purposes. The Respondent also pointed out that the Union's other negotiator in this case, who was also an employee/firefighter but on his own time, was allowed to wear civilian clothes to the negotiations. Finally, the Respondent argued that the uniform-wearing requirement was strictly for internal security/safety reasons, and had nothing to do with union activity.

IV. The Judge's Findings

The Judge recommended that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. He found that the Respondent had a legitimate and substantial justification for its requirement and that the requirement at worst had only a slight psychological impact on the protected rights of employees. Further, he found that the discipline against Allen was strictly because of his refusal to follow direct orders, and was not in retaliation for union activity.

V. Analysis

The Authority agrees with the Judge in all respects. Thus, we find that the Respondent here had a legitimate reason for its requirement, and note particularly that this requirement only pertained to employee/negotiators who were on call during negotiations. We cannot conclude in the circumstances of this case that the uniform-wearing requirement for on-call firefighters was for reasons other than management's expressed concern for safety. For the same reason, we do not find a violation of the Statute in the Respondent's continuing imposition of the requirement. Additionally, noting that Allen had been specifically and clearly informed of the consequences of his intended action, we find that the suspension action was not in retaliation for his union activity as alleged, but rather for his refusal to obey a direct order.

The General Counsel questions the fact that the Judge did not cite to and follow his recommended decision in a prior case in which the Judge had found a violation. The case referred to by the General Counsel has since been issued by the Authority. See 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, Arizona Air National Guard, Tucson, Arizona, 21 FLRA No. 90 (1986), in which we found a violation of the Statute because the National Guard required an employee, subpenaed by the Authority, to wear the military uniform while appearing as a witness for the Authority in order to be granted official time. We find these cases distinguishable. In 162nd Tactical Fighter Group, the employee involved was obeying an order of the Authority's General Counsel, which carried with it entitlements under section 7131(c) of the Statute; the employee was not on call; and there was no reason shown for the agency to require the uniform to be worn. In this case, by contrast, the employee involved was not under subpena by the Authority; the employee was in an on-call status; and the Respondent had a legitimate reason for its uniform-wearing requirement.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the exceptions to that decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order. We therefore conclude that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1), (2) or (5) of the Statute as alleged in the complaint.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This decision concerns an unfair labor practice complaint issued by the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Washington, D.C. against the Norfolk Naval Station, Department of the Navy (Respondent), based on charges filed by Local 13, Federal Firefighters Association (Charging Party or Union). The complaint alleged, in substance, that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1), (2), and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. § 7101 et seq. (the Statute), by directing the Union's president, Jeffrey W. Allen, to wear his firefighter uniform to a collective bargaining session on November 20, 1984; suspending him for three days for his refusal to do so; and, at all times material since then, by requiring all employee-Union negotiators to wear firefighter uniforms to collective bargaining meetings, as a condition for such meetings, during the time employee-Union negotiators otherwise would be in a duty status.

Respondent's answer admitted the jurisdictional allegations as to the Respondent, the Union, and the charge, but denied all other allegations.

A hearing was held in Norfolk, Virginia. The Respondent, Charging Party, and the General Counsel were represented and afforded full opportunity to be heard, adduce relevant evidence, examine and cross-examine witnesses, and file post-hearing briefs. The Respondent and General Counsel filed helpful briefs. Based on the entire record,[1] including my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor, I make the following findings of fact, conclusions of law, and recommendations.

Findings of Fact

1. Department of the Navy (DON) regulations set forth in CPI 594-B and Naval Station (NAVSTA) Norfolk Instruction 12272.1 prescribe the uniform to be worn by Navy firefighters and set forth the circumstances, variations and exceptions to the wearing of it. Firefighters are paid an initial uniform allowance of $125.00 with quarterly replacement of $31.25. Receipt of the uniform allowance carries with it a concomitant obligation to obtain and wear the uniform as prescribed. The prescribed standard firefighter uniform consists of navy blue long or short-sleeved shirts, and trousers, tie, cap and belt. Firefighters also wear silver colored devices or patches. The uniform is intended for both work and dress, the distinction being that the tie is not required for work. Wearing of the prescribed uniform is mandatory during the normal work period with one or two exceptions in the NAVSTA Instruction. Specifically, navy blue coveralls and navy blue T-shirts with the Naval Base emblem may be worn in lieu of the standard uniform when working within or around the fire station or on the fire-servicing station grounds and while testing or servicing fire hydrants and sprinkler systems. Firefighters are also permitted to wear clothes other than their dress uniform outside the fire station when they are engaged in physical fitness programs.

However, when responding to an alarm, they must wear turn-out gear, or protective firefighting gear, consisting of pants, coat, boots and helmet when they leave the station, except for drivers who for safety do not put on pants and boots until the truck arrives at the scene. Firefighters are responsible for assuring that this gear is always readily accessible, either on the truck located inside or immediately outside the fire station or in the station living quarters. They must even take the gear with them to the shower. It makes no difference what, if anything, is on underneath. The protective gear can be worn over athletic clothing, the standard uniform, coveralls, civilian attire, if the alarm sounds shortly before the end of the shift, or put on straight from the shower at the moment the alarm sounds. This gear not only protects the firefighter, but readily identifies him as a firefighter.

[1] The General Counsel's unopposed motion to correct the transcript is granted; the transcript is hereby corrected as set forth therein.

Other than the above exceptions, the standard firefighter uniform must be worn by firefighters when they are outside the fire station. The dress mode, i.e., with tie, is always required when fire department personnel are on official business outside the station that brings them into contact with base or public officials or with the general public. The dress uniform is always worn when going to Building N-26. There are no exceptions to the uniform requirement, either by regulation or local policy, for the purpose of negotiations. The matter has not been specifically addressed in the regulations.

2. On November 20, 1984 a collective bargaining session was scheduled for 10:30 a.m. between the Fire Chief, Naval Station, Alvah L. Cuthriell, and Jeffrey W. Allen, President, Local 13, Federal Firefighters Association to negotiate proposed ground rules for a collective bargaining agreement and to discuss other matters. The meeting was scheduled for the Fire Chief's office in Building N-26, which is the Headquarters of the Commander, Naval Base.

3. Jeffrey W. Allen is a Lieutenant assigned to the ladder rescue truck in Fire Station No. 1. He reported at 7:00 a.m. on November 20, 1984 for a 24-hour shift. As the driver/operator of the ladder truck, he is subject to responding to all emergency alarms coming to any of the four stations on the base at any time during his 24-hour shift.

4. Prior to departing the station for the collective bargaining session, Allen was ordered by District Chief Robert Washburn to attend the meeting in the standard dress uniform and to go with Washburn in a government vehicle. Allen replied that he was attending the session as a representative of a labor organization and not as a firefighter, and he did not feel it was proper to wear a uniform at such a meeting. Allen told Washburn that he intended to be on official time, to wear his normal civilian attire, and to go with Union vice president Overby in a private vehicle. Washburn informed Allen that if he disobeyed, he would be leaving the station unauthorized. Allen left the station in civilian attire in Overby's private vehicle.

5. Upon arriving at Building N-26 out of uniform, Allen was informed by Assistant Chief B.R. Grimes that the Chief would not meet with him because he was on unauthorized absence and out of uniform. He was ordered to return to his duty station and told that another meeting would be set up. Allen did not return to the station immediately. Instead, he went to the Personnel Office to see Fletcher F. Bell, Director of the Labor and Employer Relations Department.[2]

6. Following a notice of proposed suspension and Mr. Allen's reply thereto, Fire Chief Cuthriell made the determination on January 23, 1985 to suspend Allen without pay for three days for his refusal to obey the direct order of Chief Washburn to wear the prescribed uniform to the meeting. Allen was suspended from duty without pay on January 25, 27 and 29, 1985.

7. Since November 20, 1984, Respondent has required all firefighters to wear their dress uniforms to negotiations during the time the employees otherwise would be in a duty status and has required them to do so as a condition to engaging in negotiations. In contrast to the firefighters' dress uniform worn by unit employees, the normal dress uniforms of Chief Cuthriell and Deputy Chief Butler worn to these sessions includes black pants, white shirt, gold badge, gold collar devices, name plate, and gold sleeve patches or stripes. A third management negotiator, Lynda Holder, has worn civilian attire. She is not a firefighter.

8. Firefighters representing the Union in negotiations are subject to responding to a fire or emergency alarm that may occur during negotiation sessions falling within their 24-hour duty shift. In case of a second alarm or a serious enough first alarm, the Fire Chief, Deputy Fire Chief, and all hands would be required to respond. In effect, negotiations would be recessed until the emergency is resolved.

9. While other employees would be substituting for Allen and other negotiators in their primary duties (such as serving on the ladder truck), in an emergency serious enough to interrupt negotiations, Allen and other firefighters would be directed to respond to perform other legitimate firefighter duties. A firefighter could be assigned to such matters as

[2] Allen testified that, during the visit of Union vice president Jack Overby and himself to Bell's office, they were discussing the fact that Allen had been required to come in his dress uniform, and "Mr. Bell stated that the Union, as far as he was concerned, would never be an equal party to these negotiations." Overby testified that "Mr. Bell told him (Allen) that as far as he was concerned, as long as he worked there, the Union would never be on the same footing with management." Bell testified that in discussing the mode of dress, he did not state the Union and management would never be equal at the bargaining table, but did "tell Mr. Allen that it didn't make any difference what he wore or what the Chief wore, the fact still remains that the Fire Chief is the Fire Chief and Mr. Allen and Mr. Overby were firefighters." Based on the entire record, I credit Bell's version.

working at the command post, filling and carrying cascade bottles to the fire scene, serving as a guide to the base for cooperating City of Norfolk firemen, and assisting in medical emergencies.

10. The uniform serves to readily identify the individual as a trained firefighter. Otherwise, Navy dispensary personnel or Norfolk City emergency personnel, who respond on a reciprocal basis, would have no way of knowing whether an individual giving first aid in civilian clothing is a well-meaning, but possibly incompetent, bystander, or a firefighter trained in emergency case. The uniform also instills confidence in an accident or heart attack patient that he is in the hands of a qualified, competent professional. The uniform also enables firefighters to have access to security areas. In addition, it provides a symbol of authority to the public in the event cars or persons have to be controlled or moved out of the way. The Fire Chief and other supervisory personnel have their own responsibilities at a fire or emergency scene. To require that they identify or accompany firefighters in civilian clothes as the occasion would require would not be effective or efficient.[3/]

11. None of the negotiation sessions conducted since November 20, 1984 has been interrupted by any kind of emergency.

12. Respondent has previously disciplined employees for insubordination and refusal to comply with uniform requirements. The employees were not involved in any protected activity at the time.

Discussion, Conclusions, and Recommendations

There is no dispute that Respondent's requirement that firemen wear the uniform while "on duty" constitutes management's choice of a "method and means of performing work" within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. The dispute centers around whether firefighter Union negotiators bargaining on official time during their 24-hour duty shift are "on duty" so as to be subject to the requirement.

The duty status of employees representing an exclusive representative in negotiations has been addressed by the Statute in relation to their entitlement to official time. Section 7131(a) of the Statute provides, in part, as follows:

[3/] In making Findings 8-10 I have credited the explanation of Respondent's witnesses in this regard after considering and rejecting the General Counsel's arguments, including that as to the speculative and conjectural nature of the potential problems and the credibility of Respondent's witnesses.

> "(a) Any employee representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement under this chapter shall be authorized official time for such purposes, including attendance at impasse proceeding, during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status."

The qualifying language "during the time the employee otherwise would be in a duty status" strongly suggests that an employee representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement during the time he would otherwise be scheduled to work is not considered in a duty status. Nor is the conclusion warranted that an employee so serving is acting in his "official capacity," "on the job," or on "official business" of the government. See Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 104 S. Ct. 439 (1983).

Counsel for the General Counsel contends that Respondent's requirement that Union negotiators wear their firefighters dress uniforms to negotiations when they otherwise would be in a duty status clearly has a negative psychological impact on such negotiators, particularly in view of the different uniforms denoting higher rank worn by two of the management negotiators and the civilian attire worn by the third management negotiator. He contends that this is a clear signal that management is in control, and it has an intimidating effect on Union negotiators and seriously undermines the collective-bargaining process in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute.

Although a firefighter is not in a duty status during negotiations, he is subject to being recalled to full duty status at a moment's notice. As noted, firefighter-negotiators are subject to responding to emergency alarms at any time during their 24-hour shift in which case negotiations would be postponed or interrupted. The response of firefighters must be instantaneous, and full readiness to respond in an appropriate uniform is critical to the efficient accomplishment of essential duties without undue delay. The General Counsel argues that the easiest and most obvious solution would be for Allen and other firefighters to take their protective gear with them to the negotiations. In this event, they could wear civilian clothing while negotiating, and, if an emergency arose, could don their protective gear over their civilian clothing and be prepared for the full range of firefighting duties. While this may be a less intrusive alternative, the choice of clothing in these circumstances is within management's discretion. Based on the record, there is a rational basis for requiring the dress uniform. The dress uniform would facilitate the performance of some essential emergency duties should the need arise. It is also consistent with existing practice and regulation pursuant to which the dress uniform is always worn by firefighters when leaving the fire station during a duty period for purposes other than dirty work, athletics, or fire suppression activities.

The General Counsel and the Charging Party would have Union negotiators wear civilian clothing to negotiations in order to demonstrate the equal status of the parties and a clear division between a firefighter's responsibilities when representing an exclusive representative in the negotiation of a collective bargaining agreement and that called for by his regular responsibilities, duties, and deference to his employer during normal duty hours. However, that clear division is simply not possible in matters of dress because of the unique status of firemen as compared to other Federal employees. Section 7101(b) requires that the provisions of the Statute "be interpreted in a manner consistent with the requirement of an effective and efficient Government." Respondent has a legitimate and substantial justification for its action, and its action has only a comparatively slight "psychological" impact on protected rights. No demonstrable impact was shown.

In view of the foregoing, it is concluded that a preponderance of the evidence does not establish that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute, as alleged, by directing the Union's president, Jeffrey W. Allen, to wear his dress firefighter uniform to a collective bargaining session on November 20, 1984, or by requiring all employee-Union negotiators to wear their dress firefighter uniforms to collective bargaining meetings during the time the employee-Union negotiators otherwise would be in a duty status.

It is also concluded that a preponderance of the evidence does not establish that Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute, as alleged, by suspending Allen for three days for his refusal to wear his dress firefighter uniform to the collective bargaining session. The discipline of Allen was not motivated by the Union activity in which he was scheduled to participate. Rather, it was taken because he deliberately violated the requirement that all firefighters must be in dress uniform when they leave the fire station premises during a duty period. The disciplinary action was entirely consistent with the discipline given other employees for similar offenses.

Based on the foregoing findings and conclusions, it is recommended that the Authority issue the following Order:

ORDER DISMISSING EXCEPTIONS

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator David A. Singer, Jr. filed by the Union pursuant to section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. For the reasons stated below, it has been determined that the exceptions must be dismissed as untimely filed.

The Arbitrator's award was dated on or about April 23, 1986, and appears to have been served on the parties by mail on the same day.

computation of the time limit here involved, any exceptions to the Arbitrator's award in this case had to be filed with the Authority no later than the close of business on May 27, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its national office until June 6, 1986. In this regard, the record established that the Union mailed the exceptions to the Authority's Atlanta Regional Office at its former address on May 22, 1986. The Atlanta Regional Office received them on June 2, 1986, and exercised due diligence in forwarding the exceptions that same day. However, they were not received by the Authority's national office until June 6, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

Accordingly, as the Union's exceptions were untimely filed, and apart from other considerations, they are hereby dismissed.

For the Authority.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority at this time on a request filed by the Union seeking reconsideration of the Authority's decision of May 9, 1986, modifying the Arbitrator's award in the case.

In his opinion accompanying the award, the Arbitrator determined that management had failed to comply with agreement provisions concerning performance standards and that but for the erroneous applications of the dictates of the collective bargaining agreement, the recommended promotion of the grievant would originally have been approved. As his award, the Arbitrator ordered the grievant retroactively promoted with backpay. In its exceptions to the award, the Agency contended that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596, and section 7106(a) of the Statute. The Authority agreed and held that the Arbitrator's determinations did not constitute the findings required to support an award of retroactive promotion and backpay. In its request for reconsideration, the Union essentially argues that the Authority misinterpreted the Arbitrator's award.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations permits a party that can establish "extraordinary circumstances" to move for reconsideration of a decision of the Authority. Here, however, the Union has not established "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of section 2429.17. Rather, the arguments presented by the Union in support of its request essentially constitute nothing more than disagreement with the merits of the Authority's decision and an attempt to relitigate the matter.

Accordingly, the Union's request for reconsideration is denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., June 30, 1986.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Arthur T. Van Wart filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

In response to a union request concerning procedure, the Authority ruled on those portions of proposals able to stand independently of the rest of the proposal, and specifically addressed by the parties in their submissions to the Authority.

A proposal is negotiable that would provide the union an opportunity to include appropriate orientation information in the orientation mailing sent to new employees in the bargaining unit. The proposal does not conflict with the agency's rights under § 7106(b)(1) to determine the methods, means and technology of performing its work because, contrary to the agency's argument, neither the proposal's literal language nor its intended meaning would require new mailings. The proposal concerns "conditions of employment" in the bargaining unit because it relates to matters concerning bargaining unit positions even though it would be effective at a time before the selectees have been appointed. (proposal 1)

A proposal is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation and outside the duty to bargain that would require the continuation of living quarters allowance (LQA) and post allowances for unspecified periods during which employees are representing the union while in a nonpay status. The proposal conflicts with provisions of Department of State Standardized Regulations (DSSRs) that contain explicit restrictions on payment of the allowances contained in the proposal. The DSSRs were found to be Government-wide regulations as they cover not only bargaining unit employees but civilian Federal employees generally with respect to certain allowances and differentials provided in connection with overseas assignment and travel. However, the proposal's language regarding entitlements to health benefits and life insurance is within the duty to bargain as it does not conflict with the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM). Because limitations imposed by law are expressly incorporated by the language of the proposal, they encompass the relevant FPM provisions, which are derivative and only reiterate specific limitations contained in Federal law. (proposal 2)

A proposal is negotiable because it allows that the performance of agency duties will take precedence over any rights to seek union assistance. Thus, the proposal would not interfere with agency rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to direct employees and to assign work. (proposal 3)

A proposal is nonnegotiable because it makes no allowance for instances where disclosure of records would be inconsistent with law and Government-wide rule or regulation; such as, divulging medical information contrary to the regulations of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), or requiring that an employee be given access to the records of other employees in violation of the Privacy Act. (proposal 4)

A proposal is nonnegotiable as it would prevent the agency from requiring its employees to follow directives by military personnel in the context of the employee's use of facilities and services under the control of the military departments. The proposal conflicts with the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(A) to direct its employees. However, where a union holds exclusive recognition in a component of an agency, that component is obligated to bargain over conditions of employment despite the fact that control over a particular condition of employment rests with a different organizational component. In that circumstance, the only limits on an agency's obligation to bargain over conditions of employment are those placed on its discretion by provisions of law, Government-wide rule or regulation, or agency regulations for which a compelling need exists. (proposal 5)

A proposal is negotiable that requires the agency to ensure that dues withholding monies be forwarded within 14 calendar days of each pay period to the appropriate official designated by the union. The agency's contention that the proposal is not within its duty to bargain because its payroll function is administered by the military departments is rejected. Even if the the military departments were acting under their own delegated authority rather than, as here, under a servicing agreement, the proposal would be negotiable. (proposal 6)

A proposal is negotiable as it is not contrary to § 7115, which merely establishes a mechanism for the payment of dues by bargaining unit employees as opposed to prescribing a permissible dues structure for labor organizations. Nothing in the section

prohibits dues collection based on a particular "flat fee" dues structure. (proposal 7)

A proposal is outside the duty to bargain because it conflicts with § 7116(a)(3) as the union would have exclusive use of the agency mail system for the distribution of, among other matter, union campaign literature even when a competing union had "equivalent status." (proposal 8)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that solely concerns individuals who are neither employees of the agency nor in the bargaining unit. (proposals 9, 11, and 12)

A proposal is negotiable that seeks to negotiate over matters covered by Joint Travel Regulations (JTRs). The proposal neither conflicts directly with agency cited decisions of the Comptroller General -- Comp Gen B-158880, April 28, 1966 (unpub), and Comp Gen B-158880, October 27, 1966 (unpub)-- (without deciding under what circumstances decisions of the Comptroller General might constitute Government-wide rules and regulations), nor does it conflict with any requirements the decisions may place on the manner in which the JTRs are administered. Additionally, nothing in the cited Comptroller General decisions would require any provisions negotiated to be applied to nonunit employees. (proposal 10)

A proposal is negotiable that concerns the allocation of telephone resources to the union. Where a union holds exclusive recognition in a component of an agency, that component is obligated to bargain over conditions of employment despite the fact that control over a particular condition of employment rests with a different organizational component. (proposal 13)

As written, the proposal is an elective subject on which the agency has chosen not to bargain. Because the proposal would require that telephones, or access to them, be provided employees for the purpose of conducting the business of the agency, it concerns the technology of performing work within the meaning of § 7106(b)(1). (proposal 14)

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that there were substantial errors in the selection action for a supervisory professional engineer position, for which the grievant failed to be selected. The arbitrator ordered that the selection and recruitment process for the position be rerun in accordance with applicable laws, rules, and regulations and that the selected employee be retained in the position pending the corrective action. In addition, the arbitrator ordered that the attorney for the grievant be compensated by the agency.

In its exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees to the grievant is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. Contrary to the position of the union in its opposition, the Authority found that an arbitrator is not authorized to award attorney fees solely under the terms of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), independent of the terms of the Back Pay Act, even in cases of prohibited personnel practices. In this case, the Authority concluded that the arbitrator's award of attorney fees is deficient as contrary to an express requirement of the Back Pay Act. Although the arbitrator determined that the grievant had been affected by the improper selection action, he did not determine that this resulted in a withdrawal of reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials, and consequently he awarded no backpay to the grievant. Thus, the arbitrator's award of attorney fees was not in conjunction with an award of backpay on correction of the improper selection action. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award by striking the paragraph setting forth the award of attorney fees.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator found that the grievant "should have been . . . promoted" to the position of planner and estimator, WD-8 as a result of improper oral inducements and the improper use of a temporary promotion. The arbitrator ordered that the grievant be promoted on a permanent basis to the position effective on a date certain.

In one of its exceptions, the agency contended that the award interferes with management's right to select in violation of $ 7106(a)(2)(C) and FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, Requirement 4. The Authority concluded that arbitrator's finding that the grievant should have been promoted does not support the award of a permanent promotion as the finding does not constitute the necessary finding that but for the unwarranted action, the responsible selecting official would have selected the grievant for the position on a permanent basis on a date certain. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award by striking the order that the grievant be promoted on a permanent basis to the position on a date certain. In view of this decision, it was not necessary to address the agency's other exceptions.

Six travel and per diem proposals are negotiable. The agency's argument that the proposals do not involve conditions of employment was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1192 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). The Authority also found that neither 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) nor the authorities to which it applies -- Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations, 41 CFR, Part 101-7 -- require a determination to be made unilaterally and only on a case by case basis that travel in the context of a particular activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government so as to constitute official business. Accordingly, the Authority concluded that the proposals are not inconsistent with law and

Government-wide regulations. Therefore, as the Authority found no support for the agency's assertion that its Personnel Letter No. 711-10 implements in an essentially nondiscretionary manner a mandate to it by an outside authority, the Authority concluded that no compelling need exists for the agency's regulation. (proposals 1 - 6)

Two RIF proposals are negotiable. The Authority concluded that the agency failed to carry its burden of establishing that the proposals are inconsistent with its regulations for which it claims a compelling need exists. (proposals 7 - 8)

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that the agency violated § 7106(a)(1) and (5) when it unilaterally failed and refused to implement an agreement with the union to establish an employee lunch-break area. Concluding that the Statute does not require that negotiations must follow any prescribed procedure, the Judge found, contrary to the agency's contention, that the parties' meetings constituted bargaining on the matter. Further, the Authority specifically noted its agreement with the Judge that it is unnecessary to address arguments going to the agency's initial bargaining obligation when in fact the agency bargained and agreed to the lunch-break area. As a remedy, the agency was ordered to implement the parties' agreement to establish a lunch-break area for employees.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of 14 Union proposals. The Union has requested that the Authority sever "any parts, subparts, sentences, phrases or words" of proposals which are found to be nonnegotiable and "declare negotiable so much of the proposals which are negotiable." The Authority grants the Union's request to the limited extent that we will rule upon those portions of the proposals which we view, as submitted, as being able to stand independently of the rest of the proposal and which have been specifically addressed by the parties in their submissions to the Authority.[1]

[1] By its Order dated June 30, 1986, the Authority denied the Agency's motion to consolidate Case Nos. O-NG-840, O-NG-850, O-NG-950, O-NG-1115 and O-NG-1227.

> Association with the opportunity to include appropriate orientation information in the orientation mailing sent to new employees in the bargaining unit. The Association shall also be provided an opportunity to present appropriate orientation material at any orientation sessions.

A. Positions of the Parties

Because the underlined portion of the proposal applies to a point in time before the newly selected teachers have actually been appointed to their positions, that is, during the summer before the school year has begun, the Agency (DoDDS) argues that it does not relate to "employees." Additionally, it asserts that newly selected teachers may be destined for a bargaining unit other than that represented by the Union (OEA). Consequently, it contends that the proposal does not concern conditions of employment of employees in the OEA bargaining unit. Secondly, DoDDS states that because not all schools do orientation mailings, the proposal would require it to institute mailings where none currently exist. Thus, it argues that the proposal conflicts with its right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the methods, means and technology of performing its work.

The Union states that the proposal is intended to apply only to those new employees who are being assigned to schools in its bargaining unit and only to existing orientation mailings.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As to requiring new mailings, neither the literal language nor the intended meaning of the proposal would require that. Therefore, DoDDS' argument that the proposal conflicts with section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute is rejected.

As to the "conditions of employment" argument, we note that the proposal, by intent and language, is limited to new employees assigned to schools in the OEA bargaining unit. Moreover, DoDDS does not dispute that the provision of "appropriate orientation information" is a matter affecting working conditions and hence a condition of employment. The only issue, then, is with the timing of the mailing. In our view, the material which would be provided relates solely to the selectees' status as individuals designated for employment in bargaining unit positions and has relevance specifically to employment in those positions. Thus, even though the proposal would be effective at a time before the selectees have been appointed, it relates to matters concerning bargaining unit positions and, consequently, concerns conditions of employment in the bargaining unit. Union Proposal 1 is within the duty to bargain. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 275 (1981) (Union Proposals 2-4) where the Authority held negotiable proposals which prescribed procedures for filling vacancies in the bargaining unit even though the procedures would apply to candidates who were currently outside the unit.

III. Union Proposal 2

Section 2-E

> Employees who are released from duty without pay to represent the Association shall retain entitlement to all allowances and benefits (including, but not limited to: step increase, insurance, health benefits, LQA, post allowances, transportation agreement, teaching position, eligibility for transfer program, retirement credit) for the period of representation unless prohibited by law.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS contends that Union Proposal 2 conflicts with Government-wide regulations, specifically asserting that:

(1) the provision relating to insurance conflicts with Federal Personnel Manual Supplement 870-1;

(2) the provision relating to health benefits conflicts with Federal Personnel Manual Supplement 890-1;

(3) the provision relating to living quarters allowance (LQA) and post differential conflicts with the Department of State Standardized Regulations (DSSRs).

OEA, in its reply brief, states that the phrase "unless prohibited by law" is intended to mean that the entitlements sought are to be granted only to the extent permitted by law and Government-wide regulations. It claims that the proposal, being so limited, cannot possibly conflict with those regulations. It concedes that the Federal Personnel Manual provisions involved are Government-wide regulations, however, it contends that the DSSRs are not.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Conflict with the DSSRs

The Authority has construed the term "Government-wide regulation" to include regulations and official declarations of policy which apply to the Federal civilian work force as a whole and are binding on the Federal agencies and officials to which they apply. The Authority emphasized that a requirement that a regulation apply, literally, to all Federal civilian employees in order to constitute a "Government-wide" regulation under section 7117 would render that provision virtually meaningless, since it appeared that few, if any, regulations affect every civilian employee of the Federal Government. The Authority found from the legislative history of the Statute that Congress understood "Government-wide regulations" to constitute a significant limitation on the scope of bargaining and intended the term to include more than the inconsequential number of regulations that might fall within a literal definition. Thus, the Authority concluded that a regulation is a Government-wide regulation under section 7117 if it is generally applicable throughout the Federal Government as opposed to applying to every Federal employee. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747 (1980).

Various laws providing for certain allowances and differentials for civilian employee travel and assignment overseas authorize the President of the United States to issue implementing regulations.[2] By Executive Orders,[3] this authority is delegated to the Secretary of State who has exercised it by issuing the DSSRs. The DSSRs govern allowances, differentials, and defraying of official residence expenses in foreign areas.[4] As to those subjects, they apply to Federal civilian employees generally[5] and are binding on the heads of agencies.[6]

[2] For example, Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act, 73 Stat. 213 (1959); the Overseas Differentials and Allowances Act, 74 Stat. 792 (1960); and the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq.).

OEA argues that because Chapter 700 of the DSSRs applies only to Department of Defense teachers and that, but for Chapter 700, the DSSRs would not apply to the teachers, the DSSRs are not Government-wide rules or regulations. In the Authority's view, Chapter 700 merely sets forth modifications to the overall provisions of the DSSRs to accommodate the special circumstances of teacher employment -- most notably the fact that their employment is oriented around the school year.[7] The Authority concludes that the DSSRs, in general, apply to teachers. See also note 4 above.

We reach this conclusion notwithstanding two apparently contrary statements in, respectively, the legislative history of the Statute and of the Foreign Service Act of 1980. First, the legislative history of the Statute contains remarks made by Rep. William D. Ford, regarding the "Udall substitute" which became the final House version of the bill which was enacted, which seem to suggest that the DSSRs are not to be treated as Government-wide regulations within the meaning of the Statute.[8] We think this misconstrues the DSSRs and is inconsistent with the overall intent of the Congress. As noted above, authority to issue regulations governing the subjects which the DSSRs address was delegated from the Congress through the President to the Department of State. Further, the DSSRs cover not only teachers but civilian Federal employees generally with respect to certain allowances and differentials provided in connection with overseas assignment and travel.

Second, a statement in the conference report preceeding enactment of the Foreign Service Act of 1980 (legislation which, among other things, established a labor-management relations program in the Foreign Service, modeled on the Statute), characterizes the DSSRs as not being "Government-wide" within the meaning of the Statute.[9] The legislative history of the Foreign Service Act is not dispositive in interpreting the Statute. See Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140, 1157 n.94 (D.C. Cir. 1981) in which the court stated that it considered the legislative history of the Foreign Service Act to be relevant but not dispositive evidence or even an "especially important factor" in interpreting the Statute. In any event, as explained earlier, the Authority does not interpret the term "Government-wide rule or regulation" literally because we believe the result would be inconsistent with Congressional intent.

Hence, based on the Authority's previous decisions, we conclude that the DSSRs are Government-wide regulations.

Union Proposal 2 would require the continuation of LQA and post allowances for unspecified periods during which employees are representing OEA while in a nonpay status. We find that this conflicts with DSSR provisions which contain explicit restrictions on payment of those allowances.[10] Although OEA has stated that its proposal should be read as incorporating any limitations imposed by Government-wide rules and regulations as well as law, the language of the proposal does not reflect this intent. Consequently, we find the proposal as written concerning LQA and post allowances is inconsistent with a Government-wide regulation and outside the duty to bargain.

2. Conflict with the Federal Personnel Manual

DoDDS has also argued that insofar as the proposal would allow an unlimited and unconditional continuation of life insurance and health insurance benefits, it conflicts with provisions in the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM). The FPM limits the extent to which employees in nonpay status may retain life insurance coverage[11] and continue enrollment in a health benefits plan.[12] However, the FPM also allows an employee granted leave without pay to serve in an employee organization to elect the option of continuing health benefits and life insurance coverage indefinitely if the employee pays both the Government and employee contributions to cover premium costs. These FPM provisions are derivative and only reiterate specific limitations contained in Federal law. See 5 U.S.C. § 8706(a) and (d) [life insurance] and 5 U.S.C. § 8906(e) [health benefits]. Because limitations imposed by law are expressly incorporated by the language of the proposal, so by extension are the derivative provisions of the FPM. Therefore, we find the proposed entitlements to health benefits and life insurance do not exceed those permitted by Federal law and the FPM. DoDDS' contention that the proposal conflicts with the FPM is rejected as a basis for finding that aspect of the proposal nonnegotiable.

IV. Union Proposal 3

Section 3-D

> Each employee has the right to seek assistance from an Association Representative at any time as long as such assistance does not interfere with the carrying out of instructional duties.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS asserts that the proposal would interfere with its rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to direct employees and to assign work. In support of this contention, it argues that the proposal, as written, would prevent it from assigning duties to an employee who decides to seek assistance from a Union representative during the preparation period, lunch period or between classes.

The OEA states that Union Proposal 3 is intended to allow teachers to visit Association representatives only when no specific duties are assigned and that it is not intended to prohibit the Agency from assigning duties to teachers during periods of free time.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Union's statement of intent is compatible with the language of the proposal which specifically allows that performance of duties will take precedence over any rights to seek union assistance. In view of this meaning, the Agency's argument that the proposal would interfere with its rights to direct employees and to assign work is unpersuasive. Union Proposal 3 is within the duty to bargain. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3511 and Veterans Administration Hospital, San Antonio, Texas, 12 FLRA 76 (1983) (Union Proposal 29) in which the Authority found negotiable a proposal which would neither prevent management from assigning duties to employees during their meal periods nor relieve employees of the responsibility to perform any work scheduled during that time.

V. Union Proposal 4

> Section 3-E(7):
> Any records to which the employee has not been granted access shall not be used to adversely affect said employee.

A. Positions of the Parties

OEA states that under the proposal, when an employee is denied access to material, "those records or documents and the information contained in them may not be used against the employee in any way which may adversely affect the employee in the course of his/her employment." [Emphasis supplied.] DoDDS asserts that, as written, the proposal could require it to disclose information even though under law and regulation it might be improper to do so. Alternatively, the proposal could prevent it from taking actions relating to an employee because of legal prohibitions on the release of relevant information. Because of this, the proposal is inconsistent with law and Government-wide rule or regulation and interferes with its management rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute. In response OEA argues that under the Privacy Act and the laws and regulations governing adverse actions employees are already entitled to the records addressed by the proposal.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Based on the language of the proposal and the Union's statement of intent, we find that the proposal is not limited to "adverse actions" within the meaning of title 5 of the U.S. Code. 5 U.S.C. 7501 et seq. Rather, it would give employees unrestricted access to any and all "records" used in a manner which would affect them in a negative way. The proposal makes no allowance for instances where disclosure would be inconsistent with law and Government-wide rule or regulation such as divulging medical information contrary to the regulations of the Office of Personnel Management (OPM).

OPM is authorized to issue regulations governing, among other things, disability retirement applications. 5 U.S.C. § 8347. Its regulations concerning applications filed by agencies are codified at 5 CFR §§ 831.1201-1206 and apply generally to employees in the executive branch. 5 CFR §§ 831.201 and 831.1201. The Authority finds that they are Government-wide regulations.[13]

Those regulations incorporate by reference[14] another OPM regulation which prohibits an agency from disclosing medical information "concerning a mental or other condition of such a nature that a prudent physician would hesitate to inform a person suffering from it of its exact nature and probable outcome. . . ." According to this provision an agency may give this type of information only to a licensed physician with no requirement to allow the employee access to it. Because these applications are filed in the context of removing an employee,[15] it is reasonable to conclude that it is an action adversely affecting the employee within the meaning of this proposal.

In another example, the proposal as written could also require that an employee be given access to the records of other employees in violation of the Privacy Act. More specifically, in a promotion action a nonselected employee seeking to challenge the outcome could, under the proposal, demand access to the records of other competing employees. The Authority has previously held that a proposal seeking unqualified access by nonselected employees to records of other employees involved in a promotion action was inconsistent with the Privacy Act and consequently nonnegotiable. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1745 and Veterans Administration, 13 FLRA 543 (1983) (Union Proposal 2), appealed as to other matters sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1745 v. FLRA, No. 84-1054 (D.C. Cir. Feb. 16, 1984).

[14] 5 CFR § 831.1204(b) refers to 5 CFR § 294.401(b). The provisions of 5 CFR § 294.401(b) have been relocated and appear at 5 CFR § 294.106(d). See 47 Fed. Reg. 46513 (1982) and 50 Fed. Reg. 3308 (1985).

In summary, because the proposal is framed in a manner that does not allow for observing legitimate legal and regulatory restrictions on disclosure of records, it is inconsistent with section 7117 of the Statute and is not within the duty to bargain. Because we have found that the Agency can not be required to divulge information where prohibited by law or Government-wide regulation, it is unnecessary to address the Agency's arguments that as an alternative to disclosure it would be prevented from exercising various management rights.

VI. Union Proposal 5

Section 3-K:

> Unless otherwise mandated by Federal law or government-wide regulations, employees in the bargaining unit will be responsible only to the Employer with respect to matters that affect their terms and conditions of employment.

A. Positions of the Parties

As explained by OEA, this proposal is intended to exempt employees from any obligation to follow directives given by military personnel but not to prohibit agency supervisors from issuing under their own authority orders of military origin. DoDDS asserts that because the proposal relates to "ancillary services" made available to employees, such as recreational services, housing facilities, and PX and commissary privileges, it does not concern conditions of employment. The Agency argues that because it has no control over the military it cannot bargain over services and facilities which are operated by the military. In support of this argument, it cites the Authority's decision in American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO and Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 578 (1982). OEA responds that because the Agency holds employees responsible for following orders of military personnel, the proposal relates to conditions of employment.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Conditions of Employment

Based on OEA's explanation and the language of the proposal itself, the proposal clearly would apply to matters which are conditions of employment. Therefore, we reject the Agency's argument to the contrary.

2. Effect of Military Control on Duty to Bargain

The Authority also rejects the Agency's argument that because control over the matters addressed by the proposal rests with other components of the Department of Defense it has no obligation to bargain. The Authority addressed a similar question in Defense Contract Administration Services Region, Boston, Massachusetts, 15 FLRA 750 (1984). In that case, the Authority held that where a union holds exclusive recognition in a component of an agency, that component is obligated to bargain over conditions of employment despite the fact that control over a particular condition of employment rests with a different organizational component in the same overall agency. The only limits on an agency's obligation to bargain over conditions of employment, in that circumstance, are those placed on its discretion by provisions of law, Government-wide rule or regulation or agency regulations for which a compelling need exists. American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO and Library of Congress, Washington, D.C., 7 FLRA 578 (1982) (Union Proposals XI-XIII), enf'd sub nom. Library of Congress v. FLRA, 699 F.2d 1280 (D.C. Cir. 1983) relied upon by DoDDS is inapposite. In Library of Congress authority over a particular condition of employment in the bargaining unit rested outside the agency (Library of Congress) with the Architect of the Capitol. The circumstances in this case are analogous to those in DCASR, Boston, as contrasted to those in Library of Congress. Therefore, the principles set forth in DCASR, Boston are applicable in this case. The fact that Department of Defense organizations other than DoDDS possess control over a matter which is the subject of an otherwise negotiable proposal does not present a basis for finding that proposal nonnegotiable.

3. Management Right to Direct Employees in the Agency

However, the Authority finds that the proposal is nonnegotiable for a reason other than those raised by the Agency. In the conduct of its mission DoDDS utilizes various facilities and services which are under the control of the military departments. The proposal would prevent DoDDS from requiring employees to follow directives given by military personnel in the context of their use of those facilities and services as DoDDS employees. In the Authority's view this would directly interfere with the Agency's supervision and guidance of employees insofar as use of those facilities and services is concerned. The proposal therefore conflicts with the Agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(A) to direct employees. See National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 769, 775 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982), in which the Authority discussed what is encompassed in the management right "to direct . . . employees in the agency." Thus, it is not within the duty to bargain. Compare American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, International Council of U.S. Marshals Service Locals and Department of Justice, U.S. Marshals Service, 11 FLRA 672 (1983) (Union Proposal 1) (a proposal which would preclude certain individuals from making work assignments to employees was held to conflict with the agency's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work).

VII. Union Proposal 6

ARTICLE 6 - DUES WITHHOLDING

Section 2-A:

Unit employees may have Association dues withheld from their pay on a biweekly basis during the school year in the amount established by the Association and authorized by the eligible employee. The Employer shall take what action is necessary to ensure the monies withheld will be forwarded within fourteen calendar days of each pay period to the appropriate official designated by the Association. Remittance checks will be accompanied by a listing of the names, amount withheld, and total income remitted, as well as the names of those employees for whom allotments have been temporarily or permanently stopped and the reason therefore.

A. Positions of the Parties

Because its payroll functions are administered by the military departments, DODDS argues that the underscored portion of the proposal is nonnegotiable. It also asserts that the proposal is contrary to law. OEA asserts that the fact that the military departments provide payroll services to DODDS does not relieve DODDS of its responsibility under section 7115 of the Statute to implement dues deductions for its employees.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The record indicates that military departments provide payroll services to DODDS under support or service agreements and as DODDS' agents. This arrangement does not relieve DODDS of its statutorily prescribed responsibility under section 7115 to implement dues allotments for its employees who are in the OEA bargaining unit. The Agency's contention that the proposal is not within its duty to bargain because its payroll function is administered by the military departments is rejected. We note that, even if the military departments were acting under their own delegated authority rather than under a servicing agreement, the proposal would be negotiable. See discussion in section VI(B)(2) above.

DODDS has failed to cite any specific provision and none is apparent to support its claim that the proposal conflicts with law. This contention is, therefore, rejected. Union Proposal 6 is within the duty to bargain.

VIII. Union Proposal 7

> Deductions for allotments shall begin on the first full pay period in October of the school year. Authorizations for allotments not received by the servicing finance office before the first full pay period in October shall become effective on the next biweekly pay period. The amount for such allotments shall be the annual dues divided by the number of full pay periods left in the school year. Dues shall be withheld only for full pay periods during the school year. By mutual agreement, an appropriate finance office and Association Representative may vary the terms of this section.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS contends that the underscored portion of Union Proposal 7 conflicts with section 7115 of the Statute. By requiring payment of a total annual amount regardless of when during the year allotment is initiated the proposal would require the payment of back dues, contrary to the requirement in section 7115 that dues allotments be made on a "regular and periodic" basis.

OEA states that its dues are an annual amount. Thus, a member is expected to pay the total yearly amount regardless of the point during the year at which he/she joins and authorizes withholding. It contends that the proposal reflects its flat membership fee type of dues structure rather than requiring payment of "back dues."

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Based on the Union's explanation of the proposal, we do not view the proposal as seeking collection of "back dues." Nor do we interpret the proposal to require the Agency to continue allotments after a revocation request or other circumstance (for example, promotion out of the bargaining unit) which would dictate termination.

In the Authority's view section 7115 establishes a mechanism for the payment of dues by bargaining unit employees as opposed to prescribing a permissible dues structure for the labor organizations. Nothing in it prohibits dues collection based on a particular "flat fee" dues structure. Consequently, we find that this proposal does not conflict with section 7115 of the Statute and is within the duty to bargain.

IX. Union Proposal 8

> ARTICLE 7 - USE OF OFFICIAL FACILITIES
> Section 2:
> The Employer/Designee recognizes that the Association Representative(s) has exclusive right to distribute all Union literature in the school international distribution boxes for unit employees. It is understood that the Civilian Personnel Office may distribute information on government-wide health benefit plans.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS contends that the underscored portion of this proposal would require it to limit access to its internal mail system to OEA even when a competing union had "equivalent status." This would be inconsistent with section 7116(a)(3) of the Statute. OEA states that the proposal is not intended to prevent a competing union from having access to the mail system "if there is a question concerning representation after the expiration of the contract." Union Reply Brief at 16.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

This proposal expressly applies to "all Union literature" and, thus, would encompass the distribution of Union campaign literature. A question concerning representation (QCR) can be raised, and a rival union can therefore gain "equivalent status" with an incumbent exclusive representative, prior to the expiration of a collective bargaining agreement. 5 U.S.C. § 7111(f)(3). Section 7116(a)(3) of the Statute obliges agencies to furnish customary and routine facilities and services to labor organizations having equivalent status. This proposal would require OEA to have exclusive use of the Agency mail system for the distribution of, among other things, union campaign literature even when a competing union had equivalent status. Because of this, it conflicts with section 7116(a)(3) of the Statute and is not within the duty to bargain.

X. Union Proposal 9

Section 4:

The Employer/Designee shall provide Association Representatives/Staff who are not employees of ODE/DoDDS with appropriate documents requesting utilization of military facilities and services overseas when such Representatives/Staff are acting pursuant to the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS argues that this proposal is nonnegotiable because it relates solely to individuals who are neither DoDDS employees nor bargaining unit members. OEA contends that the matters proposed would facilitate its ability to represent unit employees and, consequently, the proposal is negotiable.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority finds that this proposal concerns exclusively individuals who are neither employees of the Agency nor in the bargaining unit. The obligation of an agency to bargain concerning conditions of employment extends only to those employees in an appropriate bargaining unit represented by the exclusive representative. See, for example, United States Department of Defense, Department of the Air Force, San Antonio Air Logistics Center, Kelly Air Force Base, Texas, 15 FLRA 998 (1984). For the reasons expressed in Kelly Air Force Base, Union Proposal 9 is not within the duty to bargain.

XI. Union Proposal 10

> Section 5-A:
> A. The Employer/Designee shall provide Association Representatives/Staff who are employees of ODE/DoDDS with appropriate government Travel Orders for transportation for the purposes of conducting representational duties and to include a designation of the equivalent Management counterpart grade.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS asserts that the proposal is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with various provisions of the Department of Defense Joint Travel Regulations (JTRs). This claim centers on two Comptroller General (CG) decisions: Unpublished Decision of the Comptroller General B-158880, April 28, 1966 and Unpublished Decision of the Comptroller General B-158880, October 27, 1966, which the Agency interprets as requiring uniform application of the JTRs to all employees -- unit and nonunit alike. The Agency argues the proposal would require it to either "waive" conflicting JTR provisions for unit employees or apply the terms of the proposal to nonunit employees. Either result places the proposal outside the duty to bargain. To require it to waive JTR provisions is inconsistent with the CG decisions which it contends are Government-wide rules and regulations as well as a nondiscretionary mandate of an outside authority which establishes a compelling need for the JTRs under section 2424.11(c) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. To require it to apply the terms of the proposal to nonunit employees extends beyond its duty to bargain.

OEA argues that the CG decisions cited by DoDDS are not relevant to the question of whether under section 7117 of the Statute parties can agree to contract provisions which are inconsistent with provisions of agency regulations.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Section 7117(a) of the Statute specifically provides that the duty to bargain extends to matters which are the subject of an agency regulation where there is no compelling need for the regulation. This allows negotiations over proposed conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees which may differ from unilaterally established conditions of employment set forth in agency regulations. The Agency's strained interpretation of the Comptroller General's decisions deprives the compelling need provisions of the Statute of their intended meaning and is not supportable. Those decisions addressed the question of whether agencies could arbitrarily waive regulatory provisions in individual cases.16/ This question is

16/ Citing an earlier decision, the Comptroller General held:

> [I]n 37 Comp. Gen. 820 . . . we held that a statute which authorizes an administrative officer to prescribe regulations does not imply authority to include a waiver provision in the regulations which would permit the administrator in his discretion to disregard the regulations in certain individual cases and enforce them in others. Also, as we stated in that decision, regulations must contain a guide or standard alike to all individuals similarly situated, so that anyone interested may determine his own rights or exemptions therein.

Unpublished Decision of the Comptroller General B-158880, October 27, 1966.

distinguishable from that presented by this case which is whether parties have a statutory right to negotiate conditions of employment applying to bargaining unit employees which differ from those set forth in agency regulations. This proposal, by merely seeking to negotiate over matters covered by JTRs, does not conflict with the cited Comptroller General decisions themselves,[17] or with any requirements they may place on the manner in which the JTRs are administered. Additionally, the Authority finds that nothing in the cited Comptroller General decisions would require that any provisions negotiated be applied to nonunit employees.

Based on these reasons the Authority rejects the Agency's arguments. Our finding that in this case the Agency has not established a compelling need for any part of the JTRs, does not of course imply that a compelling need could not be established under other circumstances. Compare National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 561 and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Mobile, Alabama, 17 FLRA 759 (1985) aff'd sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 v. FLRA, No. 85-1398 (D.C. Cir. April 1, 1986) where the Authority found that a compelling need had been established for a portion of the JTRs. The Authority finds, based on the record here, that Union Proposal 10 is within the duty to bargain.

XII. Union Proposals 11 and 12

[Union Proposal 11]

Section 5-B:

> B. Association Representatives/Staff who are not employees of ODE/DoDDS shall be issued appropriate government Travel Orders on a reimbursable basis from the Association for transportation for the purpose of conducting representational duties and to include a designation of the equivalent Management counterpart grade.

---

[17] In view of this, it is unnecessary to, and the Authority does not, decide under what circumstances decisions of the Comptroller General might constitute Government-wide rules and regulations.

[Union Proposal 12]

Section 6:

Association Representatives/Staff who are not ODE/DODDS employees and are stationed outside the United States shall be given access to services and facilities provided by the Department of Defense as employees of the Department of Defense on a reimbursable basis or on the same basis that members of the American Red Cross, USO, U.S. commercial contractors, Boy Scout leaders, or traveling clergy are treated.

A. Positions of the Parties

The positions of the parties regarding these two proposals are essentially the same as those expressed regarding Union Proposal 9. See section X(A) above.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposals 11 and 12, like Union Proposal 9, deal exclusively with matters concerning individuals who are not in the bargaining unit. Based on the reasons expressed and the case cited in conjunction with Union Proposal 9, the Authority finds that Union Proposals 11 and 12 are not within the duty to bargain. See section X(B) above.

XIII. Union Proposal 13

Section 11:

The Employer/Designee shall provide an area with a minimum of a desk, chair, file cabinet, typewriter and Class A telephone for the Association at the national and regional levels. An identical area shall be provided at the local level provided that an Association Representative represents at least 50 bargaining unit members. If the Association Representative represents fewer than 50 bargaining unit members, said area shall be provided if available.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that the underlined portion of the proposal is nonnegotiable because the military components of the Department of Defense rather than DoDDS, control the allocation of telephone resources. OEA argues that DoDDS can procure telephone services from the military through servicing support agreements.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Agency's argument is essentially the same as the one raised in conjunction with Union Proposal 5. It is rejected here for the reasons expressed above in section VI(B)(2). Union Proposal 13 is, therefore, within the Agency's obligation to bargain.

XIV. Union Proposal 14

> Section 14:
>
> The Employer/Designee shall take what action it can to provide each school with a faculty lounge and a Class A telephone. In any event, employees shall be given reasonable access to military and civilian telephones at the work site.

A. Positions of the Parties

DoDDS argues that: to the extent the telephones are to be used for official business, the proposal concerns the methods and means by which the Agency accomplishes its work and under section 7106(b)(1) it is not within the duty to bargain; and to the extent the telephones are to be used for personal business, the proposal conflicts with a Government-wide rule or regulation, specifically a GSA regulation found at 41 CFR, Part 101-37.

OEA argues that DoDDS has not demonstrated that use of the telephone is "principally related to the performance of the Agency's work." Thus, it has not shown that the proposal interferes with its determination of the methods, means and technology of performing work. In response to the Agency's assertion that use of the telephone for personal business conflicts with a GSA regulation, OEA asserts that the particular regulation only prohibits using long distance telephone service for personal reasons. Under the proposal, the Agency retains the right to prohibit employees from making long distance calls.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

1. Conflict with Section 7106(b)(1)

Because the proposal would require that telephones, or access to them, be provided employees for the purpose of conducting the business of the Agency, it is to the same effect as Union Proposal 3 in American Federation of Government Employees, Local 644, AFL-CIO and U.S. Department of Labor, Mine Health and Safety Administration, Morgantown, West Virginia, 15 FLRA 902 (1984). In that case, the Authority found that the proposal, which required that sufficient telephones for the conduct of Government business be furnished, concerned the technology of performing work within the meaning of section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute. For the same reasons, Union Proposal 14 as written is an elective subject on which the Agency has chosen not to bargain.

2. Conflict with a Government-wide Rule or Regulation

The particular regulation on which DoDDS relies has been supplanted during the pendancy of the case by a provision in the Federal Information Resources Management Regulation (FIRMR). Specifically, the FIRMR limits use of "the FTS and other Government provided long distance services" to Government business only. 41 CFR § 201-38.007. However, it does not appear that the FIRMR applies to Department of Defense installations in the geographical areas involved in this case. Specifically, 41 CFR § 201-1.103(c)(3) provides:

> (3) The applicability of the telecommunications resources provisions of the FIRMR to the Department of Defense (DoD) is governed by the statement of areas of understanding between DoD and GSA (15 FR 8226, December 1, 1950).

The statement of areas of understanding referred to provides in relevant part:

> 1. The areas of understanding herein set forth were worked out pursuant to order of the President of July 1, 1949, directed to the Secretary of Defense, the Director, Bureau of the Budget, and the Administrator of General Services.
> 2. The areas of understanding with respect to communications services are:

> m. This area of understanding is applicable to communications services within the Continental United States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. The Department of Defense shall be exempt from action taken by the Administrator with respect to communication services under section 201(a) of Public Law 152 [The Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949] in other geographical areas.

In view of this, the Agency's assertion that the proposal conflicts with 41 CFR § 201-38.007 cannot be sustained and would not, by itself, provide a basis for finding the proposal nonnegotiable.

XV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union proposals 1, 2 (except insofar as it addresses Living Quarters Allowances and post allowances), 3, 6, 7, 10 and 13.[18] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as it relates to Union Proposals 2 (insofar as it addresses Living Quarters Allowances and post allowances), 4, 5, 8, 9, 11, 12 and 14 be, and it thereby is, dismissed.

APPENDIX

3/ 012 Exercise of Authority

The Secretary of State hereby prescribes the following regulations governing allowances, differentials, and defraying of official residence expenses in foreign areas. These regulations and any amendments and revisions to them shall govern:

a. Granting of quarters allowances, cost-of-living allowances, post differential, and danger pay allowance authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5921-5925, and 5928 for employees defined in section 014i and for employees defined in section 040j who may be authorized by other provisions of law to be paid allowances and differentials;

b. Allotment of funds to defray official residence expenses authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5913;

c. Granting of representation allowances authorized by section 905 of the Foreign Service Act of 1980, for officers or employees of the Foreign Service, and similar allowances authorized by other provisions of law (including section 235 (a)(2) of Title 38 of the United States Code) for employees (Sec. 040i) other than employees of the Foreign Service unless authority to prescribe regulations for such employees under any such act has been vested in, or specifically delegated to, someone other than the Secretary of State;

d. Granting of quarters allowances, cost-of-living allowances and post differential authorized by sections 7 (a) and 8 (a) (1) and (2) of the Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act (20 U.S.C. 905 (a) and 20 U.S.C. 906 (a)(1) and (2), as amended (2) U.S.C. 901 et seq.);

e. Maximum rates of per diem allowances for travel in foreign areas authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5702;

f. The payment of compensation, post differential and allowances in the event of an emergency evacuation of employees or their dependents, or both, from duty stations for military or other reasons or because of imminent danger to their lives (5 U.S.C. 5521-5527);

g. The payment of a housing supplement to certain employees assigned to the U.S. Mission to the United Nations, and the payment of a housing and subsistence expense allowance to U.S. delegates and alternates to the United Nations General Assembly; authorized by Section 9 of the United Nations Participation Act of 1945, as amended (59 Stat. 619).

h. Granting of compensatory time off to employees at certain posts in foreign areas authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5926.

i. Granting of relocation allowances authorized by 38 U.S.C. 235(6) and (7) for Veterans Administration.

j. Advances of pay to employees entering foreign area assignments authorized by 5 U.S.C. 5927.

4/ The DSSRs define employee as follows:

040 Definitions

The following definitions apply to all chapters of these regulations, unless waived or modified in specific instances. Supplementary definitions which apply to specific chapters or sections only will be found in the General Provisions of those chapters and subchapters.

. . . .

i. "Employee" means an individual employed in the civilian service of a government agency (including ambassadors, ministers, and members of the Foreign Service of the United States under the Department of State) who is

(1) a citizen of the United States; (except under sec. 312);

(2) officially stationed in a foreign area, except as otherwise specifically provided in these regulations;

(3) receiving basic compensation (See Sec. 040k); and

(4) eligible for allowances or differential under sub-chapter 030.

Teachers are considered "employees." Section 040(n) provides:

> n. "Teacher" means an employee who is a teacher as defined in section 2(2) of the Defense Department Overseas Teachers Pay and Personnel Practices Act (73 Stat. 213) and regulations issued thereunder by the Department of Defense. Substitute teachers are not considered to be teachers for the purpose of these regulations.

5/ Section 013 of the DSSRs provides in part:

013 Authority of Head of Agency

> When authorized by law, the head of an agency may . . . grant post differential, special incentive differential, danger pay allowance, quarters, cost-of-living, representation allowances, compensatory time off at certain posts and advances of pay to employee of his/her agency and require an accounting therefore, subject to the provisions of these regulations and the availability of funds. Within the scope of these regulations, the head of an agency may issue such further implementing regulations as he/she may deem necessary for the guidance of his/her agency with regard to the granting of and accounting for these payments.

6/ Chapter 700 provides in part:

> 710 General
> Under the general provisions of Chapter 000 and the modifying provisions of this chapter, a teacher (Sec. 040n.) who is assigned to a teaching position at a post (Sec. 040h) may be granted quarters allowances in accordance with Chapter 100, cost-of-living allowances in accordance with chapter 200, and be paid a post differential in accordance with Chapter 500. [Emphasis added.]

7/ Rep. Ford's remarks were as follows:

> By also permitting negotiation of matters that are the subject of agency regulations that are not Government-wide rules or regulations, problems such as those that have occurred with overseas schoolteachers should be eliminated. While these teachers are employees of the Defense Department, the Department of State has been given the authority, in some instances, to issue regulations regarding these teachers. The Defense Department has indicated that they could not negotiate on these matters, since they did not issue the regulations. The State Department will not negotiate on the matters, since the employees organizations representing these teachers do not have exclusive recognition with State. Title VII prevents management from continuing this practice or from extending this type of maneuver to other agencies in order to avoid the duty to bargain by making "matters" that are the subject of non-Government-wide regulations (as opposed to regulations themselves) negotiable.

8/ The conference report stated as follows:

> The conferees note that the Senate and House versions of chapter 10 did not differ. The chapter 10 provisions resulted from an amendment adopted in subcommittee in the House which was modeled after title VII of the Civil Service Reform Act of 1978. The conferees wish to make clear that chapter 10 is to be interpreted consistent with the legislative history of the Reform Act, except where a specific departure is provided in the bill. DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Paul E. Fitzsimmons filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. The Union filed an opposition.*/

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerned the grievant's failure to be selected for a supervisory professional engineer position. A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration on the issue of whether the selection action conformed to applicable laws, rules, and regulations. The Arbitrator determined that there were substantial errors in the selection action that required remedial action. With respect to the remedy, the Arbitrator stated that he was not qualified to determine the relative qualifications of the grievant and the employee selected for the engineer position. Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator ordered that the selection and recruitment process for the position be rerun in accordance with applicable laws, rules, and regulations and that the selected employee be retained in the position pending the corrective action. In addition, the Arbitrator ordered as follows:

*/ In its opposition the Union notes a provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement stating that within 10 days after receipt of an arbitrator's award, there will be written notification by the parties of any intent to file exceptions. The Union maintains that there was no such notification in this case and that the Authority on this basis should dismiss the Agency's exception. The Authority concludes that the parties' agreement provides no basis for dismissing the Agency's exception that conforms to the requirements of section 7122(a) and the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

> 3. Pursuant to the provisions of 5 U.S.C. §§ 5596, 7701, [the] Attorney for the Grievant is to be compensated by the Employer, upon submission of an itemized bill at the rate of [$75.00] per hour for services rendered. The total fee shall not exceed [$1500.00].

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions of the Agency

In its exception the Agency contends that paragraph 3 of the award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. Specifically, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator was not authorized under the Back Pay Act to award attorney fees to the grievant.

B. Opposition of the Union

In its opposition the Union maintains that the Back Pay Act is not the only authority for an award of attorney fees by an arbitrator. In particular, the Union argues that in cases of prohibited personnel practices, an arbitrator may award attorney fees under the terms of 5 U.S.C. § 7701(g), independent of the Back Pay Act, and that in this case section 7701(g) supports the award.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

Contrary to the position of the Union, the Authority has indicated that an arbitrator is authorized to award attorney fees in cases of unjustified or unwarranted personnel actions only under the terms of the Back Pay Act. Naval Air Development Center, Department of the Navy and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1928, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 25 (1986); see also International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers and United States Army Support Command, Hawaii, 14 FLRA 680 (1984). Thus, an arbitrator is not authorized to award attorney fees solely under the terms of section 7701(g), independent of the terms of the Back Pay Act, even in cases of prohibited personnel practices.

consequently, attorney fees were properly awarded by the Arbitrator only if authorized under the requirements of the Back Pay Act. As previously recognized by the Authority, the Act requires that in order to be eligible for attorney fees, the employee must be found by appropriate authority, under applicable law, rule, regulation or collective bargaining agreement, to have been affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action which resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the employee's pay, allowances, or differentials. Additionally, the fee award must be in conjunction with an award of backpay on the correction of the unjustified or unwarranted personnel action; the fee award must be reasonable and related to the personnel action; and the fee award must be in accordance with standards established under section 7701(g). Id.

In this case the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees is not in accordance with the requirements of the Act. Although the Arbitrator determined that the grievant had been affected by the improper selection action, he did not determine that this resulted in a withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances, or differentials, and consequently he awarded no backpay to the grievant. Thus, the Arbitrator's award of attorney fees was not in conjunction with an award of backpay on correction of the improper selection action. For this reason, and apart from other considerations, the award is deficient as contrary to an express requirement of the Back Pay Act. See Audie L. Murphy Veterans Administration Hospital, San Antonio, Texas and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local No. 3511, 16 FLRA 1079 (1984); Department of Defense Dependents Schools and Overseas Education Association, 3 FLRA 259 (1980).

V. DECISION

Accordingly, paragraph 3 is struck from the Arbitrator's award.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator James P. Martin filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The grievance in this case concerned the Activity's failure to permanently promote the grievant to the position of planner and estimator, WD-8. According to the Arbitrator, the grievant is a journeyman electrician who was temporarily promoted on September 5, 1982, to the position of assistant planner and estimator, WD-5, in the Activity's public works department. In 1983 after a commercial activity study, it was determined to contract out the public works functions. On March 15, 1984, the grievant's temporary promotion to assistant planner was terminated and he was temporarily promoted to the position of planner and estimator to assist in the transition to contractor operation of the public works functions which were contracted out on June 1, 1984. The grievance was filed when the grievant was only temporarily rather than permanently promoted to planner and estimator.

The Arbitrator concluded that the written documentation of the grievant's temporary promotion to assistant planner fully complied with regulation. He acknowledged that the documentation confirmed that the promotion was temporary and that although a permanent promotion to the position of planner was possible, no promise of such promotion was made in writing. However, the Arbitrator found that orally the grievant was continuously promised that he would be permanently promoted to planner when it was possible and that these oral inducements completely contradicted the merit promotion regulation. He also found that contrary to that regulation, the Activity had used the temporary promotion of the grievant to assistant planner to train or evaluate him for the planner position. While acknowledging that the determination to contract out had abolished the position for which the grievant claimed a permanent promotion, the Arbitrator concluded that the grievant should have been permanently promoted to the position of planner and estimator on March 15, 1984. Accordingly, the Arbitrator ordered that the grievant be promoted on a permanent basis to planner and estimator effective March 15, 1984.

III. EXCEPTIONS

In one of its exceptions, the Agency contends that the award interferes with management's right to select in violation of section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute and FPM chapter 335, subchapter 1-4, Requirement 4.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The Authority has specifically held that management's right under the Statute and the FPM to make the actual selections for promotion can only be abridged by an award of an arbitrator when the arbitrator finds a direct connection between improper agency action and the failure of a specific employee to be selected for promotion. U.S. Army Missile Command, U.S. Army Communications Command Agency--Redstone, U.S. Army Commissary, Redstone Arsenal, Alabama and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1858, AFL-CIO, 20 FLRA No. 94 (1985). It is necessary for arbitrators in these cases to reconstruct, on the basis of the evidence presented, what the responsible selecting or appointing officials would have done if the unwarranted agency actions had not occurred. See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2811 and U.S. Government District Office, Social Security Administration, St. Paul, Minnesota, 7 FLRA 618, 620 (1982). In particular, in order to require an agency to select a particular employee for a permanent promotion, an arbitrator must find on the basis of the reconstruction that the responsible selecting official would have selected that employee but for the unwarranted actions.

See American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3553, AFL-CIO and Veterans Administration Medical Center, New Orleans, Louisiana, 18 FLRA No. 65 (1985).

In this case the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award of a permanent promotion is contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute and FPM chapter 335. As noted, the Arbitrator found that the grievant "should have been . . . promoted" as the result of the improper oral inducements and the improper use of a temporary promotion. In view of the Arbitrator's express acknowledgement that the written documentation of the personnel actions confirmed that no promise of permanent promotion to the position of planner was to be implied and that the planner position had been abolished by the decision to contract out, the Arbitrator's finding that the grievant should have been promoted does not support the award of a permanent promotion. The Arbitrator's finding does not constitute the necessary finding that but for the unwarranted actions, the responsible selecting official would have selected the grievant for a permanent promotion to planner and estimator effective March 15, 1984. Consequently, the award is deficient and must be modified.

V. DECISION

For these reasons the award is modified by striking the order that the grievent be permanently promoted to planner and estimator effective March 15, 1984.*/

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 7, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the negotiability of one Union proposal.

II. Union Proposal

Article 19 - Promotions and Assignments

> Section 5: Normally rating and ranking panels will not be used for unit positions, however, if they are used, the selecting official will not be a member of the panel and the Union will be provided the opportunity to have an observer present to review the deliberations of the panel.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends the proposal violates its right, to direct employees, to assign work, and to select employees for promotion under section 7106(a)(2)(A), (B) and (C) of the Statute, respectively.

The Union argues that the proposal does not violate management's rights because it asserts that as the proposal "simply allows a union representative to observe the proceedings," it differs from proposals found nonnegotiable which have called for union participation in the rating and ranking process. The Union contends that while it does "not envision the observer as being able to stop the proceedings, or having the authority to interfere in the timely rating and ranking, [it] do[es] see the observer as being able to challenge questionable practices of the panel. Such matters could and likely would be resolved . . . on the spot." Union Reply Brief at 3.

The Union also describes the clause as "a form of 'sunshine act'" and asserts that the "management decisional process is not shielded from observation by the privacy act, any other law, nor any government-wide regulation." Union Reply Brief at 3.

B. Analysis

While the Union claims that its representative on the rating and ranking panels would only be an observer, its statements that such representative would be "able to challenge questionable practices of the panel" and that "[s]uch matters . . . likely would be resolved . . . on the spot" indicate a more active role for its representative in proceedings of the panels. However, such distinction in the actual intended role of the Union's representative does not affect the negotiability of this proposal.

The Authority has held that a provision requiring participation of a union representative on a promotion rating panel interfered with management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Mint Council 157 and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Mint, 19 FLRA No. 81 (1985)(provision 3). The Authority has also held that even a purely passive role of a union observer at management meetings concerning the exercise of management rights (in that case involving the development of performance standards) would interfere with an agency's right freely to engage in internal discussion and deliberations prior to making decisions on those management rights. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2302 and U.S. Army Armor Center, Ft. Knox, Kentucky, 15 FLRA 17, 18-19 (1984) (Union proposal 2). Thus, even if the Union observer contemplated by this proposal were to play only a passive role in attending deliberations of the panel, the proposal must be found to be nonnegotiable because such presence would interfere with management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C).

Finally, the Union's reliance on the Authority's decisions in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 541 and Veterans Administration Hospital, Long Beach, California, 12 FLRA 270 (1983) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1579 and Veterans Administration Regional Office, Louisville, Kentucky, 12 FLRA 600 (1983) is misplaced. Unlike the proposal in this case, the proposal found negotiable in Veterans Administration Hospital, Long Beach and Proposal 1 found negotiable in Veterans Administration Regional Office, Louisville, provided for union participation in incentive awards programs which did not concern the exercise of management rights.

The Agency has not demonstrated how this proposal would interfere with management's rights to direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A), or to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. The Authority shall, therefore, make no determinations on those claims.

C. Conclusion

The Union proposal is inconsistent with management's right to select under section 7106(a)(2)(C) of the Statute and therefore is not negotiable.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. July 7, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), and concerns the negotiability of six provisions relating to travel and per diem and two relating to reduction-in-force (RIF). The Union's petition also included a ninth provision which the Union has since withdrawn. The underlined portions of the provisions were disapproved by the Agency head in reviewing a negotiated agreement under section 7114(c) of the Statute.

II. Travel and Per Diem Provisions

[Provisions 1-6]

Employer-Union Cooperation

Section 2.1

> The Employer and the Union agree to establish a National Joint Labor-Management Committee consisting of three (3) members from each party. However, if the NJLM Committee should meet in the official duty station of a local union president, if not already a member of the Committee, he or his designee, located in the same duty station, will be invited to attend the meeting. Similarly, the local Main Station Supervisor may also attend. It will meet semi-annually--usually during the months of April and October--if there are subjects to be discussed at a location designated by the Chief of the Meat Grading and Certification Branch. If either the Union or the Employer has topics for discussion, they will notify their counterpart in March or September of each year that a meeting is requested. The parties agree to exchange a list of subjects to be discussed at least fifteen (15) working days prior to the date of the scheduled meeting. The arrangements for these meetings will be worked out by mutual agreement between the members of the Committee. Transportation and per diem expenses for the meeting will be borne by the Employer according to applicable regulations.

Section 2.2

A Joint Labor-Management Committee, consisting of the Main Station Supervisor, or his designee, and the President of the Local, or his designee, shall be established in those main stations in which a local has been organized. The Committee may be expanded, at the discretion of the members to include an additional representative of the main station and the local. If established, the Committee will meet monthly at the Main Station office or another location if there are subjects to discuss at the concurrence of the Main Station Supervisor and the President of the Local, if a situation precludes a "monthly" meeting, it can be rescheduled at the nearest agreeable time. Date, time and place are to be determined by the Main Station Supervisor, after consultation with the Union. A reasonable amount of official time shall be provided for these meetings. Transportation and per diem expenses of the participating employee will be borne by the Employer. Copies of the minutes will be provided to both parties.

ARTICLE 6

Grievances

Section 6.5 a(2)

In regard to travel expenses for the grievant and representative for the first step of the grievance procedure, the Employer will pay one-half (1/2) of such expense up to $125.00.

ARTICLE 7

Arbitration

Section 7.3

The arbitration hearing will be held at a site designated by the Employer and if possible during the regular day shift hours of the basic workweek. Official time will be allowed for the employee, his/her representative, and witness(es) not to exceed three (3) to present material in arbitration. The employee and his/her witness(es) will be allowed official travel time, transportation expenses, and per diem expenses according to applicable regulations and instructions to attend the hearing. The employee's representative will be allowed official travel time in accordance with applicable regulations and instructions not to exceed 8 hours. Travel expenses for the representative will be allowed according to applicable regulations and instructions not to exceed a total of $200. Official time for the employee and his/her representative to prepare for the arbitration will be granted in accordance with Section 1.11 of this Agreement. If the employee's representative is not an employee of the Meat Grading and Certification Branch, the President of the National Meat Grader Council (NMGC) will be granted travel time, transportation expenses, and per diem expenses as prescribed above for the representative to assist the designated representative.

When Employer initiated arbitrations are filed, the President of the NMGC and necessary witnesses not to exceed (3), shall be provided reasonable preparation time which shall not be counted against bank hours of representation from 1.11 of this Agreement. The Union representative and witnesses not to exceed three (3), will also receive official time to present the arbitration and official travel time, transportation expenses, and per diem expenses in accordance with applicable regulations and instructions.

ARTICLE 10-I

Disciplinary Actions

Section 10.3(h)

Reasonable and necessary official time will be provided the Union representative in presenting any response(s) under the provisions of this Article. Travel expenses not to exceed $125.00 combined will be paid to the employee and the employee's representative.

ARTICLE 10-II

Adverse Actions

Section 10.5(f)

Reasonable and necessary official time will be provided the Union representative in presenting any response(s) under the provisions of this Article. Travel expenses not to exceed $125.00 combined will be paid to the employee and the employee's representative.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency states that although the negotiated agreement was executed after the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1963) (BATF), the disapproved language was agreed to prior to that decision. It asserts that the disputed portions of the provisions are not within the duty to bargain for the following reasons:

a. They do not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute because payment of travel expenses is specifically provided for by law;

b. they are inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulation; and

c. they conflict with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

The Union asserts that the provisions represent negotiation of a condition of employment about which the Agency has discretion, that is, whether to allow travel and per diem for travel occurring in the context of union representational activities. It contends that the Agency has not established a compelling need for Personnel Letter 711-10, the agency regulation which is claimed to bar negotiations.

B. Analysis

1. Conditions of Employment

The Agency makes essentially the same "conditions of employment" argument as that made by the agency in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1192 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). The Authority rejected that argument in Customs Service. It is rejected here for the same reasons as set forth in that case.

2. Inconsistent with Federal Law or Government-Wide Rules or Regulations

Under the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs), 41 CFR, Part 101-7, as interpreted by the Comptroller General,[1] agencies possess discretion to make determinations that travel in the context of union activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government to constitute official business. Upon this determination, otherwise proper travel and per diem expenses may be paid from agency funds. Contrary to the Agency's argument, nothing in these authorities requires that this necessary determination be made only by management and only on a case by case basis. Customs Service. The Agency here makes no argument that travel flowing from the particular types of activities and circumstances set forth in the provisions could not meet this required standard. Additionally, nothing in the provisions themselves or the parties' arguments suggests that these provisions would preclude case by case determinations as to the appropriateness of specific travel and expenses which are necessary and proper under law and governing regulations. Given these circumstances, and for the reasons expressed in Customs Service, the Agency's assertion that the provisions are inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations must be rejected.

[1] 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966)

3. Inconsistent with an Agency Regulation for Which a Compelling Need Exists

The Agency regulation, Personnel Letter No. 711-10, upon which the Agency relies, was issued by the Department of Agriculture and purports to establish procedures for the payment of travel and per diem expenses to union representatives when official time has been granted under section 7131(a) and (d) of the Statute. The regulation provides that determinations on whether to pay travel and per diem may be made only on a case by case basis and solely by management. The Agency argues that the regulation is essential to comply with the Comptroller General's decision in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). As set forth above, we have found that neither the Comptroller General's decision nor the authorities to which it applies require that a determination that travel in the context of a particular activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government so as to constitute official business be made unilaterally and only on a case by case basis. Therefore, there is no support for the Agency's assertion that its regulation implements in an essentially nondiscretionary manner a mandate to it by an outside authority. Its argument that a compelling need exists for Personnel Letter No. 711-10 cannot be sustained.

C. Conclusion

Based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the provisions concern a condition of employment and are not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. The provisions are not barred from negotiations because they are inconsistent with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Therefore, they are within the duty to bargain.2/

2/ In finding the provision to be within the duty to bargain the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

III. RIF Proposals

[Provisions 7-8]

Section 12.7

Competitive levels shall be established in accordance with FPM Chapter 351 and Agency regulations.

Section 12.20

The Employer will establish re-employment priority lists composed of all Category I and II employees separated due to RIF in accordance with FPM Chapter 351 and 330, and the Department and Agency Re-Employment Priority Program.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency argues that these provisions are nonnegotiable because they fail to include reference to Department of Agriculture regulations for which there is a compelling need.

The Union asserts that, because the contract contains a provision relating to the agreement as a whole which acknowledges the applicability of those agency regulations in effect at the time of contract approval, the Agency's declaration of nonnegotiability is frivolous.[3] It contends that the language encompasses Department of Agriculture regulations. It also argues that the Agency has failed to establish a compelling need for its regulations.

[3] The contract language to which the Union refers states in relevant part:

> Section 1.7 Laws, Regulations, and Policies: In the administration of all matters covered by this Agreement, officials and employees are governed by:
> . . . .
> b. Rules and regulations of appropriate authorities and other government-wide regulations in existence at the time this Agreement was approved;

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Agency contends that the term "Agency" as contained in the contract, does not encompass the Departmental level but is limited to its primary national subdivisions--as relevant to this case, the Agricultural Marketing Service. It asserts with respect to both provisions that the Departmental regulations, upon which it relies, are a nondiscretionary implementation of Office of Personnel Management (OPM) regulations relating to RIFs and Re-employment Priority List. The Authority notes that the language of the provisions specifically requires compliance with the Federal Personnel Manual (FPM) Chapters which reflect the OPM regulations. The Agency has not shown any actual inconsistency between the provisions and the Departmental regulations nor is any apparent to us.

As to the Re-employment Priority List provision, the Agency suggests that there may be a discrepancy between the number of Lists required by the provision and the Department regulation. The regulation provides for a single agency-wide list, while the provision refers to lists in plural. However, the Agency has not elaborated on this point and has, in our view, simply failed to establish that the provisions are inconsistent with the Agency regulations for which it claims a compelling need exists. See Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and the Adjutant General, Department of Military Affairs,

c. Published Agency policies and regulations in existence at the time this Agreement was approved; and

d. Subsequently published policies, rules, and regulations which are not in conflict with this Agreement, which are required by law, or which are authorized by the terms of a controlling agreement at a higher agency level. The effect of such changes as they affect the personnel policies, practices and conditions of employment of employees in the unit shall be negotiated, if appropriate and requested by the Union.

Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 3 FLRA 50 (1980). Consequently, the Agency's contention that these provisions are nonnegotiable cannot be sustained. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1928 and Department of the Navy, Naval Air Development Center, Warminster, Pennsylvania, 2 FLRA 451 (1980) in which the Authority stated that the agency bears the burden of demonstrating that a proposal conflicts with an agency-wide regulation for which a compelling need exists.

IV. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall rescind its disapproval of Provisions 1 through 8 which were bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and presents an issue concerning the negotiability of a single Union proposal.*/

II. Union Proposal

Integrated Combat Turns (ICT)

> No technician will perform ICTs while in a technician status.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency contends that the proposal interferes with its management rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute to assign employees and work because the proposal would restrict the Agency in making new assignments and would forbid the Agency from assigning duties to a military technician. In response, the Union asserts that the proposal concerns a safety issue, i.e., the fueling, loading of bombs and maintenance of aircraft being simultaneoulsy performed. According to the Union, previously this function, which is an integrated combat turn, was a military requirement performed in military status and only recently was made a requirement of civilian technicians. Therefore, the Union maintains that the proposal is a procedure to be used in implementing the change in working conditions.

*/ The Union has withdrawn a proposal concerning a voluntary physical fitness program. Therefore, the proposal will not be considered further here.

IV. Analysis and Conclusion

The explicit language of the proposal requires that the Agency assign no ICT duties to civilian technicians. The Authority has held that a proposal prohibiting the assignment of work or duties is violative of the Agency's right to assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2302 and U.S. Army Armor Center and Fort Knox, Fort Knox, Kentucky, 19 FLRA No. 95 (1985) (Proposal 2) and cases cited therein. Since the proposal in this case would also prohibit the assignment of work, i.e., ICT duties, it is also violative of the Agency's right to assign work under the Statute. Since the proposal directly interferes with the exercise of the Agency's right to assign work, it is not a negotiable procedure under the Statute.

V. Order

Pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding, finding that the Respondent had engaged in certain unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that it be ordered to cease and desist therefrom and take certain affirmative action. Thereafter, the Respondent filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's decision and the entire record the Authority adopts the Judge's findings,1/ conclusions, and recommended Order.2/

1/ The Respondent excepted to certain credibility findings made by the Judge. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all the relevant evidence demonstrates such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility findings.

2/ Having found that the Respondent had in fact bargained and agreed to the lunch-break area, in agreement with the Judge the Authority finds it unnecessary to address the Respondent's arguments going to the initial bargaining obligation.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Veterans Administration Outpatient Clinic, Los Angeles, California shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to implement the agreement with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2297, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the establishment of a lunch-break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, California consonant with laws and regulations governing such matters.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Implement the agreement reached with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2297, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the establishment of a lunch-break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, California consonant with laws and regulations governing such matters.

(b) Post at its Los Angeles California Outpatient Clinic copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Clinic Director, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 350 South Figueroa Street, 10th Floor, Los Angeles, California 90071, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

Statement of the Case

This case arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, Chapter 71 of Title 5 of the U.S. Code, 5 U.S.C. § 7101, et seq.

Upon an unfair labor practice charge filed by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2297, AFL-CIO (herein referred to as the Union) against the Veterans Administration Outpatient Clinic, Los Angeles, California (herein referred to as Respondent), the General Counsel of the Authority, by the Regional Director for Region VIII, issued a Complaint and Notice of Hearing alleging Respondent violated the Statute by failing and refusing to effectuate an agreement reached with the Union concerning establishing a break area for employees at an office facility located at 417 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, California.

A hearing on the Complaint was conducted in Los Angeles, California at which Respondent and the General Counsel were represented and afforded full opportunity to adduce evidence, call, examine and cross-examine witnesses and argue orally. Briefs were filed by Respondent and the General Counsel and have been carefully considered.

Upon the entire record in this case, my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor and from my evaluation of the evidence, I make the following:

Findings of Fact

At all times material herein the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, has been the exclusive collective bargaining representative of certain of Respondent's employees working in its Outpatient Clinic in various portions of the Subway Terminal Building, a privately owned structure located at 417 - 425 South Hill Street, Los Angeles. Officers of Local 2297 represent bargaining unit employees in dealings with Respondent at that site. In early 1984 the Union became aware that Respondent was considering relocating some of the employees to the second floor of 417 South Hill Street, a floor not previously leased by Respondent[1] containing almost 11,000 square feet of space. As plans progressed the Union made various inquiries into the matter. According to the testimony of Vincent Mannino, Local 2297 Chief Steward, the Union conveyed specific concerns to Respondent in a Labor-Management meeting on June 21, 1984 attended by Mannino, Local 2297 President Lula Mae Jones, Harold T. Rowan, Personnel Officer and a "recorder".[2] Mannino testified that part of the Union's concerns discussed on June 21 included moving Union offices then located at 425 South Hill Street to larger quarters in the new space at 417 South Hill Street and providing employees who would be located on the second floor with a lunch-break area. Management's minutes of this meeting stated, inter alia:

> "3. Space-Moves:
> "Union request the Personnel Officer to remind management of contractual obligation to keep them informed of any space-move which will involve bargaining unit employees. Regarding the 2 proposed moves, some of the items AFGE is concerned about are:

---

[1] Around this same time plans were being developed by Respondent to erect another facility at Temple and Alameda Streets in Los Angeles.

[2] The parties held Labor-Management meetings on a regular monthly basis. Management prepared minutes of such meetings and provided the Union with a copy of the minutes.

"a. New Building:

1. Parking for employees.
2. AFGE's office location.
3. Carpeting.
4. Lounge areas, how many, where located.
5. Cafeteria - Restrooms, where located.
6. Reserved parking for the AFGE officials, handicapped employees.

"b. Second Floor - 417 South Hill Street:

1. Has the space been approved?
2. When will the move take place?
3. What employees will be affected?
4. Health, safety, security precautions."

Mannino testified management indicated during the meeting that it would "get back to" the Union on their requests. Although the June 21 minutes do not mention the Union office or the lounge-break area matters, a June 26, 1984 memorandum sent to the then Clinic Director, Dean Stordahl, from Personnel Officer Rowan states:

> "1. AFGE wishes to set a Management/Union meeting with you and possibly Sal and/or Joyce and me as soon as possible.
> "2. Their concerns have been narrowed to the following:
> A. 2nd. floor move:
> 1. Approval, (Does Clinic have CO's approval to proceed).
> 2. Move plan date (projected).
> 3. Number of employees affected by move.
> 4. Plan for bathrooms, lounge area.
> B. New bldg. move:
> 1. AFGE office, where located, (Amount of space).
> 2. Relocation date plan.
> 3. Bathrooms, lounges and cafeterias for employees, (location).
> 4. Parking for employees.
> 5. Reserved parking for AFGE officials."

Mannino testified that the parties again discussed the moves during the regular Labor-Management meeting held on July 24, 1984 at which time the Union raised questions concerning the second floor Union office, the lunch-break area, bathrooms for employees and access for the handicapped.[3] Accordingly to Mannino, during this session management tentatively agreed to provide the Union with space in order to move the Union office but there was no agreement on the precise amount of space. With regard to other matters, Mannino testified:

> "They had agreed that they would present us with the plans which would show where the break area would be, which would show where the bathrooms were going to be, hand -- or handicapped access. They would have all those plans. They didn't have them yet. So we tentatively agreed that we would wait until they had them, but we wanted to see where everything was going to be situated."

Thus, while Mannino's recollection of this meeting was somewhat vague, the thrust of his testimony was that management did not yet have all the data it needed on the move and would subsequently respond to the issues raised by the Union and review the floor plans with them. The only reference to the 417 South Hill Street matter contained in the minutes of that meeting states:

> "4. The move to the second floor has been approved. Director stated that he asked Sal Carlos to divide the 300 feet given to the Credit Union with AFGE for office space."

The next discussion with management concerning the move to the second floor, according to Mannino, occurred during the August regularly scheduled Labor-Management meeting.[4] Mannino testified:

> ". . . August is where we had reached agreement on the -- basic agreement on the office and we had -- they had then told us that there (was) going to be locked bathrooms for the employees on the second floor, and we had agreed to that. We had raised questions as to who was going to get the keys. They told us that there was going to be a patrolling security officer. We agreed with that, as far as security for the people being concerned.

---

[3] Present at this meeting was Mannino, Local President Jones, Clinic Director Stordahl, Personnel Officer Rowan and a Personnel Management Specialist.

[4] Neither testimony nor the minutes of this session indicate the precise date of the meeting.

"We had made -- They told us there would be handicapped access. We agreed with that.

"They told us there was going to be a break area in between the two wings of the second floor. Now, we had agreed to that, but it was hard to conceptualize it or visualize it because we didn't have the plans in front of us.

. . . . . .

"They also said that there was a little room that would have vending machines and maybe a microwave oven right off of where the break room was going to be. We agreed to that.

"They said there was going to be a sink there. We said, 'Fine' to that. We agreed with that.

"BY MS. WAGNER:

"Q. So was there anything left open at the end of this meeting?

"A. Yes.

"We wanted to find out the exact amount of space for the Union office, to see where it looked -- you know, where it was located, what it looked like. We wanted to see the exact space where the break area was going to be, how big it was going to be. They had mentioned something about partitions. We wanted to see what it looked like, because up until this time we had not seen anything. We wanted to 'see' where all the exits were for the -- you know, for fire and stuff for people to get in and to get out. We hadn't seen any of that at that time. We agreed with what they had said that there was going to be that stuff, but we still wanted to see where the location was.

"Q. So what was management's response to that, when you wanted to 'see' where the location was?

"A. They said they didn't have the plans at that time, and that they would show us the plans when -- as soon as they got them because at this meeting we had asked to see them. They didn't have any."

The minutes of the August meeting contain the following comments listed under the caption "Move to the Second Floor":

> "a. Tour every Wednesday at 3:00 p.m. until completion.
> "b. Completion date set for November 15, 1984.
> "c. Safety: 1. Fire access
> 2. Adequate access for handicapped
> 3. Patrolling Police Officer
> 4. Locked restrooms on floor for employees
> 5. Rest area for employees (B.U.)[5]
> "d. Telephone number will remain the same."

Mannino testified that in late September or early October 1984 management called the Union to Director Stordahl's office to discuss the move to the second floor. Present were Stordahl, Rowan, Mannino and Jones. Mannino testified:

> "At that meeting they showed us the plans. That was the first time we had seen it, and they had pointed out to us there where the Union office was going to be. We had some questions because it seemed from the drawings that they were going to -- that the Union office was smaller than the other office which supposedly had been cut in half, but then they showed us where the break area was going to be, and they said there was going to be some partitions and we agreed that that was good. We agreed to that. Then they showed us where the secretaries were going to sit. We had some questions there because they had the -- they showed the secretaries sitting out in the hallways, and upon some questioning back and forth they had said that they would have partitions up so that, you know, they would be kind of like cut off so people just wouldn't be walking by them all the time out in the open.
> "And after that we had agreed to everything they showed us and the meeting ended."

When examined on the specific conversation pertaining to the break area, Mannino stated:

> ". . . when I looked at the break area, I had asked where the tables and chairs were going to be, and it was Mr. Rowan, if I'm not mistaken, that said they were going to be along the window and there was going a partition here (sic) and a partition in -- in the back, and there was going to be a sink placed right across from this little room which he said may have a microwave oven in it and some vending machine, but they weren't sure because some electrical stuff had to go in there and they may not be able to do it; but he pointed that out to me on the plans. Where the sink would be, the chairs and tables would be, where the partition would be."

Mannino further testified:

> "We were told the break area was going to be along here (indicating), and that it will be a partition here and a partition here (indicating). Here was where the little room was supposed to be, and here was where the sink was going to be (indicating). And it was right close to where a lot of people worked in here. . . ."

A copy of the blueprint of the second floor layout was put in evidence and used during examination and cross-examination of witnesses. The break area in dispute herein is in a hallway, which, from my reading, measures approximately 39 feet long by 12 feet wide and connects two wings of the second floor office space. The blueprint reveals that one side of the 39 foot hallway contains a sink and one long wall which contains numerous windows. The opposite side of the hallway is primarily solid wall except for one window on one end of the hallway and a door, opposite the sink, at the other end leading to a room marked "Tel" which opens on two other rooms. The Union office is adjacent to the doorway to the "Tel" room. Mannino indicated that he understood tables and chairs would be located along the hallway wall containing the windows and sink and a partition placed on either end of the line of tables and chairs, thereby keeping the other side of the hallway open as a walkway.

In mid-November 1984 approximately 25 employees were relocated to the second floor at 417 South Hill Street and a sink was installed in the hallway. According to Mannino, in late November or early December he had a conversation with Joyce McIntyre, Health Systems Specialist, who had some responsibility for planning the move. Mannino testified that during this conversation McIntyre showed him a catalogue with different types of partitions and indicated which ones she was going to order for secretaries and the break area.6/

6/ McIntyre denied any such conversation ever occurred.

In early January 1985 Mannino was informed by some employees they heard rumors that the Director had changed his mind and decided not to have a break area on the second floor. Mannino questioned Personnel Officer Rowan on the matter and, after management refused to acknowledge any agreement to have a lunch-break area on the second floor, the Union's officers met and on January 31, 1985 sent the Director a memorandum stating, inter alia:

> "1. Due to your unilateral abrogation of an agreed upon verbal commitment to Local 2297 to have a break and lunch area on the second floor of 417 S. Hill Street for the employees working on that floor, we are requesting immediate negotiations over this change in conditions of employment."

On February 5, 1985 the Director replied to the Union as follows:

> "1. Discussion of a proposed lunch and break area on the second floor in 417 So. Hill Street indeed took place. No promise to establish such an area ever occurred, however; nor was any such matter 'negotiated' upon. All VA OPC employees have designated places for lunch and breaks that have long been established, recognized, and are accessible. No additional area was or will be designated for this purpose at this time, and neither has any new area been utilized for this purpose.
> "2. You Memorandum indicates a 'change in conditions of employment.' I fail to see how conditions that have never existed constitute a change. This subject is therefore not negotiable."

Counsel for the General Counsel also called Lula Mae Jones, President of Local 2297, as a witness. Although her recollection of events was less clear than that of Mannino, her testimony concerning discussions involving the second floor move nevertheless generally supported his testimony. More specifically, Jones recalled that during the June Labor-Management meeting, along with expressing concerns as to what services would be relocated, restrooms and space for a Union office, the Union representatives asked if there would be a break area and management responded "yes." Although Jones' recollection and testimony regarding the regular July and August Labor-Management meetings was vague, she did testify that she thought they discussed the break area at all of their meetings. In any event, as to the September or early October meeting at which she was present with Mannino, Stordahl and Rowan, Jones testified they were first shown plans of the second floor layout including the passageway where the break area would be located. According to Jones, whose testimony deviated from Mannino's in only minor respect, Stordahl went over the floor plans indicating the location of the various offices and facilities, and regarding the break area, Jones testified:

> "His explanation to us was that this would be the lunch break area. In the lunch area would be chairs -- table(s), chairs, and partitions. Okay. With a sink and maybe a microwave oven. He did not say where the sink would be placed. He just said 'a sink'. He did not say where the microwave oven would be; but he said, 'There would be tables and chairs along the wall with a partition in front of the table(s) and chairs, leaving an opening for walkway from one corridor to the other one.'
> "That was my understanding, because there was a window over there, and he said, 'There would be tables and chairs at the window.' Okay. And there is a window over there, and it was my understanding that it would not be as many table(s) and chairs on this side of the wall as there was on this side, because the window area here was longer."[7]

According to Jones, after Stordahl concluded his explanation of the break area, the Union representatives indicated they "accepted it."

Jones also testified that sometime in late October 1984 she was present when a group of eight or ten employees was given a tour of the second floor facility by Sal Carlos, Facility Manager of the Outpatient Clinic and Brian Murphy, Subway Terminal Building Manager, a representative of the owner of that property. According to Jones, Carlos and Murphy were at the head of the group and Jones was at the rear. As the group approached the hallway area in the vicinity of the door to the "Tel" room, an employee towards the front of the group asked a question concerning the location of a microwave oven. Jones recalled that either Carlos or Murphy responded that they were not sure, and continued: "but there will be tables and chairs over here and over here."

Suzette Mitchell, an employee called as a witness by counsel for the General Counsel, also testified that she was present with approximately five other employees at a tour of the second floor. She testified that her tour, sometime in early November 1984, was conducted only by Carlos. According to Mitchell, while the group was still some distance from the hallway, although in view of it, an employee asked where the lunch area was going to be and Carlos responded: ". . . down that way," indicating towards the hallway and stating that tables and chairs would be placed there.

[7] Jones' testimony of the placement of the partitions differs from Mannino's in that Jones understood the partition's would be lined horizontally to the long walls of the hallway thus keeping the tables and chairs from view of passersby using the walkway.

Personnel Officer Rowan, called as a witness by counsel for Respondent, testified that a meeting with Union representatives in June 1984 gave rise to his memorandum to the Clinic Director dated June 26, 1984, supra. Thereafter, according to Rowan, he and Stordahl met with the Union sometime in early July 1984 at which time preliminary plans of both the new building and the second floor at 417 South Hill Street were reviewed. According to Rowan's account of this meeting, Stordahl explained the layouts of both facilities and answered questions. The new building consisted of six floors and accordingly, more time was spent reviewing the plans for the new building. In this regard, Rowan testified, inter alia;

> "Ms. Jones was concerned about the location of her Union office in the new building and asked the Director if it could be located in a different area other than the sixth floor of the brand new building. She wanted it located on the second floor, which was adjacent to employee lockers, lounges, and a cafeteria; and a considerable amount of conversation took place about this particular subject.
> "As I recall, Ms. Jones was quite concerned that if her Union office was not in a place where it would be easily accessible to employees then the Union wouldn't be available, et cetera. . .
> . . . . .
> "Ms. Jones was concerned about parking. She wanted to know if there would be free parking available for employees and reserved parking or a space for her Union — herself and Union officials. . .
> . . . . .
> ". . . the conversation then began to center around her accessibility to her bargaining unit members and the second floor of the new building, which was described by the Clinic Director as having an outside patio, which was -- would be conductive to employees enjoying their lunch breaks and — and the like . . . (and) whether or not it would be appropriate to have the Union office on the second floor or on the sixth floor, which is what the plans showed at the time."

The new facility contained a lunch room on its second floor and Rowan also recalled Stordahl pointing out the future location of tables and chairs in that room.

The second floor plans for the 417 South Hill Street building were also discussed, specifically with regard to the matters of Union concern listed on Rowan's June 26 memorandum, supra. Rowan testified that the parties talked about two places where a lounge area might be appropriate: the room marked "Tel" on the blueprint; and the corridor between the two work areas which appeared at the time "might be feasible for a lounge area." However, according to Rowan, the parties reached no agreement as to the location of a lounge area at 417 South Hill Street.

With regard to the August regular Labor-Management meeting, Rowan testified that Chief Engineer Sal Carlos was present at that meeting to explain the hazards of bargaining unit employees going into the second floor area unescorted before its completion and informing the Union of how management was arranging guided tours for employees. Although Rowan acknowledged that the matter of a break area came up at more than one meeting and indicated no discussion of the break area took place after the August meeting, Rowan gave no testimony regarding any discussion of a rest area during the August session nor did he attempt to explain the notation on the minutes of the August 1984 Labor-Management meeting: "5. Rest area for employees (B.U.)."

Rowan stated that he never received any request to bargain on the second floor move nor did he know the Union wished to negotiate on the matters they expressed interest in relating to the move. Rowan also testified that at other times when the Union desired to bargain on a matter it would send a memorandum specifically indicating the problem and the area of the contract involved. However, Rowan further stated that the regularly scheduled Labor-Management meetings covered ". . . items that AFGE felt they wanted information on that might have an affect on their bargaining unit members. And, of course, items they felt they could negotiate with management on."

Clinic Director Stordahl also testified that he met with Rowan, Jones and Mannino in early July 1984 as a result of Rowan's June 26 memorandum to him which indicated the Union had concerns regarding the move to the second floor and the new building, supra. Stordahl indicated the meeting was for the purpose of bringing the Union up to date on the planning for the new six-story building and to discuss ". . . what some of our preliminary thinking was if and when (they) got the second floor approved. . ." which was at that time in the "initial planning phase." According to Stordahl, at the meeting Respondent had blueprints of the new building and "some line drawings of the second floor potential expansion" which had not been developed by an architect. Regarding a lunch room at 417 South Hill Street, Stordahl testified, inter alia:

> "Well, we were talking about what we could bring over there to try to fill the space. I was really, in the initial stages of it, trying to get enough things into there . . . to fill it up to justify renting it, quite frankly; and in the process of -- of considering the number of alternatives, a -- the space that's shown here as 'Mechanical Room', we told them that we'd like > to put a lunch room in that. The -- There's about three steps up, or two steps up, into that space. I guess, actually on this diagram, its' called 'Telephone Room'.

> "There's about two steps up into this space that we felt you could close the door to and make it out to be some type of a break room.
> "The building owner subsequently advised us that that was not possible because he had -- he needed access to the mechanical space and the telephone equipment space."

Stordahl did not recall any discussion concerning placing the lunch room in the hallway or mention of vending machines but did recall he pointed out a plumbing outlet in the hallway indicating that the property owner offered to install a sink so employees "could wash their coffee cups, or water their plants, or whatever."

Stordahl also testified that the Union asked for office space on the second floor and, although no agreement was reached during the early July meeting on this or any other matter, a room originally designated "Credit Union" on the plans was changed to "Union Office" and, at the request of the Union, that space was subsequently enlarged.

With regard to the new building, Stordahl testified that during the early July meeting management reviewed all the blueprints with the Union including pointing out the area on the second floor marked "Canteen" and pointing out where tables and chairs would be.

Stordahl further testified that sometime between the early July meeting and the regular Labor-Management meeting held on July 24 management concluded that it would give the Union office space on the second floor of the 417 South Hill Street building and at the July 24 meeting agreed that if the lease for the space was entered into, the Union could have the office space and subsequent thereto, the space allotted to the Union was enlarged. Stordahl recalled no further meetings with the Union on the second floor move in which he participated.

In addition, Stordahl expressed his opinion that a lunch-break area in the hallway would retard traffic and be "disruptive" in appearance in that moving visitors through an area where food is being eaten or prepared would not properly reflect a business environment. Stordahl indicated that if tables and chairs were permitted the next step would be people asking for a microwave and heating up leftovers.

Facility Manager Carlos acknowledged that he was present at the August 1984 regular Labor-Management meeting, supra, but recalled no discussion concerning a lunch or break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill

Street. However, Carlos testified he was not present during that entire session. Carlos further testified that on three occasions he participated in taking employees on tours of the second floor facility, all of which were in the company of Subway Terminal Building Manager Murphy. Carlos denied saying the corridor would be used for a break area but did recall that a response to a question by an employee as to the function of the "Tel" room, he replied they had considered putting tables and chairs in the room for use as a break area but they concluded the room would be too noisy for that purpose due to the proximity of air conditioning apparatus.[8] No testimony was elicited from Carlos as to the source of this information except that the matter had been considered but due to the noise factor, it was "immediately" quashed. Carlos testified that either he or Murphy mentioned that a sink would be placed in the hallway area and he may have explained that the sink could be used for washing utensils after coffee breaks.

Building Manager Murphy testified that other than asking Respondent whether they needed a lunch room on the second floor early on and being told they did not, he had no discussion with anyone concerning such a facility. Murphy also testified he did not hear Carlos say anything about a lunch-break room during the two employee tours (around 10 employees each time) of the second floor which he participated in.[9]

Evidence was also received regarding the physical arrangements at the 417-425 South Hill Street facility. Thus, the two addresses are in reality two entrances to the same building, about 50 feet apart and the 425 South Hill section has a lunch room for employees. While it would take only a few minutes to go from the second floor of the 417 section to the 425 lunch room, the two sections are not connected internally thereby requiring one to exit one section in order to enter the other.

Ultimate Findings, Discussion and Conclusions

Counsel for the General Counsel contends that Respondent failed to negotiate in good faith with the Union when, after agreeing to establish a break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill Street by placing tables and chairs along one wall of a corridor and enclosing this section with partitions so the area was separated from the passageway, Respondent failed and refused to effectuate this agreement.

[9] Murphy also testified that the California Uniform Building Code closely regulates the construction of dining facilities and the use and obstruction of hallways.

Respondent denies that any agreement was reached on the matter, contending that the Union never made a request to bargain on the subject. Respondent also argues that management has no obligation to bargain on the matter since the absence of a lunch-break area on the second floor had no "substantial adverse impact" on unit employees.

Essential to a determination herein is a resolution of credibility. Thus, Chief Steward Mannino and Local President Jones testified to facts which, if credited, would establish that an agreement was reached by the parties to have a lunch-break area in the second floor hallway. On the other hand, Personnel Officer Rowan and Clinic Director Stordahl denied any agreement and gave testimony which, at most, would indicate that the matter was discussed but left unresolved. Based upon the witnesses' demeanor and my evaluation of the evidence, in the total context of the situation, I find and conclude the parties agreed to a lunch-break room on the second floor as alleged. In this regard I was particularly impressed with the demeanor of Mannino, whose testimony was substantially corroborated by Jones. Thus, I find that beginning in June 1984 the Union made known to Respondent its desire to have a lunch-break area for employees. The matter was thereafter discussed at the July and August regular monthly Labor-Management meetings and at no time did Respondent indicate its opposition to the concept.[10] I further find that the parties met in September or early October, as set forth more fully above in Mannino's testimony, at which time Respondent clearly conveyed its plan or intention to locate a lunch-break area in the hallway with tables, chairs and partitions, and the Union's expressed its agreement with this decision. I conclude that absent any evidence of a subsequent timely discussion or agreement to the contrary, this constituted a binding agreement on the matter.[11] With regard to partitions, I find that while Respondent agreed to furnish partitions to set off the lunch-break area from a passageway between the two wings, it would appear from the somewhat divergent accounts of Mannino and Jones that no final decision was made as to specifically how the partitions would be displayed. In any event, the final details concerning the arrangement of the lunch-break area must comport with existing laws and regulations, including the California Building Code. Respondent may well have had second thoughts on the feasibility of the location of the lunch-break area, but negotiations and not abrogation was the course of action necessary for Respondent to follow if it wished to fulfill its obligation under the Statute.[12]

[10] Indeed, Respondent's own minutes of the regular August Labor-Management meeting, supra, indicates that at least as of that time the Union was still concerned with a rest area for bargaining unit employees. The minutes thus support Mannino's testimony on this and Respondent's failure to adequately explain the notation on the minutes, in view of the general thrust of the testimony of Rowan and Stordahl, raises substantial questions as to their credibility, especially that of Rowan who was present at the August meeting.

[11] Contrary to Respondent's contention I find and conclude that the meetings on the second floor relocation constituted bargaining on the matter. Indeed it is quite obvious from the testimony of Respondent's own witnesses that the parties, beyond question, discussed and reached agreement on the issue of second floor office space for the Union, an integral part of the overall discussion. The Statute does not require that negotiations must follow any prescribed procedure and the fact that bargaining between the parties might have been more formal at other times is immaterial.

In view of my findings and conclusions, supra, I reject Respondent's argument that management had no obligation to bargain since the absence of a lunch-break area on the second floor had no "substantial adverse impact" on employees. Thus, I have found Respondent did bargain on the matter and in fact agreed to the lunch-break area. In such circumstances arguments going to the initial bargaining obligation need not be addressed.

Accordingly, in view of the entire foregoing I conclude Respondent, by the conduct described herein, failed and refused to negotiate in good faith with the Union and thereby violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute and I recommend the Authority issue the following:

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Veterans Administration Outpatient Clinic, Los Angeles, California shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

    (a) Failing and refusing to implement the agreement reached with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2297, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the establishment of a lunch-break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, California consonant with laws and regulations governing such matters.

[12] In reaching these findings and conclusions I have not relied upon the testimony of Jones and Mitchell with regard to the statements they indicated were made on the tours by Facility Manager Carlos or Building Manager Murphy. It is quite possible that, as Carlos testified, statements were made relating to previously considering using the "Tel" room for a break area and the comments were misinterpreted in view of the physical locations of Jones and Mitchell when the comments were made and the circumstances of the situation. I also make no credibility finding with regard to the purported discussion between Mannino and Health Systems Specialist McIntyre regarding partitions, supra.

(b) In any like to related manner interfering with, restraining or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

(a) Implement the agreement reached with the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 2297, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning the establishment of a lunch-break area on the second floor of 417 South Hill Street, Los Angeles, California consonant with laws and regulations governing such matters.

(b) Post at its Los Angeles California Outpatient Clinic copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Clinic Director and shall be posted and maintained by him for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VIII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, 350 South Figueroa Street, 10th Floor, Los Angeles, California 90071, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Louis Aronin filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's decision that the agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (2) by denying an employee overtime. Regarding the issue of proper forum, the Judge concluded that the complaint was not barred by § 7116(d) as two grievances did not raise issues identical to the issue raised in the complaint, and did not cover the same period of the alleged discrimination. On the merits, the Judge concluded that while the employee received significantly less overtime during the relevant period than other employees similarly situated, it was not due to union activities. The Authority noted particularly that while there was some indication of union animus toward the employee, in agreement with the Judge, the record indicated the denial of overtime would have occurred even in the absence of such animus. On a procedural matter, the Chairman concluded, in agreement with the General Counsel, that the Judge erred in refusing to take administrative notice of another administrative law Judge's factual findings establishing union animus in a related case. However, the error was deemed not prejudicial given the outcome that the denial of overtime would have occurred even in the absence of such animus. The remaining Member, on the other hand, found it unnecessary in the circumstances of this case to pass upon the General Counsel's exceptions in this regard.

The agency's refusal to proceed to arbitration constituted a failure to comply with the requirements of § 7121 in violation of § 7116(a)(1) and (8). Neither the agency's assertion that the subject matter of the union's grievance was not arbitrable, nor the agency's contention that its refusal to participate did not prevent the union from invoking arbitration and proceeding ex parte constituted a defense for the agency's failure to comply with the requirements of §7121. As a remedy, the agency was ordered to proceed to arbitration upon request.

DIGEST NOTES

The arbitrator determined that the agency violated the terms of the parties agreement by failing to give permanent fishery inspectors first preference for all deployments for foreign fishing vessel observation work. Thus, the arbitrator found the agency's practice of giving permanent inspectors preference only on the initial deployments rather than also placing them ahead of temporary inspectors upon return from an assignment did not comply with the negotiated agreement. As a remedy, the arbitrator directed the agency to comply with the agreement and to provide restitution for all losses incurred by the permanent inspectors.

In its first exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award interferes with management's right under

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

§ 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine the personnel by which agency operations will be conducted, and to determine which employees will receive particular work assignments. The Authority found that the agency had already exercised rights under § 7106(a)(2)(B) by determinations that: foreign fishing vessel observation work would be performed by fishery inspectors; and both permanent and temporary inspectors were qualified to perform the work. Further, the Authority found that the parties' agreement, as interpreted and applied by the arbitrator, does not directly interfere with either of the agency's determinations in the exercise of its rights. Thus, the Authority noted that the procedure by which employees -- previously judged by management to be equally qualified -- will be selected to perform the work is negotiable under § 7106(b)(2), and when negotiated into an agreement is enforceable by grievance and arbitration. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator simply enforced the procedure for deployments provided for in the parties' agreement, and therefore that the agency failed to establish that the arbitrator's award is contrary to § 7106(a) as alleged.

In its second exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C. § 5596. The Authority found that although the arbitrator determined that the agency's scheduling practice adversely affected the income of permanent inspectors, he did not specifically find that but for management's unwarranted action, the grievants would have been offered, would have accepted, would have worked, and would have been paid for any particular deployments. Thus, the arbitrator did not determine that there were any specific instances where permanent inspectors were available for deployment and management failed to give them preference for the assignment in violation of the parties' agreement. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award by striking the order of backpay for permanent inspectors.

DIGEST NOTES

Contrary to the agency's assertion, the arbitrator determined that the matter raised under the negotiated grievance procedure was not the same matter that the grievant had raised under the statutory equal employment opportunity (EEO) complaint procedures. Accordingly, the arbitrator ruled on this basis that the grievance was not precluded. On the merits, the arbitrator set aside the suspension, which was the subject of the grievance, finding that it violated the parties' negotiated agreement.

In its exception, the agency contended that the arbitrator's award is contrary to § 7121(d). Authority noted that § 7121(d) effectively provides that when an employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under 5 U.S.C. § 2302(b)(1) has raised the matter under a statutory procedure, the matter may not later be raised as a grievance. Thus, for a grievance to be precluded, both elements of § 7121(d) must attach: (1) the matter which is the subject of the grievance must be the same matter which is the subject of the action initiated under the statutory procedure; and (2) such matter must have been raised earlier by timely initiation of an action under the statutory procedure by the employee. Having found in agreement with the arbitrator that the matter which was the subject of the grievance is not the same as any of the matters which were the subject of the EEO complaint filed with the agency, the Authority concluded that the agency had failed to establish a basis for finding the award deficient.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal was not sufficiently specific and delimited to form the basis for a negotiability determination. The proposal was nothing more than a general request to bargain over agency Personnel Letter No. 711-10 which articulates the agency's policy concerning payment of travel and per diem to employee union representatives. The Authority went on to note the agency's argument that its Personnel Letter is not subject to bargaining because it is an agency-wide regulation for which a compelling need exists. The Authority summarily rejected the argument for the reasons set forth in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of Federal Grain Inspection Locals and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service, 21 FLRA No. 21 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1295 (D.C. Cir. May 21, 1986). (proposal 1)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

A proposal concerning travel and per diem is nonnegotiable. However, the agency's argument that the proposal does not involve conditions of employment was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1192 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). The Authority also found that neither 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) nor the authorities to which it applies -- Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701 et seq., and the Federal Travel Regulations, 41 CFR, Part 101-7 -- require a determination to be made only by management and only on a case by case basis that travel in the context of a particular activity is sufficiently within the interest of the Government so as to constitute official business. Nevertheless, the Authority found that the proposal appears to require payment of travel and per diem without regard to whether the statutory and regulatory requirements for payment, discussed in Customs Service, have been met. Accordingly, the Authority found the proposal to be inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations. (proposal 2)

As to the agency's argument that the union lacks standing to file the petition for review in this case because the union's name does not correspond to that listed on the documents relating to its recognition as exclusive representative for the bargaining unit involved, the Authority found that such a question should more appropriately be raised through representation procedures rather than negotiability procedures. Accordingly, in its decision the Authority decided only the negotiability issues raised under § 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E).

DIGEST NOTES

In agreement with the Judge, and noting the absence of exceptions on the issue, the Authority found that the agency violated § 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by changing the established procedures by which the union used the photocopy machine and internal mail system, without first providing the union with notice and an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the changes.

However, in disagreement with the Judge, the Authority found that a status quo ante remedy is not warranted. In the Authority's view, where a management action is based on its right under § 7106(a)(1) to determine internal security practices of the agency, then greater weight must be given to the disruptive effect on the agency's operations when applying the factors contained in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982).

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority determined that the union proposal defining "critical element," is nonnegotiable. The Judge concluded, based on his resolution of credibility, that the union's intent was that critical elements should be "grade controlling." Thus, the Authority found the proposal to be outside the duty to bargain as it has held that a proposal which would require that the critical elements of a position be based only on grade controlling factors of a position is inconsistent with § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). (section 2.B.)

ALL ENTRIES SUBJECT TO FURTHER EDITING FOR INCLUSION IN CONSOLIDATED DIGESTS AND INDEXES.

The union proposals prescribing and defining rating levels of employee performance were found by the Authority to be nonnegotiable. As the proposals would prescribe the levels of performance that management must accept in evaluating an employee's overall performance as well as establish the number of rating levels to evaluate such performance, the Authority concluded that the proposals would directly interfere with management's right to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). (section 2.E. through 2.H., and sectio 4.b.2.)

The Authority found the remaining union proposals (section 2.A., 2.C., 2.D., and 2.I. through 2.K.) to be negotiable. The Authority determined that because section 2.A. defining "job elements" and the related definitions in the remaining union proposals only subject management to the procedural requirement that the position description involved accurately reflect the work assigned, the proposals would not interfere with the agency right to direct employees and assign work under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B). Similarly, the Authority found the proposals not to be inconsistent, that is, incompatible or irreconcilable, with Air Force Regulation (AFR) 40-452 as the proposals would only require the agency to procedurally amend an employee's position description to achieve consistency with the duties assigned. Moreover, although the definition of "non-critical" element in section 2.C. does not denote a consequence for failing to meet the described objective standard, the proposal is not inconsiste with the regulatory definition because, as the Authority has hel in all cases involving remedial action, where the proposal is silent, the regulation would govern. Finally, in the absence of exceptions to the Judge's determination that union proposals section 2.J., Performance Appraisal, and 2.K., Training, are negotiable, the Authority adopted that determination. (section 2.A., 2.C., 2.D., and 2.I. through 2.K.)

Subsequent to the Judge's finding to the contrary, the Authority has decided that the compelling need for an agency's rule or regulation may be decided in an unfair labor practice proceeding. Based on the finding that the proposals do not conflict with the regulation, the Authority found it unnecessary to rule on whether a compelling need exists for AFR 40-452.

Having determined that certain union proposals are negotiable, and are not incompatible or irreconcilable with AFR 40-452, the Authority concluded that the agency violated § 7116 (a)(1) and (5) when it implemented its performance appraisal system without having negotiated with the union over those proposals. The Authority further found that the agency's need to implement the system by a certain date did not negate its obligation to bargain over the negotiable proposals because, in the Authority's view, the more than three and one-half months between the union's submission of its proposals and the agency's implementation date was, absent indications to the contrary, sufficient time to bargain.

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's ruling granting the Respondent's motion to restrict the participation during the hearing of one of the General Counsel's attorneys on the basis of an appearance of a conflict of interest. Without passing on whether there was either a real or apparent conflict of interest, the Authority affirmed the Judge's ruling as there had been no showing of prejudice caused by the ruling. In this regard, the Authority noted particularly that the attorney in question was permitted to remain at the hearing throughout the proceeding and to actively assist the other attorney for the General Counsel in presenting the General Counsel's case.

The arbitrator directed that the agency refrain from assigning bargaining-unit work to general foremen and other nonbargaining-unit personnel on the basis of his determination that the collective bargaining agreement prohibited such assignments. The Authority concluded that the arbitrator's award is deficient as contrary to § 7106(a)(2)(B) by interpreting and enforcing the collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly interfere with management's discretion to determine which personnel will receive particular work assignments. Accordingly, the Authority modified the award by striking the order to the agency pertaining to the assignment of bargaining-unit work.

DIGEST NOTES

In Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985), the D.C. Circuit remanded the subject case (Local 32) and directed the Authority to address and resolve an apparent inconsistency between Local 32 (holding that a union proposal defining the competitive area to be used for RIF to be outside the duty to bargain) and Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984) (ACT) (holding that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain).

The Authority explained that the proposals in both the ACT and Local 32 cases would have directly determined the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The critical difference between the proposals lies in the nature and degree of the impact they would have on nonunit employees. The competitive area proposed in ACT only affected conditions of employment of nonunit employees indirectly -- it excluded them from the negotiated competitive area. The proposed competitive area in Local 32, in contrast, consistent with the requirements of applicable OPM regulations, encompassed non-bargaining unit employees in the negotiated competitive area. It directly determined, that is, prescribed, their competitive area.

The Authority stated that it has attempted to strike an appropriate balance between the right of the union to negotiate over the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees and the right of the agency to set the conditions of employment of non-bargaining unit employees; indeed, the requirement that they be set consistent with Government-wide rules and regulations. To balance these conflicting rights, the Authority has distinguished (1) permissively negotiable proposals which would affirmatively establish or define a condition of employment for nonunit employees or positions from (2) mandatorily negotiable proposals which would affect conditions of employment of nonunit employees or positions only to as lesser degree.

Thus, in all cases since Local 32 dealing with competitive areas where an agency has objected to bargaining based upon the fact that a proposed competitive area would directly determine nonunit employees' conditions of employment, the Authority has held the proposals to be outside the mandatory obligation to bargain. Further, under Authority precedent, any agency could properly bargain over the definition of a competitive area which would include nonunit employees, as the agency in Local 32 apparently did in the past. Nonetheless, in Federal as in the private sector, previous bargaining over a permissive matter would not prevent an agency negotiating a new agreement from changing its position and refusing to bargain over an elective subject.

To the extent that its approach differs from that in the private sector, the Authority noted that the Congress did not intend to require that the Federal sector labor relations be a mirror image of the private sector scheme. Thus, the Statute's antecedents are in the Executive Order program rather than the National Labor Relations Act.

DECISION AND ORDER

The Administrative Law Judge issued the attached Decision in the above-entitled proceeding finding that the Respondent had not engaged in the unfair labor practices alleged in the complaint and recommending that the complaint be dismissed in its entirety. Thereafter, the General Counsel filed exceptions to the Judge's Decision and a supporting brief.

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute), the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing and finds that no prejudicial error was committed. The rulings are hereby affirmed. Upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommendation that the complaint be dismissed.

The Authority concludes that the General Counsel has not met the burden of proving that a unit employee, John Mack, was denied overtime because of his protected union activities.

In adopting the Judge's conclusion that the complaint should be dismissed, the Authority notes particularly his findings that overtime for Title 2 claims employees was granted to those employees who had unmanageable backlogged cases, and that the Activity determined employee Mack's backlog of cases in relation to other employees' backlogs was insufficient to warrant assigning him overtime.

While there was some indication of union animus toward Mack, we conclude, in agreement with the Judge, that the record indicates the denial of overtime would have occurred even in the absence of such animus.*/ Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C., 6 FLRA 96 (1981). *See also American Federation of Government Employees v. DECISION

Statement of the Case

Pursuant to a Complaint and Notice of Hearing issued on January 6, 1984, by the Regional Director for the Federal Labor Relations Authority, Region IX, a hearing was held before the undersigned on March 22, and 21, 1984 at Seattle, Washington.

[1] Under date of February 27, 1984, an Order was issued by the Regional Director, Federal Labor Relations Authority, Region IX, consolidating Case No. 9-CA-40003 and Case No. 9-CA-40108, as well as a Complaint and Notice of Hearing involving Case No. 9-CA-40108. Thereafter, under date of March 16, 1984, the same Regional Director issued an Order severing these cases and withdrawing the Complaint and Notice of Hearing in Case No. 9-CA-40108.

This is a proceeding which arose under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, 5 U.S.C. 7101 et seq. (here called the Statute). It is based on a charge filed on January 3, 1984, by American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1501, AFL-CIO (herein called the Union) against Social Security Administration, Baltimore, Maryland (herein called Respondent).

The Complaint alleged, in substance, that in August and/or September, 1983 Respondent denied John C. Mack, an employee, the opportunity to work overtime; that said John Mack was the alternate local union representative for Respondent's South Seattle Branch office, Seattle, Washington, as well as Technical advisor for employees and Union officials in the Puget Sound area; that the denial to Mack of an opportunity to work overtime was because of the aforesaid activity engaged in by Mack on behalf of the Union -- all in violation of Section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

Respondent's Answer, dated January 23, 1984, denied that Mack was not afforded an opportunity to work overtime; that it did so based on Mack's union activities. It also denied the commission of any unfair labor practices.

All parties were represented at the hearing. Each was afforded full opportunity to be heard, to adduce evidence, and to examine as well as cross-examine witnesses. Thereafter, briefs[2] were filed with the undersigned which have been duly considered.

Upon the entire record herein, from my observation of the witnesses and their demeanor. and from all of the testimony and evidence adduced at the hearing, I make the following findings and conclusions:

Findings of Fact

1. At all times material herein American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, was the certified bargaining representative of Respondent Social Security Administration's employees in a specified unit. Included within said unit, at all times material herein, have been the claims representatives as well as other employees, who are employed at Respondent's South Seattle Branch office, Seattle, Washington.

2. At all times material herein American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1501, AFL-CIO, was the designated and authorized agent, on behalf of American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, to represent and act for the unit employees of Respondent's South Seattle Branch office, Seattle, Washington.[3]

3. Respondent and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, are parties to a National Collective Bargaining Agreement which, by its terms, became effective in June 11, 1982 for a three year period. Said agreement is, and has been at all times material herein, applicable to the unit employees at Respondent's South Seattle Branch, Washington, D.C.

4. The said collective bargaining agreement provides inter alia, that[4]: (a) The Administration shall not interfere with, or coerce Union representatives in the exercise of their rights under 5 U.S.C. 71 and this agreement, (Article 2, Section 1B); (b) Each employee has the right to join or assist the Union, to be protected in the exercise of these rights, and to act for a labor organization as a representative when dealing with an agency. (Article 3, Section 1); overtime should not be distributed or withheld as a reward or penalty. (Article 10, Section 2B); employees may, when approved by management, accrue and use compensatory time. When feasible, the employer shall grant a request for such time rather than payment for overtime. (Article 10, Section 2E); when the Administration decides to use overtime, qualified volunteers shall be used before non-volunteers. (Article 10, Section 4A); all qualified employees whose performance is at least fully satisfactory will be notified of the availability of overtime. (Article 10, Section 4B); overtime will be assigned fairly and equitably. (Article 11, Section 4C).

5. The South Seattle Branch office, in its Title 2 unit, is responsible for handling retirement and survivors benefits (RSI cases) and disability claims (DIB cases). Its title 16 unit administered social security claims which are designated as SSI cases.

6. John Mack, who has been employed at the South Seattle Branch since July, 1976, is a claims representative in the Title 2 unit. As such, Mack handles RSI and DIB claims which originate from either direct interviews (about 95%), or by way of mail and telephone (about 5%).

[3] American Federation of Government Employees, Local 3937, AFL-CIO, which was formerly a part of Local 1501, is the current representative at this branch office.

[4] The undersigned has set forth, in substance, the particular contractual provisions referred to by the Union in its grievances concerning a denial of overtime.

7. At all times material herein Mack has been an alternate representative of the local union at the South Seattle Branch. In that capacity he steps in when the local representative is unable to handle a grievance, complaint, an EEO matter, or during negotiations with management. Mack also functions as advisor to union representatives in most Puget Sound area offices, helping them directly or by means of telephone calls made by the representatives to him at his office. In addition, Mack is contacted regarding grievances or unfair labor practices and he is the formal step 3 grievance official. In the past twelve months Mack has handled at least 46 grievances and 39 unfair labor practice charges against Respondent. About 39 of the grievances involved the South Seattle Branch, while all unfair labor practice cases concerned this branch.

8. The subject of official time is dealt with in Respondent's Manual Circular - Labor Relations Handbook. Part VI entitled "Administering the Agreement - Use of Time and Facilities" - sets forth guidelines for managers concerning official time usage. Provision is made therein for granting such time to union representatives for union related functions. The guidelines also provide that, except for incoming phone calls, official time must be requested by the representative and approved in advance. Further, it is deemed reasonable to allow a union representative to accept an incoming call and complete same if it doesn't last over five minutes. If it will last beyond that time, the representative should contact the supervisor and seek official time. (G.C. Exhibit 2, page 2).

9. In March, 1983, all but one of the Title 2 claims representatives submitted a written request for overtime to supervisor Frank Allard. Mack testified that he needed overtime since his work as a claims representative backlogged badly by the end of February. In the few months prior to March, Mack had been involved in 18-20 grievances, which took away much of his time from case handling. Allard denied the request.

10. Under date of April 8, 1983 Mack and Zee Williams filed a grievance[5] as a result of the denial by Allard of the March request for overtime. In the grievance Mack alleged that management violated Articles 2, 3, and 10, heretofore referred to, by denying his request. He stated that his work was backlogged; that he submitted a detailed list of such items; that the overtime or compensatory time was necessary to complete the work; that overtime was being granted to others for backlogged workloads.

[5] Article 24 of the National Agreement provides for a Grievance Procedure which may be utilized by the parties or an employee in the event of a complaint. It includes a three step procedure for grievance presentation.

11. Allard denied the aforesaid grievance in a letter dated July 5, 1983,[6] addressed to Mary O'Malley, AFGE Local Representative. He stated, inter alia, that the request for overtime was not justified at the time; that overtime had not been accorded title 2 claims activities; that if and when it becomes available, all qualified employees will be notified, and that it will be assigned equally and fairly.

12. Mack made an informal oral request for overtime in May or June to clean up his backlog before going on leave.[7] He went on leave from June 20 until July 10. Between July 11 and July 31, Mack was engaged in labor-management relations activities for 18 of 80 hours. On July 26 he made a second written request for overtime. His statement to Allard recited that there were over 46 files backlogged upon his return from leave; that he had not received overtime or extra adjudication time despite his requests; that he had been on official time for 16 hours since July 11 and was scheduled for another 11 hours within the next few days; that he had at least 34 files[8] on his desk, of which some were high priority; that he needed at least 3-4 hours overtime to clear the highest priority ones.

13. In a memo dated July 27, Allard denied the request and stated that he reviewed the statistical data for the weeks of 7/15/83 and 7/22/83; that during those 10 work days the unit took in 110 claims in DOWR categories 1, 2, and 4; that Mack had 9 receipts, or 8.2% of all claims receipts; that the other 4 claims representatives had 17, 29, 24 and 21 claims respectively. Further, Allard noted that during this period the claims unit took 175 RSHDI interviews, of which Mack took 32 or 18.3%, that another claims representative had 23 interviews and receipted 21 claims whereas Mack had only receipted 9 claims. The supervisor stated that, even taking into account Mack's official time usage and annual leave, the employee's claims production is not competitive. Allard commented that the backlog consists of actions Mack should have taken previously; that the 3 hours of adjudication time scheduled for Friday is sufficient to handle backlog. He concluded by stating Mack's problem is one of time management and concentration. Allard also requested a status report from the employee.

[8] Listed in his status report was the type of work to be done in each file. It involves such tasks as review, memo to write, hearings, etc. Eleven files were designated as "miscellaneous." (G.C. Exhibit 6).

14. In his status report dated July 29 Mack again set forth a report of cases on hand and work to be done. He recited that 20 backlogged files have been resolved and moved to the next stage; that 12 of original 34 files remain and though 11 of the 12 have low priority, he has received 12 new files to be reviewed.[9] Mack repeated that it was not physically possible to clear a backlog of 40 files, take a full share of interviews, and be out of the unit for 18 of 80 hours Allard testified.

15. Record facts show that between July and September the claims representatives in Title 2 unit were John Mack, Tiny Briscoe, Barbara Larson, Sharon Mirante, Dave Rokowski, who left at the end of August, and Fran Zacher, who replaced Rokowski.

16. Record facts show that Briscoe requested overtime in June or July but was not permitted to work overtime. She requested it again in August and her supervisor, Frank Allard, suggested she submit a memo stating why she needed overtime. Based on her backlog of pending cases, she was given overtime to perform adjudication duties.

17. In late June, or early July, Mirante gave Allard a written statement indicating she was very backlogged in her work. She had been interviewing non-stop for a long period of time, and there was little adjudication time available. Mirante does not recall that she asked for overtime - just that she wanted Allard to know the situation. Allard told her he would take it up with Ruth Saunders, the Branch Manager of the South Seattle office. A week later Allard informed her overtime would be available. In August Allard approached Mirante and told her overtime was available; that if she needed it, Mirante should advise Allard and he would see if it could be arranged.

18. Mirante also testified that on one occasion in September she was asked by Allard to work on some of Mack's old RSI cases because nothing had been done on them. She worked on them one afternoon and was finishing up one morning on one particular case. At that time Mack was out of the office on labor matters.

19. Based on a stipulation entered into by the parties at the hearing, the record reflects that:

> (a) Tiny Briscoe worked overtime for 5 1/2 hours in August and 9 hours in September. Of this amount, 1/4 hour was on late interviews and 14 hours on adjudication of RSI and DIB claims.

[9] Mack testified that of the approximate 45-50 cases that were on his desk after he returned from leave in July, none was RSI or DIB cases. They pertained to reconsiderations, hearings, H-memo's, impacting benefits and miscellaneous.

(b) Sharon Mirante worked overtime for 4 hours in July, 2 1/2 hours in August, and 7 1/4 hours in September. Of this amount, 3/4 hour was on late interviews and 13 hours were worked on RSI and DIB claims.

(c) Barbara Larson worked overtime for 7 1/2 hours in July and 5 1/4 hours in September. All except 1/4 hours were worked on RSI and DIB cases.

(d) Dave Rokowski worked overtime for 1/4 hour in July and 35 minutes in August - all on late interviews.

(e) Fran Zacher worked no overtime in August or September.

20. A 2nd step grievance meeting, involving the April 8 grievance, was held on July 27. Carl Rabun, Assistant Deputy Manager for Respondent's downtown office, presided for management. Mack and O'Malley were present, but Zee had retired and did not attend. The employees told Rabun that Title 2 was short-staffed as much as Title 16 but that different conditions prevailed. Thus, the supervisor in Title 16 approached employees for overtime, and the employees did not have to ask for it. Rabun was informed that Williams and Mack were told overtime wasn't necessarily for Title 2 employees. The union representatives also stated that both Mack and Williams were fearful that Allard's memorandum of July 27 regarding their request for overtime would be kept in the file and utilized for appraisal purposes. There was no attempt to amend the grievance to indicate the denial by management of the July request by Mack for overtime. Neither was there any mention of said denial being prompted by Mack's union activities. The relief sought includes granting all future employee's rights for compensatory time and removing Allard's July 27 memo from Mack's file.

21. The 2nd step grievance was denied by Rabun in his decision dated August 12 (Resp. Exh. 1). He stated that management must decide, on a case by case basis, when compensatory time is appropriate; that management decided, in regard to Mack, neither compensatory nor overtime was warranted as his caseload was not unreasonable or unbalanced; that the memo of July 27 must remain to support Allard's decision.

22. In early September Mack told Allard his backlog was very big and he would be going out again on official time. Allard advised Mack to do his best in handling his work.

23. On September 21 Mack was interviewing a claimant at his desk. He was interrupted by several phone calls, most of which were from the public regarding claims Mack worked on for them. About 11 A.M., as he was concluding a phone call, Allard came to the desk. The supervisor asked the seated claimant if the call concerned him. Upon being told it did not, Allard stated to Mack that he wanted to speak with him after the interview. About 20 minutes later Allard approached the desk again. The claimant had left the interview. Mack testified that Allard spoke to Mack, saying: "If you ever take another union call while you're interviewing, the next time you do it you'll be reprimanded. And the next time you do it after that, you'll be suspended, and the next time you do it after that, you'll be fired."[10] Mack had never been spoken to regarding receipt of phone calls theretofore.

24. The April 28 grievance reached its 3rd step presentation at a meeting held on September 30. Both O'Malley and Mack attended and management's representative was Dennis Rainey, Respondent's Area Director. In addition to repeating the same contentions made at the 2nd step meeting, Mack also mentioned that some claims representatives had heard it said that union officials would be denied overtime based on their union activities. O'Malley told Rainey she had not checked that out; that she would do so and if it were true, an unfair labor practice charge would be filed. In the presentation of the grievance neither Mack nor O'Malley raised anti-union animus as part of the grievance.[11]

Both Mack and Rainey testified, and I find, that the Union representatives consented to Rainey's writing one decision covering the April 8 grievance and the matters to be included in the October 7 grievance. Rainey also testified that it was common for the Union, at a 3rd step grievance session, to raise matters of LMR[12] concerns which are not part of a pending grievance. The Union representatives, however, did not consider the April 8 and October 7 grievance as merged.

25. Rainey's administrative assistant, June Riston, reported back to her supervisor that she had conducted an investigation and found no support for the contention that overtime was denied to union members or union activists.

[11] Mack testified that, after the grievance closed, O'Malley did mention that they were becoming aware of a pattern of anti-union animus; that the Union may be filing charges based on such a pattern.

[12] Labor Management Relations.

26. A grievance dated October 7 was filed by Mack and O'Malley alleging that on September 9 management scheduled overtime for the following Saturday and violated the National Agreement, Article 10, Section 2B, 4A, 4B and 4C. It was also alleged that in September 9 the Union became aware that management's failure to abide by the contract had been ongoing and continues. Both employees sought, as relief, back pay for overtime where it was scheduled in violation of the contract; and that management cease its discriminatory scheduling of overtime.

27. Rainey rendered his written decision regarding the 3rd step grievance session on October 24. He stated therein, inter alia, that: (a) an investigation showed no discriminatory assignment of overtime; (b) he began reducing overtime in 1980 for Area I due to its excessive use thereof, and in 1982 and 1983 he required that managers request specific hours of needed overtime and justify its requirement; (c) concerning Mack's request for overtime on March 25, Rainey ascertained that during the first quarter of the year Mack's claims receipt averaged 7 2/3 per week which was not a particularly heavy load - it was about 1/2 the receipt per claims representatives for another D O in the Seattle area, and in most offices would be considered an average or below average workload. Rainey concluded by stating that he agreed with the management staff, which reviewed Mack's caseload, that overtime for him was not justified and be denied the grievance.

28. Respondent issued a program report for Mack covering the period from 10/29/82 to 9/31/83. His performance was characterized as fully satisfactory as of 2/23/83 and also as of 8/3/83.[13] The narrative, which is dated 2/23/83, put forth goals which Mack should strive to meet.[14] The comments dated 8/3/83 by supervisor Allard were as follows:

> Your performance continues to be fully satisfactory overall. My opinion takes into account the variables that require you to be away from your desk: LMR activities and use of leave.

[14] This Progress review Report was involved in another case, 9-CA-30242, which went to hearing before Judge Oliver. General Counsel requested the undersigned to take administrative notes of Administrative Law Judge Oliver's findings based on credibility resolutions regarding Mack's February 23 Progress Report, as well as alleged anti-union statements directed to Mack in that case. The undersigned denies that request. It is not deemed proper to take such notice of factual findings by another administrative law judge made in connection with another case. As of this writing, the Authority has not issued its decision in 9-CA-30242.

29. On October 10, Mack was assigned to handle post-entitlement claims. This was effected since the initial claims, which Mack handled theretofore, required quick action which could not be accomplished when Mack was out on official time. Thus, by this reassignment, Mack would not be stuck in short time frames.

30. Supervisor Allard testified that, in evaluating Mack's request for overtime, the employee's union activities were not considered. In respect to appraising Mack's work, Allard stated he subtracts the union time from the amount of time Mack is on the job to determine whether the employee has handled the proper volume of work and whether it is timely or not.

31. Branch Manager Ruth Saunders testified that no overtime was necessary for Title 2 claims representatives prior to July. This differed from the situation in the Title 16 unit where the number of claims representatives had been reduced but the case load had not diminished. The situation changed in July since employees in Title 2 were going on vacation. Allard asked her for overtime for the RSI unit, stating that several claims representatives were backlogged and had requested overtime. Saunders inquired as to why adjudication time [15] would't suffice. Allard said the employees were interviewing constantly and not getting adjudication time. Whereupon Saunders approached Manager Barnes and asked for overtime for the Title 2 unit. Justification for the request was the vacation schedules of the employees. She obtained 15 hours per month for July, August and September.

32. Further testimony by Saunders reflects that claims representative Briscoe asked for overtime due to backlog and was denied by Allard. Then the employee came to Saunders stating she had heavy interviewing and no adjudication time. Saunders arranged for her to work adjudication time. Briscoe came to her again in mid-July and asked for overtime, and thereafter Saunders approached Barnes for overtime for Title 2 people.

33. In July Allard told Saunders that Mack had wanted to work overtime. Saunders looked at the workload reports which showed Mack had two high priority cases (retirement survivor).[16] She told Allard there didn't seem to be a need for overtime at this point, and Mack had adjudication time scheduled for later that week. Saunders did not check Mack's desk after July 11.

[15] Respondent gave 3 hours per week to each claims representative to adjudicate claims. This involves actual case work - processing cases toward completion.

[16] Saunders claimed she worked Mack's desk while he was on vacation; that he had, in addition to those two cases, two DIS cases to be handled.

34. Mack testified he told Allard on September 6 that he would be leaving again for official time and working on arbitration cases. He further advised the supervisor that he had about 60 files; that Allard said he wanted Mack to review and prioritize that week. When Mack indicated he doesn't have time, Allard told the employee to ask for one hour's overtime.

35. Saunders testified that Mack requested overtime orally on September 7; that she looked at the work and concluded it was the first time his request was justified. Accordingly, Saunders told Allard to approve it. Saunders further testified she was surprised to note that the overtime slip showed that Mack had reviewed and prioritized his cases rather than working them. She approved one hour for overtime and 5 1/2 hours of compensatory time.[17] Saunders stated that Mack is entitled to receive overtime if he should need it.

Conclusions

The principal issues for determination herein are as follows: (1) whether the Complaint is barred by section 7116(d) of the Statute in view of the April 8 and October 7 1983 grievances regarding the denial of overtime to Mack by Respondent; (2) assuming arguendo, the Complaint is not so based, whether Mack was denied overtime in July, August and September 1983 based on his union activities and thus discriminated against in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute.

(1) The pertinent part of section 7116(d) of the Statute provides that:

> . . . issues which can be raised under a grievance procedure may, in the discretion of the aggrieved party, be raised under the grievance procedure or as an unfair labor practice under this section, but not under both procedures.

---

[17] Respondent's Exhibit 4 is the overtime form which Mack filled out to report the time granted beforehand. This form is submitted by the employee after the individual has worked the overtime. This exhibit shows Mack worked one hour overtime in September 7 in reviewing and prioritizing cases. Saunders testified she understood the request by Mack was to work overtime on his caseload - not to prioritize his backlog - and she believed that the approval of one hour overtime was granted to handle his caseload. The exhibit showed he worked otherwise.

Respondent contends that the April 8 grievance was escalated to cover, at the 2nd and 3rd step grievance presentations, the same demand of overtime to Mack as set forth in the Complaint. Further, it is maintained that the October 7 grievance referenced denials of overtime in September to Mack based on violations of the contract preserving the right of employees to union activity.

The undersigned is not persuaded that 7116(d) of the Statute does operate to bar the instant complaint. The April 8 grievance concerns the denial of overtime to Mack prior to that date. While it does refer to specific sections of the master agreement which assure employees the right to engage in union activities, that grievance does not relate to the denial of overtime in July, August and September, as alleged in the complaint.

Moreover, I am not convinced that the discussion at the 2nd and 3rd step grievance meetings were intended to include the denial of overtime during those said months as part of the April 8 grievance. At the 2nd step meeting O'Malley told Assistant District Manager Rabun that the union wanted Allard's July 27 memo removed from the file; that employees Mack and Williams were afraid it might be used in an appraisal rating against them. While some discussion may have ensued concerning Mack's being denied overtime at that stage, there was no attempt to amend the April 8 grievance to cover later denials. Neither was any mention made thereat regarding Mack's being denied overtime by reason of union activities. At the 3rd step grievance session reference was made by Mack to the fact that some employees heard comments that overtime would be denied to officers of the union. However, O'Malley stated she had not heard those remarks and would file a charge if they were proven true. While she did make mention of union animus, it was done after the grievance meeting was finished.

In respect to the October 7 grievance, that was an attempt to grieve management's scheduling overtime on September 9 in contravention of the right assured employees under the master agreement. The grievance does not purport to cover any other period, nor does it contain any specifics in regard to any alleged discrimination.

In order to bar an unfair labor practice complaint based upon a prior or pending grievance, it must be shown that the said complaint raises the same issues as are involved in the grievance procedure. Social Security Administration, 16 FLRA 434; Department of Health and Human Services, etc. 5 FLRA 504. The issue raised in the April 8 grievance, as well as that posed in the October 7 grievance, is not identical to the issue raised in the instant complaint, and those grievances do not cover the same period of alleged discriminations. Accordingly, I conclude that the complaint herein is not barred by Section 7116(d) of the Statute.

(2) General Counsel insists that Mack was denied overtime by reason of his activities as a union representative. While conceding that no direct evidence upholds that conclusion, it is argued that discrimination may be inferred from the circumstances. In support of such inference General Counsel contends that the record reflects disparate treatment between Mack and the other claims representatives in Title 2; that union animus is apparent from the statements made by Allard to Mack on September 21; and that the pretextual nature of the denial of overtime to Mack can be seen from the unwarranted assertions by management regarding Mack's performance problems, as well as the failure to grant him such time in the face of his backlog of work.

As correctly stated by General Counsel, an employee engaged in protected activity may not, under the statute, be discriminated against because of such activity. Thus, an employee who is active on behalf of a union may not be treated adversely by reasons thereof without management running afoul of Section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute. Directorate of Supply Operations, Defense Logistics Agency, Headquarters, Defense Logistics Agency, 2 FLRA 937. It is also true that discriminatory conduct on the part of an employer may be inferred on the basis of the circumstances which exist in a particular special case. See Department of the Navy, Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 15 FLRA 867. While it may be argued that Respondent herein denied overtime to Mack during July, August and September because of his union activities, I am constrained to conclude that the record does not warrant that inference. The factors recited by General Counsel do not establish, in my opinion, a prima facie case of discriminatory conduct toward Mack. They do not justify concluding that an illegal motive was the predicate for the fact that this individual did not receive similar overtime during said months.

It is argued that disparate treatment of Mack by Respondent is one factor reflecting discrimination. General Counsel adverts to the fact that overtime was accorded the other claims representatives in Title 2, while it was denied to Mack. The record shows that none of these individuals received overtime prior to July, 1983. Claims representative Briscoe was also denied overtime in June and July although she requested it, and Fran Zacher worked no overtime. It is true that, as stipulated, Briscoe worked overtime in August and September; Mirante did so in all three months; Larson worked overtime in July and September; and Rokowski worked for a short overtime period in July and August. Note is taken, however, that 80% of the work for the claims representative arises from the interviews taken by each individual. Thus, since Mack was out of the office a good deal attending to labor relations matters, the remaining four claims representatives were taking most of the interviews. Accordingly, these individuals were responsible for handling most of the cases or claims in Title 2. The record does not contain the exact amount of case backlog for each of the other claims representatives. It is however, reasonably inferable that their backlog would be high and supportive of overtime to handle their cases. Moreover, manager Saunders worked Mack's desk in his absence, and she concluded that since he only had two priority cases there was no justification for overtime being granted to him. Further, the record indicates Mack did not seek overtime in August, and that around that time, in September, he was 'in pretty good shape'. Although I recognize that Mack had a considerable amount of work to be completed - much of which did not necessarily involve processing of initial claims, one must recognize that management may exercise its own discretion in the allotment of overtime. The assignment of overtime is a judgment call, and it would be difficult, at best, to substitute another judgment for that of management in such an instance. In the event that other considerations prevail which clearly demonstrate that the disparate allotment was predicated on an employee's unionism, then management's decision in this respect may well be deemed pretextual. However, I am not persuaded that such was the case in so far as Mack was concerned.

As a predicate for establishing illegal motivation in not granting overtime to Mack, it is contended that the statements of Allard to Mack on September 21, evince discriminatory intent by Respondent. The comments by Allard on that date may well, in my opinion, show union animus on the part of the supervisor.[18] Nevertheless, I am not convinced that a nexus exists between those remarks and the failure to allot overtime to Mack by Respondent during July, August and September. While these remarks demonstrate annoyance on the part of Allard with Mack's receiving union related phone calls, it does not follow that the failure to grant overtime was due to his activity as a union representative. The final approval of overtime, or denial thereof, was in the hands of Saunders, who displayed no animus in that regard. Moreover, Allard rated Mack as "fully satisfactory" in the appraisals of the employee for July, August and September. Those ratings go a long way toward dispelling any inference of discrimination which General Counsel contends is manifest from the Progress Reports concerning Mack's performance. Finally, it is difficult to conclude that the September 21 statements constitute union animus which demonstrate illegal motivation in the treatment of this employee, when it is seen that Mack was later transferred to Title 16 so as not to be stuck in work with short time frames.

Apart from the fact that the Branch Manager never thwarted Mack in respect to his union activities or disapproved official time for such duties, there is no evidence that Saunders' decision regarding overtime was influenced by Mack's representational duties. Despite the confusion in regard to the overtime granted Mack on September 7 for one hour, Saunders understood the overtime was for processing cases as needed at that time.

[18] The Complaint does not, however, allege that said statements were violative of Section 7116(a)(1) of the Statute.

In sum, while the record discloses that Mack received significantly less overtime than tree of the other five claims representatives employed during the July-September, 1983 period, I conclude it does not appear that this was due to his union activities. Thus, I also conclude Respondent did not violate Section 7116(a)(1) and (2) of the Statute. Accordingly, it is recommended that the Complaint herein be dismissed in its entirety.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority, in accordance with section 2429.1(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, based on a stipulation of facts by the parties who have agreed that no material issue of fact exists. Briefs for the Authority's consideration were filed by the Respondent and the General Counsel. The complaint alleges that the Respondent, Health Care Financing Administration, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by refusing to participate in the arbitration of a grievance filed on behalf of a bargaining unit employee by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO (the Union), the agent of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO (AFGE) in matters concerning the Respondent's Headquarters employees.

II. Facts

The Union filed a grievance on behalf of employee Floyd McDaniels on March 31, 1983, pursuant to the negotiated grievance procedure contained in the agreement between AFGE and the Respondent. On May 10, 1983, the Union advised the Respondent that it was referring McDaniels' grievance to arbitration in accordance with the negotiated grievance procedure. On June 1, 1983, the Union submitted a signed copy of a Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service "Request for Arbitration Panel" to the Respondent for its concurring signature. On June 6, 1983, the Respondent advised the Union that it was refusing to participate in the arbitration proceeding because the issue raised was "not an appropriate grievance under our negotiated grievance procedure."

III. The Issue

Whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by refusing to participate in the arbitration of a grievance filed by the Union on March 31, 1983, on behalf of a bargaining unit employee, under the parties' negotiated grievance procedure.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel contends that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute by refusing to proceed to arbitration on the grounds that the matter was not grievable under the parties' negotiated agreement. The General Counsel specifically relies on the Authority's rationale in Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 11 FLRA 456 (1983), in which an agency was found to have failed to comply with the requirements of section 7121 of the Statute by refusing to participate in binding arbitration of a grievance which it believed to pose an issue that was excluded by the terms of the parties' negotiated agreement.

The Respondent contends that its refusal to participate in the arbitration proceeding based on the belief that the subject matter of the Union's grievance, contracting out, was not an appropriate subject for arbitration pursuant to the parties' agreement, did not prevent the Union from proceeding to arbitration on its own. The Respondent further contends that it never expressed an unwillingness to be bound by such an arbitrability award or to share in the costs of the Union's decision to proceed to arbitration. In conclusion, the Respondent asserts that the intent of section 7121 of the Statute is to permit either party to proceed with arbitration alone, and that the process is not discouraged despite the Authority's contrary views in prior decisions.

V. Analysis

It has long been established that section 7121 of the Statute mandates that each collective bargaining agreement shall provide procedures for the settlement of grievances, including questions of arbitrability, and unless the parties, consistent with law, mutually agree otherwise, such procedures must be read as providing that all questions of arbitrability not otherwise resolved shall be submitted to arbitration. See Interpretation and Guidance, 2 FLRA 273, 278 n.7 (1979). Further, as stated by the Authority in Department of Labor, Employment Standards Administration/ Wage and Hour Division, Washington, D.C., 10 FLRA 316, 321 (1982), and reaffirmed here, "[w]hile nothing in the Statute precludes either party from invoking arbitration and proceeding ex parte if necessary, a refusal by the other party to participate in the 'procedures for the settlement of grievances, including questions of arbitrability' . . . conflicts with the requirements of section 7121." As found in the Department of Labor case, such a failure to comply with the requirements of section 7121 constitutes a violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8) of the Statute. See also Department of the Navy, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, New Hampshire, 11 FLRA 456 (1983), and Department of the Army, 83rd United States Army Command, Columbus, Ohio, 11 FLRA 55 (1983). Further, without deciding whether the result would have been different in this case if the Respondent had signified its willingness to be bound by and share the costs of the arbitrator's decision, the record contains no evidence that the Respondent notified the Union of any such intentions.

VI. Conclusion

The Authority has considered all the facts and circumstances of this case, including the positions of the parties. The Authority concludes that the Respondent's refusal to proceed to arbitration constituted a failure to comply with the requirements of section 7121 of the Statute in violation of section 7116(a)(1) and (8).

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Health Care Financing Administration shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Unilaterally refusing or failing to proceed to arbitration regarding a grievance filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, as the agent for the American Federation of Government

Employees, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, regarding the conversion of the functions of the Office of Direct Reimbursement (ODR) to the private sector, after receiving timely notice of the exclusive representative's desire to invoke arbitration.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, proceed to arbitration regarding the grievance filed by the American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1923, AFL-CIO, regarding the conversion of the functions of the Office of Direct Reimbursement (ODR) to the private sector.

(b) Post at its Headquarters facilities copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Administrator, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region III, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with it.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This case is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator John J. Graham filed by the Department of Commerce (the Agency) under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

The dispute before the Arbitrator concerned the preference to which permanent inspectors were entitled in assignments to foreign fishing vessels in the foreign fisheries observer program. According to the Agency, the program involves monitoring foreign fishing vessels in the United States fisheries conservation zone by placing fishery inspectors on the vessels. Beginning in 1983, the Agency has been required to place inspectors on all foreign fishing vessels in the zone. In order to meet requirements during peak fishing periods, the Agency employs inspectors on temporary appointments, in addition to its permanent inspectors. All of the inspectors, permanent and temporary, are assigned to vessels from a single deployment list or roster.

The parties in this dispute negotiated a provision, Article 2, in their collective bargaining agreement, which provides that "[w]here possible, management will give first preference for deployments and other duties to permanent inspectors." The Activity gave preference to the permanent inspectors only in initial assignments by placing their names at the top of the deployment roster at the beginning of the fishing season. After the permanent inspectors were initially assigned, however, the Activity did not give them any further preference in assignments. Rather, upon deployment, their names were placed at the bottom of the roster and they were not offered another assignment until all other inspectors had been assigned and their names again reached the top of the list. The Union essentially claimed that under Article 2 of the parties' agreement "first preference" meant that whenever permanent inspectors returned from an assignment, their names should be placed on the deployment roster ahead of temporary inspectors. The Arbitrator agreed with the Union's position. The Arbitrator found that management had demonstrated a policy of preference for temporary inspectors and that its deployment practice had adversely affected the income of permanent inspectors. As his award, the Arbitrator determined that management had violated Article 2 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement by refusing and failing to give first preference for deployments and other duties to permanent inspectors. Further, as a remedy, the Arbitrator directed the Activity to comply with the agreement and to provide restitution for all losses incurred by the permanent inspectors.

III. FIRST EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its first exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute. In support of this contention, the Agency argues that the Arbitrator's award interferes with management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine the personnel by which Agency operations will be conducted and to determine which employees will receive particular work assignments. The Agency further argues that the agreement provision interpreted by the Arbitrator is not a proper procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute since it is directly related to the exercise of management's right to assign inspectors to foreign fishing vessels.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

As relevant to the Agency's exception, section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. Encompassed within that right is the discretion to determine the particular employees to whom work will be assigned, Department of the Air Force, Carswell Air Force Base and American Federation of Government Employees, Local 1364, 19 FLRA No. 51, slip op. at 2 (1986), and the discretion to establish the particular qualifications and skills needed to perform the work to be done and to exercise judgment in determining whether a particular employee meets those qualifications. Laborers International Union of North America, AFL-CIO, Local 1276 and Veterans Administration, National Cemetery Office, San Francisco, California, 9 FLRA 703, 706 (1982). However, the Authority has expressly held that when two or more employees are equally qualified and capable of performing the work involved, the selection of any one of those employees to perform the work would be consistent with management's exercise of its discretion in accordance with section 7106(a). In these circumstances the procedure by which employees previously judged by management to be equally qualified will be selected to perform the work is negotiable under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute, and when negotiated by the parties is enforceable by grievance and arbitration. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, 18 FLRA No. 94 (1985). In this case, management exercised its right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute in determining that foreign fishing vessel observation work would be performed by fishery inspectors and in determining that both permanent and temporary inspectors were qualified to perform the work. Article 2 of the parties' agreement, as interpreted and applied by the Arbitrator, does not directly interfere with either determination in management's exercise of its right. As interpreted by the Arbitrator, Article 2 provides a procedure for the assignment of work to employees management has determined are qualified to perform the work, that is, that permanent inspectors be given first preference for all deployments, not just the initial deployments, by placing them ahead of temporary inspectors on the deployment roster when they return from an assignment. The Authority concludes that the Arbitrator simply enforced the procedure for deployments provided for in the parties' agreement. The Authority therefore concludes that the Agency has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to section 7106(a) of the Statute as alleged.

IV. SECOND EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

In its second exception, the Agency contends that the Arbitrator's award is contrary to the Back Pay Act, 5 U.S.C § 5596. In support of this contention, the Agency argues that even if it committed an unjustified personnel action in its scheduling of inspectors for deployments, there was no evidence that the scheduling practice caused any permanent employees to lose pay, other than the statements of two permanent inspectors that their income was less in the year the practice was initiated than the previous year, and no evidence that but for the scheduling practice, the permanent employees would not have suffered a reduction in pay.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In order for an award of backpay to be authorized by the Back Pay Act, the arbitrator must determine that the aggrieved employee was affected by an unjustified or unwarranted personnel action, that the personnel action directly resulted in the withdrawal or reduction of the grievant's pay, allowances or differentials, and that but for such action, the grievant otherwise would not have suffered the withdrawal or reduction. Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia and Tidewater Virginia Federal Employees Metal Trades Council, 21 FLRA No. 39 (1986). In this case, the Arbitrator determined that the Activity violated the parties' agreement by failing and refusing to give first preference for deployments and other duties to permanent inspectors. The Arbitrator also expressly found that management's scheduling practice adversely affected the income of permanent inspectors. The Arbitrator did not, however, specifically find that but for management's unwarranted action, the grievants would have been offered, would have accepted, would have worked, and would have been paid for any particular deployments. Compare Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service and National Treasury Employees Union, 13 FLRA 386 (1983) (In which case the arbitrator determined that backpay was necessary to compensate bargaining-unit inspectors for overtime pay lost as a result of the activity's unwarranted assignment practice and directed that the parties determine the amounts due individual employees. The agency filed an exception contending that the award was contrary to the Back Pay Act because there was no finding that the practice had directly resulted in the loss of overtime pay of specific inspectors. In denying the exception, the Authority concluded that the findings required by the Back Pay Act had been made because the arbitrator specifically determined that in every disputed instance of overtime being assigned in violation of personnel policy and the parties' collective bargaining agreement, bargaining-unit inspectors were available to perform such work. The Authority explained that in view of this finding, there was no additional requirement to identify specific employees.) In this case, the Arbitrator did not determine that there were any specific instances where permanent inspectors were available for deployment and management failed to give them preference for the assignment in violation of the parties' agreement. Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award of retroactive compensation for permanent inspectors is contrary to the Back Pay Act.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, for the above reasons, the Arbitrator's award is modified by striking the order of backpay for permanent inspectors.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 9, 1986.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator Joe H. Henderson filed by the Agency under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

On June 5, 1984, the grievant was issued a notice of decision suspending him for two days for failing to follow instructions of his supervisor. On June 21, 1984, the grievant filed with the Agency a formal complaint of discrimination because of race and reprisal. In the complaint the grievant alleged that he had been subjected to unwarranted disciplinary actions because he was black and as a reprisal for representing a former employee in a hearing on her complaint of discrimination. He claimed that his work had been subjected to greater scrutiny, that he had been unfairly counseled, and that he had been verbally harassed on a recurring basis. He also claimed that blacks, as a class, were subjected to disparate discipline and received fewer incentive awards. As corrective action, he sought written apologies from his supervisor and from the district director. On June 26, 1984, a grievance was filed on the grievant's behalf, and ultimately submitted to arbitration, contending that the grievant's suspension did not promote the efficiency of the service, but instead was motivated by personal animosity.

Before the Arbitrator, the Activity argued that the grievance was barred by section 7121(d) of the Statute*/ and the corresponding provision of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Specifically, the Activity maintained that by filing the formal complaint of discrimination and mentioning "unwarranted disciplinary actions," the grievant had raised the matter of his suspension under the statutory equal employment opportunity (EEO) complaint procedures. Consequently, the Activity argued that the raising of the matter of his suspension subsequently under the negotiated grievance procedure was precluded by section 7121 and the agreement which permit an employee to raise such a matter under the statutory EEO procedures or the negotiated grievance procedure, but not under both. The Arbitrator however determined that the "matter" raised under the negotiated grievance procedure was not the same "matter" that the grievant had raised under the statutory EEO procedures. Accordingly, the Arbitrator ruled on this basis that the grievance was not precluded. On the merits the Arbitrator set aside the suspension finding that it violated the parties' collective bargaining agreement.

III. EXCEPTION

A. Contentions

As its exception the Agency contends that the award is contrary to section 7121(d) of the Statute. The Agency's position is that the grievance was precluded because the grievant raised the matter of his suspension under the statutory EEO procedures prior to the filing of the grievance.

*/ Section 7121(d) pertinently provides:

> (d) An aggrieved employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under section 2302(b)(1) of this title which also falls under the coverage of the negotiated grievance procedure may raise the matter under a statutory procedure or the negotiated procedure, but not both. An employee shall be deemed to have exercised his option under this subsection to raise the the matter under either a statutory procedure or the negotiated procedure at such time as the employee timely initiates an action under applicable statutory procedure or timely files a grievance in writing, in accordance with the provisions of the parties' negotiated procedure, whichever event occurs first.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

Section 7121(d) effectively provides that when an employee affected by a prohibited personnel practice under section 2302(b)(1) has raised the matter under a statutory procedure, the matter subsequently may not be raised as a grievance. Thus, the elements of section 7121(d), both of which must attach in order for a grievance to be precluded, are: (1) the matter which is the subject of the grievance is the same matter which is the subject of the action initiated under the statutory procedure, and (2) such matter was earlier raised by the employee timely initiating an action under the statutory procedure.

In this case the Arbitrator ruled that the matter raised under the statutory EEO procedures was different from the matter of the grievant's suspension raised under the negotiated grievance procedure and that consequently the grievance was not precluded. The Authority concludes that the Agency fails to establish otherwise and that therefore no basis is provided for finding the award deficient. Specifically, the Authority finds contrary to the position of the Agency that with no express reference to the June 5th suspension and with no requested corrective action relating to that suspension in the grievant's EEO complaint, the matter which was the subject of the grievance is not the same as any of the matters which were the subject of the EEO complaint filed with the Agency.

V. DECISION

Accordingly, the Agency's exception is denied.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 9, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority pursuant to section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of two Union proposals. The Union presented these two proposals in response to the issuance of an Agency regulation which set forth procedures regarding the payment of travel and per diem expenses to employee union representatives. Among other things, the Agency regulation, issued in reaction to the Supreme Court's decision in Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms v. FLRA, 464 U.S. 89 (1983) (BATF), declared unenforceable any labor agreements providing for the payment of travel and per diem expenses to union representatives.

II. Union Proposals

[Union Proposal 1]

> NAAE requests to bargain to the full extent allowed by law, rule and regulation on Personnel Letter No. 711-10, payment of travel and per diem expenses for employees representing labor organizations.

[Union Proposal 2]

> In regard to NAAE's request to bargain on Personnel Letter No. 711-10, NAAE's initial proposal is that PPQ honor the letter and intent of the alleged current collective bargaining agreement provisions concerning payment of travel and per diem expenses for employees representing labor organizations until a new collective bargaining agreement is negotiated.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Union states that Union Proposal 1 is intended to request bargaining to the extent legally permissible over what it contends was the Agency's proposed change in the past practice of paying travel and per diem expenses for employee union representatives. Union Proposal 2 seeks to continue the past practice, as embodied in a collective bargaining agreement negotiated prior to the BATF decision, with respect to payment of travel and per diem. The Union describes this practice as recognizing an automatic right to travel and per diem for employee union representatives attending "official meetings."

Prior to 1981 the Union's name was Federal Plant Quarantine Inspectors' National Association (FPQINA). The Agency asserts that the Union has never filed a petition to change the name on its unit recognition or certification to reflect the 1981 change. Because there is no certification showing the Union, as currently named, as exclusive representative of the bargaining unit involved, the Agency argues that the Union lacks standing to file the petition in this case.

As to the merits of the proposals, the Agency contends that both lack sufficient specificity to comply with the conditions for review of negotiability issues which are set forth in the Statute and the Authority's Rules and Regulations. It also argues that both proposals conflict with an Agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. As to Proposal 2, the Agency argues that the contract provisions which the proposal seeks to continue are inconsistent with the Supreme Court's decision in BATF and, therefore, unenforceable. It contends that they are also inconsistent with the Travel Expense Act, the Federal Travel Regulations and a Comptroller General's decision, 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966), which limits payment of travel and per diem to employee union representatives to those situations where it has been determined that their travel is in the primary interest of the Government. The Agency asserts that this necessary determination can only be made on a case by case basis and unilaterally by management. The Agency also contends that travel and per diem is a matter specifically provided for by Federal statute and, consequently, is not a condition of employment under the Statute.

The Union did not file a response to the Agency's statement of position.

IV. Procedural Issues

A. Legal Standing of the Union

As to the Agency's argument that the Union's name does not correspond to that listed on the documents relating to its recognition as exclusive representative for the bargaining unit involved, the Authority finds that such a question should more appropriately be raised through representation procedures rather than negotiability procedures. Therefore, in this decision the Authority decides only the negotiability issues raised under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Statute. If it wishes, the Agency may pursue whatever question it has about the Union's status as exclusive representative by filing an appropriate representation petition. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2736 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters 379th Combat Support Group (SAC), Wurtsmith Air Force Base, Michigan, 14 FLRA 302 at 306, n. 6 (1984).

B. Lack of Specificity

Union Proposal 1 is nothing more than a general request to bargain over the Agency's Personnel Letter which articulated its policy concerning payment of travel and per diem to employee union representatives. This proposal is not sufficiently specific and delimited and does not meet the conditions for review set forth in section 2424.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3525 and United States Department of Justice, Board of Immigration Appeals, 10 FLRA 61 (1982) (Union Proposals 2-4). However, the Authority would like to note that it has previously rejected the Agency's argument that its Personnel Letter is not subject to bargaining because it is an agency-wide regulation for which a compelling need exists. The arguments presented in this case are identical to those presented in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of Federal Grain Inspection Locals and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service, 21 FLRA No. 21 (1986) petition for review filed sub nom. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1295 (D.C. Cir. May 21, 1986). The Agency's argument is rejected in this case for the same reasons that it was rejected in that case.

Union Proposal 2 is distinguishable from Union Proposal 1 in that it is sufficiently specific and delimited to meet the statutory and regulatory conditions for review. As contrasted with a general request for bargaining, it specifically proposes the continuation of previous practices as provided in the parties' agreement instead of the adoption of the new practices set forth in the Agency's Personnel Letter. The Agency's assertion that Union Proposal 2 is procedurally deficient is rejected. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1363 and Headquarters, U.S. Army Garrison, Yongsan, Korea, 4 FLRA 68 (1980), remanded as to other matters sub nom. Department of Defense, Department of the Army v. FLRA, 685 F.2d 641 (D.C. Cir. 1982).

V. Analysis and Conclusions as to Union Proposal 2

A. Conditions of Employment

In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986), the Authority rejected the same argument as that made here, namely, that a proposal relating to travel and per diem for employee union representatives did not concern conditions of employment. For the reasons expressed in that decision, the Authority finds that Union Proposal 2 does concern a condition of employment.

B. Inconsistent with Federal Law and Government-wide Rules and Regulations

As interpreted by the Comptroller General,[1] the Travel Expense Act and Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs) allow payment of otherwise proper travel and per diem expenses to employee union representatives when it has been determined that they have been incurred primarily in the interest of the Government. In Customs Service the Authority, noting that this determination was within the agency's discretion, found a proposal which effectively sought to negotiate over the exercise of that discretion within the duty to bargain. Contrary to the Agency's argument, the Authority finds that nothing in the Travel Expense Act, the FTRs or the Comptroller General's decision requires that this necessary determination be made only by management and only on a case by case basis. See Customs Service. However, the determination must be made in order for travel expenses to be paid from agency funds. Unlike the circumstances in Customs Service, where the union expressly stated that it was seeking to negotiate over this determination, there is nothing in the record of this case to show that Union Proposal 2 would allow for this determination to be made as a prerequisite to payment of any travel and per diem for travel relating to union activities. Rather, as described by the Union, this proposal appears to require payment of travel and per diem without regard to whether the statutory and regulatory requirements for payment, discussed in Customs Service, have been met.[2] Because the Authority cannot conclude that Union Proposal 2 would allow for compliance with the requirements of the Travel Expense Act and the FTRs, it finds the proposal is not consistent with Federal law and Government-wide rule or regulation.[3] It, therefore, is not within the duty to bargain.

[2] As noted in Customs Service, for a travel and per diem proposal to be found negotiable, it must also allow for compliance with the various other requirements of the Travel Expense Act and FTRs as well as the primary interest of the Government determination.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulation, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C. July 9, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This case comes before the Authority as the result of exceptions being filed by the U.S. Army Adjutant General Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri (Respondent) to the Administrative Law Judge's Decision in which she found that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (Statute). The General Counsel filed an opposition to Respondent's exceptions. The issue in this case involves whether the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by changing unilaterally and without notice, the established procedures by which the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 (AFGE) was allowed to utilize Respondent's photocopy machine and internal mail system.

II. Facts

AFGE is the exclusive representative of the employees of the Respondent. The AFGE and Respondent were parties to a collective bargaining agreement that was signed in 1981 and has since expired but whose established conditions of employment still remain in effect. From 1978 until May 30, 1984, four AFGE officers had access to the Respondent's copying facilities and internal mail system which they used on a daily basis for union business. The AFGE made use of these facilities pursuant to permission it had received from Respondent.

The record indicates that in the interest of security and pursuant to its management rights under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute to determine the internal security practices of the agency, on May 30, 1984, the Respondent moved the photocopy machine and internal mail system into a room with restricted access. AFGE was informed on May 31, 1984, that in order to use this facility, it would have to submit its mail to the mail and file clerk who would place it in the internal mail system; further to obtain copies, AFGE must place the material in an incoming box where it would be handled as soon as possible by the mail and file clerk. AFGE was not given prior notification of Respondent's intent to make these changes nor was it given any chance to give input on these changes. On May 31, 1984, upon learning of the changes, AFGE requested the Respondent to bargain about such changes but the request was ignored.

III. Judge's Determination

The Judge concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by changing the established procedures by which AFGE utilized the photocopy machine and internal mail system without providing adequate prior notice or an opportunity to bargain over the procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the exercise of such management rights. Applying the criteria set forth in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604, 606 (1982), the Judge found that a status quo ante remedy would be appropriate and ordered the Respondent to rescind its changes and bargain concerning the implementation procedures and the impact upon adversely affected employees of any changes proposed in the procedures by which AFGE may use the photocopy machine and the internal mail system.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent does not take exception to the Judge's finding that it violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute but only to the Judge's ordered status quo ante remedy. The Respondent argues that the status quo ante remedy which orders it to rescind the changes would interfere with its internal security and severely disrupt its operations, thus impairing the efficiency and effectiveness of such operations.

The General Counsel argues, in its opposition, that the status quo ante remedy is appropriate noting that Respondent introduced no evidence to substantiate its assertions that a return to the status quo would be time consuming, expensive and cumbersome.

V. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge, and noting the absence of exceptions, the Authority finds that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by changing the established procedures by which the AFGE utilized the photocopy machine and internal mail system, without providing AFGE with prior notice and an opportunity to bargain over the impact and implementation of the changes.

However in disagreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that the status quo ante order is not warranted. In this regard, the Authority notes that the Judge found and the parties agreed that the May 31, 1984 changes made by the Respondent were an exercise of its right to determine internal security practices under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.[1] In the Authority's view, where a management action is based on its right to determine internal security practices of the agency, greater weight must be given to the disruptive effect in applying the factors contained in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982). To require the Respondent to rescind the changes which involved Respondent's internal security would be by its very nature disruptive to Respondent's operation. Further, the Authority notes that Respondent's changes were not made willfully for the purpose of preventing AFGE from using the internal mail system and photocopy machine, but rather only changed the procedure by which AFGE could gain access to these facilities. Although it is true that the changes in procedures did make access more difficult, in the Authority's view, these problems would best be resolved through mutual give and take bargaining concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing the changes involved to the satisfaction of all parties.[2]

[1] Section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute provides in pertinent part, that:

> § 7106. Management rights
> (a) Subject to subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this chapter shall affect the authority of any management official of any agency--
> (1) to determine the . . . internal security practices of the agency[.]

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order only to the extent consistent with the above.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the U.S. Army Adjutant General, Publications Center, St. Louis, Missouri, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Instituting changes in the established procedures by which the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 uses official facilities, such as the photocopy machine and internal mail system, without giving adequate notice to Local 2761 and affording it the opportunity to negotiate concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing such changes and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute:

[2] See Veterans Administration, Central Office, Washington, D.C. and Veterans Administration Regional Office, Cleveland, Ohio, 20 FLRA No. 27 (1985) and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 19 FLRA No. 128 (1985).

(a) Notify the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761, the exclusive representative of its employees, of any intended changes in the procedures by which Local 2761 uses official facilities, such as the photocopy machine and the internal mail system, and upon request, negotiate concerning the procedures to be observed in implementing such changes and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such changes.

(b) Post at its St. Louis, Missouri facilities, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander of the U.S. Army Adjutant General Publications Center, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

Respondent

and Case No. 7-CA-1379

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF GOVERNMENT
EMPLOYEES, AFL-CIO, LOCAL 1974

Charging Party

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because the General Counsel filed exceptions to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. The Respondent filed an opposition to the exceptions. The complaint alleged that the Respondent, Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Denver, Colorado (Lowry AFB), violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by failing and refusing to negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1974 (Union) over certain Union collective bargaining proposals regarding implementation of the Respondent's proposed Job Performance Appraisal System (JPAS), and by the Respondent's implementation of the system on October 1, 1981.

II. Facts

The Respondent, by letter dated March 31, 1981, notified each of its employees' exclusive representatives at Lowry AFB, including the Charging Party, that its JPAS must be implemented by October 1, and invited comments regarding the impact and implementation of the JPAS. By letter dated April 14, the Union requested negotiations on the implementation of the JPAS. The parties' first bargaining session occurred on or about June 11, when the Union submitted proposals. During several subsequent meetings, the Respondent declared Union proposals Section 2 A through K and Section 4.b.2 nonnegotiable.

On September 15, the Respondent notified the Union of its intention to implement all the language that the parties had agreed to during negotiations plus Respondent's last best offer on all items over which the parties did not agree.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that because (1) the Union's proposals, considered as a whole, were incompatible or irreconcilable with Air Force Regulation (AFR) 40-452; (2) compelling need issues could not be adjudicated in an unfair labor practice proceeding; and (3) the Union did not first establish under section 7117(b) of the Statute that no compelling need exists for AFR 40-452, Respondent had no obligation to negotiate. Therefore, he recommended that the complaint be dismissed.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's findings that compelling need issues could not be adjudicated in an unfair labor practice proceeding; to the Judge's finding that the Union proposals were nonnegotiable; and to his conclusion that the complaint should be dismissed. The General Counsel also excepted to one of the Judge's credibility findings and to his ruling restricting participation at the hearing of one of the General Counsel's attorneys.

The Respondent, in its opposition to the General Counsel's exceptions, asserted that the Judge correctly found the Union proposals, considered as a whole, were incompatible or irreconcilable with AFR 40-452; that he correctly interpreted the Statute with regard to compelling need; that the Charging Party should have first pursued the compelling need issue under the provisions of section 7117(b) of the Statute; and that the Judge's credibility finding was supported by ample evidence. The Respondent also opposed the General Counsel's exception that the Judge erred in disqualifying one of the attorneys for the General Counsel at the hearing.

The Respondent further asserted that there is a compelling need for AFR 40-452 and that Union proposals 2.E-H and 4.b.2. are not otherwise negotiable as such proposals interfere with the Agency's rights to direct employees and assign work contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. The Respondent also argued that it cannot be found in violation of the Statute because it was required by law and Government-wide regulation to implement its JPAS on October 1.

V. Analysis

Both negotiability and compelling need arguments are raised by the parties as to the various proposals at issue. We will now address the negotiability of the proposals and where found negotiable, as appropriate, determine whether the proposals are incompatible or irreconcilable with AFR 40-452.

The Union proposals set out below prescribe and define rating levels of employee performance (Section 2.E. through 2.H., and Section 4.b.2.).

Section 2

For the purpose of this Article, the following definitions will apply:

> E. OUTSTANDING -- The employee has significantly exceeded the established performance standard. The rating is of exceptionally high quality. The employee's performance is beyond the requirements of the position.
> F. SATISFACTORY -- The employee has met the established standard. The employee requires an average degree of supervision and normal problems are satisfactorily solved. Assignments are complete and prepared as compared to the average employee.
> G. MARGINAL -- The employee has barely met the established standards while overall performance meets the requirements of the position. There are noted deficiencies with room for improvement and more direct supervision may have been required.
> H. UNACCEPTABLE -- The employee has failed to meet the established standards, one or more critical elements and has failed to complete assignments in an acceptable manner.

Section 4.b.2.

> 4.b.2. Overall Rating. The range of rating for overall performance shall be one of the four (4) ratings defined below [in actuality, defined in Union Proposal, Section 2.E. through 2.H., set forth above]. The overall rating shall be arrived at > considering the total performance of the employee by using only the rating elements as prescribed in Section 4 B [sic] 1 above and the definitions of the ratings below. The ratings are:

> (a) Outstanding
> (b) Satisfactory
> (c) Marginal
> (d) Unacceptable
> A rating other than (b) satisfactory shall be documented in writing and made part of the employee's personnel file. Each employee will be given a copy of the rating and any written documentation.

The Authority finds that these proposals are outside the duty to bargain since they would directly interfere with management's right to direct employees and assign work pursuant to section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. These proposals have the same effect as the Union proposal in American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, AFL-CIO, Council 26 and U.S. Department of Justice, 13 FLRA 578 (1984). In that case, the Authority determined that the proposal at issue, which would have established the levels of performance in individual job elements necessary to the achievement of a given overall rating and would have established the number of rating levels in the evaluation of an employee's performance, was nonnegotiable as it would have interfered with the exercise of management's rights to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. In the instant case, it appears the Union proposals would similarly prescribe the levels of performance that management must accept in evaluating an employee's overall performance as well as establish the number of rating levels to evaluate such performance. Thus, Union Proposals 2.E. through 2.H., and 4.b.2., for the reasons more fully set forth in the Authority's Department of Justice decision, above, likewise would directly interfere with management's right to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and are outside the duty to bargain.

Of the remaining Union proposals, 2.A. through 2.D., and 2.I. through 2.K., as set forth below, the Authority finds all negotiable except Section 2.B., the Union's definition of "critical element."

Section 2

For the purpose of this Article, the following definitions will apply:

A. A Job Element is any major component of an employee's job that has been included in the official position description which can be objectively measured.

B. A Critical Element is a job element which is of such importance that if it is not performed adequately, acceptable performance of the job as a whole is not possible.

C. A Non-Critical Element is a job element that is not critical, but is important enough to require measurements based on objective criteria.

D. A Performance Standard is a statement of objective requirements measuring various levels of achievement for critical and non-critical elements. All performance standards must be fair, equitable, objective, valid, reliable and job related.

I. WORK PLAN -- The written critical or non-critical elements identified in the major components of an employee's official position description and recorded on AF Form 1282.

J. PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL -- A comparison of an employee's accomplishment of assigned duties and responsibilities with management established performance standards.

K. TRAINING -- To improve performance and acquire new skills and to identify remedial or developmental training required for an employee to meet or exceed a specified performance standard.

The Respondent's essential argument that Union proposals Section 2.A., 2.B., 2.C., 2.D. and 2.I. are nonnegotiable derives from the Union's definition of "job element" in Section 2.A. which, it asserts, controls all the succeeding subsections, since the defined term, "job element," is incorporated in each of them. The Respondent contends the Union's definition of "job element" limits management to rating or appraising employee job performance on those job elements "included within the official position description" of the employee. It also contends that the Union's definition of "non-critical element" is incompatible with AFR 40-452 as it does not denote a consequence of failing to meet the described objective standard. The Authority finds Union proposal 2.A. and the related Union definitions negotiable since, taken together, they only subject management to the procedural requirement that the position description involved accurately reflect the work assigned.

These proposals are substantively identical to the proposal considered by the Authority in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2849 and Office of Personnel Management, New York Regional Office, 7 FLRA 571 (1982) (Union Proposal 1). In that case, the Authority concluded that under the proposal at issue, the right of the agency to direct employees and to assign work through establishing elements and standards remained unaffected, subject to the procedural requirement that the position description involved would accurately reflect the work assigned. Therefore, for the reasons set forth in AFGE, Local 2849, above, the referenced Union proposals in this case would not interfere with management's right to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute and therefore are within the duty to bargain. Similarly, such proposals are not inconsistent, i.e., incompatible or irreconcilable, with AFR 40-452 as the proposals in this case would only require the Activity to procedurally amend an employee's position description to achieve consistency with the duties assigned. The proposals therefore would not prevent management from rating or appraising employee job performance contrary to or inconsistent with AFR 40-452. Moreover, although the Respondent is correct that the Union's definition of "non-critical element" does not denote a consequence of failing to meet the described objective standard, in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 32 and Office of Personnel Management, Washington, D.C., 3 FLRA 784 (1980) (Union Proposals 2 and 3), the Authority held that the proposal there was not inconsistent with the regulatory definition merely because it was silent with respect to remedial action. The Authority found that in all cases involving remedial action, where the proposal is silent, the regulation would govern.

Union proposal 2.B. defines the term "critical element." The Judge concluded, based on his resolution of credibility, that the Union's intent was that critical elements should be "grade controlling." Thus, the Authority finds the proposal to be outside the duty to bargain under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. The Authority has held that a proposal which would require that the critical elements of a position be based only on grade controlling factors of a position is inconsistent with section 7106(a) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217 (1981) (Union Proposal 1) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70 (1981) (Union Proposal 1) enforced sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied, 103 S. Ct. 2085 (1983).

The Judge found that a determination of compelling need for an agency regulation could not be adjudicated in an unfair labor practice proceeding. Subsequent to the Judge's decision herein, the Authority decided to the contrary. See Defense Logistics Agency (Cameron Station, Virginia) et al., 12 FLRA 412 (1983), affirmed sub nom. Defense Logistics Agency et al. v. FLRA, 754 F.2d 1003 (D.C. Cir. 1985). But see also United States Army Engineer Center v. FLRA, 762 F.2d 409 (4th Cir. 1985), rehearing denied, reversing U.S. Army Engineer Center and Fort Belvoir, 13 FLRA 707 (1984). Based on the finding that the proposals in this case did not conflict with the regulation, the Authority finds it unnecessary to rule on whether a compelling need exists for AFR 40-452.

Finally, in the absence of exceptions to the Judge's determination that Union proposals Section 2.J., Performance Appraisal, and 2.K., Training, are negotiable, the Authority adopts that determination.

VI. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings.1/ The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings,[2] conclusions, and recommended Order as consistent with this decision.

Thus, having concluded that Union proposals Section 2.A., 2.C., 2.D., 2.I., 2.J. and 2.K. are negotiable, and are not incompatible or irreconcilable with AFR 40-452, the Authority concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute when it implemented its performance appraisal system on October 1, 1981, without having negotiated with the Union over those proposals. See Veterans Administration, Veterans Administration Regional Office (Buffalo, New York), 10 FLRA 167 (1982). The Authority further finds that the Respondent's need to implement by that date did not negate its obligation to bargain with the Union over the negotiable proposals because, absent indications to the contrary, it is the Authority's view that there was sufficient time to bargain between the Union's submission of its proposals on June 11, 1981, and implementation on October 1, 1981.

participation during the hearing of one of the General Counsel's attorneys on the basis of an appearance of a conflict of interest. Without passing on whether there was either a real or apparent conflict of interest, the Authority affirms the Judge's ruling as there has been no showing of prejudice caused by the ruling. In this regard, the Authority notes particularly that the attorney in question was permitted to remain at the hearing throughout the proceeding and to actively assist the other attorney for the General Counsel in presenting the General Counsel's case.

[2] The General Counsel excepted to one of the Judge's credibility findings. The demeanor of witnesses is a factor of consequence in resolving issues of credibility, and the Judge has had the advantage of observing the witnesses while they testified. The Authority will not overrule a Judge's resolution with respect to credibility unless a clear preponderance of all relevant evidence demonstrates such resolution was incorrect. The Authority has examined the record carefully, and finds no basis for reversing the Judge's credibility finding.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Rules and Regulations of the Federal Labor Relations Authority and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, it is hereby ordered that the Department of the Air Force, Lowry Air Force Base, Denver, Colorado, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1974, its employees' exclusive representative, over negotiable proposals found not to be inconsistent with AFR 40-452 regarding the Activity's Job Performance Appraisal System.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing any employee in the exercise of any rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request of the American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1974, the employees' exclusive representative, meet and negotiate with such representative concerning any proposal found to be negotiable regarding the Activity's Job Performance Appraisal System.

(b) Post at all of its facilities where bargaining unit employees are located, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Such forms shall be signed by the Commander, or his designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region VII, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply herewith.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegations contained in the complaint in Case No. 7-CA-1379 found not to have been sustained be, and hereby are, dismissed.

DECISION

I. STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This matter is before the Authority on an exception to the award of Arbitrator John P. Owen filed by the Activity under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

II. BACKGROUND AND ARBITRATOR'S AWARD

A grievance was filed and submitted to arbitration claiming that the performance by a general foreman of switching duties, which is work regularly performed by bargaining-unit employees, violated Article XXIII, Section 23.1 of the parties' collective bargaining agreement. Article XXIII, Section 23.1 pertinently provided that a general foreman shall not normally perform bargaining-unit work except in situations such as checking the work of others, training of employees, and when life or property is in danger and there are no other qualified persons available to do the work. The Arbitrator determined that the performance by the general foreman of the switching duties in dispute was clearly prohibited by the parties' agreement because none of the exceptions provided applied. Consequently, he ruled that the Activity had violated the agreement. In so ruling he rejected the Activity's argument that such a determination was inconsistent with management's right to assign work in accordance with section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute. He concluded in this respect that although the Statute reserves to management the right to assign work, "it does not prevent an Agency from voluntarily relinquishing that right under negotiated conditions." Accordingly, as his award, the Arbitrator sustained the grievance and directed that the Activity refrain from assigning bargaining-unit work to general foremen and nonbargaining-unit personnel except as provided in Article XXIII, Section 23.1 of the collective bargaining agreement.

III. EXCEPTION

In its exception the Activity contends that the award is deficient because the Arbitrator was not authorized to order the Activity to refrain from assigning bargaining-unit work to general foremen and other nonbargaining-unit personnel.

IV. ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

Contrary to the conclusion of the Arbitrator, the Authority has repeatedly indicated that management rights under section 7106(a) cannot be waived or relinquished through collective bargaining. See Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization and Federal Aviation Administration, 5 FLRA 763, 768 (1981). The Authority has consistently emphasized that the plain language of section 7106 provides that "nothing" in the Statute shall "affect the authority" of an agency to exercise the rights enumerated in that section. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1968 and Department of Transportation, Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, Massena, New York, 5 FLRA 70, 79 (1981), aff'd sub nom., AFGE Local 1968 v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 565 (D.C. Cir. 1982), cert. denied 461 U.S. 926 (1983). Thus, the Authority has specifically held that no arbitration award may interpret or enforce a collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly deny an agency the authority to exercise its rights under that section. 172d Infantry Brigade, Fort Richardson, Alaska and American Federation of Government Employees, Locals 1712, 1834 and 1949, 19 FLRA No. 71 (1985). Section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute, in particular, reserves to management officials the authority to assign work. In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Joint Council of Food Inspection Locals and Department of Agriculture, Food Safety and Quality Service, Washington, D.C., 9 FLRA 663 (1982), the Authority considered a proposal (proposal 1) which provided, in part, that management could not assign duties normally performed by employees in the bargaining unit to supervisors except in specific circumstances. The Authority found that this disputed portion of the proposal conflicted with management's right to assign work because it would improperly limit management's discretion to determine which personnel will receive particular work assignments.

In this case the Arbitrator directed that the Activity refrain from assigning bargaining-unit work to general foremen and other nonbargaining-unit personnel on the basis of his determination that the collective bargaining agreement prohibited such assignments. The Authority concludes that the Arbitrator's award is therefore deficient as contrary to section 7106(a)(2)(B) by interpreting and enforcing the collective bargaining agreement so as to improperly interfere with management's discretion to determine which personnel will receive particular work assignments. See 172d Infantry Brigade; Department of Transportation, Federal Railroad Administration, Alaska Railroad and United Transportation Union, 16 FLRA 582 (1984).

V. DECISION

For these reasons, the award is modified by striking the direction to the Activity pertaining to the assignment of bargaining-unit work.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 9, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON REMAND

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority pursuant to a remand from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. The question involved is whether "competitive areas" within an agency for reduction-in-force (RIF) purposes are within the duty to bargain under the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).

II. Background

In a previous decision in this case, American Federation of Government Employees, Local 32, AFL-CIO and Office of Personnel Management, 14 FLRA 754 (1984) (Local 32), the Authority held a Union proposal defining the competitive area to be used for RIF to be outside the duty to bargain. On review, the D.C. Circuit found an apparent inconsistency between this Authority finding and the Authority's finding in Association of Civilian Technicians, Pennsylvania State Council and Pennsylvania Army and Air National Guard, 14 FLRA 38 (1984) (ACT) that a proposed competitive area was within the duty to bargain. It remanded this case and another case with the same holding, National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 29 and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, 16 FLRA 75 (1984), and directed the Authority to address and resolve the apparent conflict between its Local 32 and ACT decisions. Local 32, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, 774 F.2d 498 (D.C. Cir. 1985).

III. Considerations of D.C. Circuit in Remanding Case

The D.C. Circuit highlighted four considerations in remanding this case to the Authority to resolve the apparent conflict between these two decisions:

A. The Authority had previously adhered to the principle that a proposal may be a mandatory subject of bargaining despite its effect on nonbargaining unit employees;

B. the Authority's decisions in these cases appear to be at odds with a familiar principle of private sector labor law that a proposal concerning terms and conditions of employment is within the duty to bargain despite its effects on third parties;

C. the agency involved in this case had previously bargained a similar provision defining competitive area; and

D. the Authority's attempt to distinguish the two cases was incomplete because it did not and could not state that the ACT proposal had no effect on nonbargaining unit employees.

IV. Analysis

A. The Authority's Analysis of Proposals Which Affect Employees Outside the Bargaining Unit

In the Federal as in the private sector, the statutory obligation to negotiate extends only to conditions of employment within the bargaining unit. Matters involving individuals outside the employment relationship normally are excluded.1/

In the Federal sector, laws and regulations sometimes require uniform treatment of employees based upon considerations such as fairness, equity and effective,

1/ See sections 7103(a)(12) and 7114(a)(1) of the Statute. For discussion of the private sector approach, see Allied Chemical and Alkali Workers v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 404 U.S. 157 (1971).

efficient administration of Government. As a result, some conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees may be inseparable from those of nonunit employees. The Authority has, in a number of instances, been presented with bargaining proposals regarding the conditions of employment of unit employees which also affect employees outside the unit. Proposals relating to RIF frequently have this result because controlling Government-wide regulations mandate uniform procedures. In such circumstances, the Authority has attempted to strike an appropriate balance between the right of the union to negotiate over the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees and the right of the agency to set the conditions of employment of nonbargaining unit employees; indeed, the requirement that they be set consistent with Government-wide rules and regulations. This approach is consistent with the analysis and discussion by the Supreme Court in its Allied Chemical decision where it noted that, "other considerations [besides the impact on the interests of bargaining unit employees] such as the effect on the employer's freedom to conduct its business, may be equally important." 404 U.S. 157, 180 n. 19 (1971). On the one hand, it is the Authority's view that the scope of bargaining would be unduly restricted by a rule limiting the bargaining obligation to negotiable proposals which have absolutely no effect on employees outside the bargaining unit. Therefore, it has not adopted such a rule. On the other hand, a rule requiring negotiations on proposals which actually establish conditions of employment of nonunit employees goes beyond the requirements of the Statute and might unduly impede the Agency in functioning effectively and efficiently. To balance these conflicting rights, the Authority has distinguished (1) permissively negotiable proposals which would affirmatively establish or define a condition of employment for nonunit employees or positions[2] from (2) mandatorily negotiable proposals which would affect conditions of employment of nonunit employees or positions only to a lesser degree.[3]

[3] See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Internal Revenue Service, 7 FLRA 275 (1981) (Proposal 2).

B. Departure from Private Sector Approach

The Authority is of course aware that the approach it has taken in administering the Statute differs somewhat from that adopted by the National Labor Relations Board. The Board focuses on whether a matter "vitally affects" terms and conditions of employment of unit employees in resolving questions concerning the scope of the duty to bargain in the private sector. See note 1, supra. Congress, however, did not intend to require that Federal sector labor relations be a mirror image of the private sector scheme. There is no indication in either the Statute itself or its legislative history that Congress intended the substantive case precedent of the National Labor Relations Board to apply in the Federal sector. There is indication, rather, that Congress perceived a need to accommodate circumstances present in Government which are different from those in the private sector. In section 7101, Congress stated its purpose in passing the Statute as "to establish procedures which are designed to meet the special needs of Government." Furthermore, that section mandates that the Statute be "interpreted in a manner consistent with the requirements of an effective and efficient Government."

Additionally, the Statute's antecedents are in the Executive Order program rather than the National Labor Relations Act. This was emphasized by Congress in passing section 7135(b) of the Statute which expressly provides for the continuation of policies, regulations, procedures and decisions which emanated under the Executive Order program, unless they are superseded by the Statute or by regulations or decisions issued under the Statute. The Authority's approach to dealing with proposals which affect employees outside the bargaining unit is congruent with previous Federal sector practice as contrasted with private sector practice.4/

4/ See, for example, Texas ANG Council of Locals, AFGE and State of Texas National Guard, 4 FLRC 154 (1976), in which a proposal concerning the filling of threshold supervisory positions was found to be outside the duty to bargain and Lodge 2424, IAM-AW and Kirk Army Hospital and Aberdeen Research and Development Center, Aberdeen, Md., 1 FLRC 526, 532-33 (1973), where a proposal which involved a procedure within which unit employees competed with outside applicants for jobs was found to be negotiable.

Under the Statute, in determining the negotiability of proposals which affect the conditions of employment of unit as well as non-unit employees, the Authority will balance the right of the union to negotiate over the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees and the right of the agency to set the conditions of employment of nonbargaining unit employees. In weighing the parties' respective rights, we will determine whether the nature and degree of the impact of the proposal is so intrinsically related to the working conditions of nonunit employees so as to invade the purview of other unit representatives or require the agency to act in a way that will have a significant effect on the rights of employees not represented by the union offering the disputed proposal. In such a case, management is not required to bargain. However, where the proposal has only a limited or indirect effect on the interests of employees outside the bargaining unit it will be subject to appropriate negotiations.

With respect to cases concerning competitive areas, no negotiability decision addressed whether competitive areas were within the duty to bargain. Two ULP decisions addressed issues relating to competitive areas, Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, Yuma Projects Office, Yuma, Arizona and Local 1487, NFFE, Blythe, California, 4 FLRC 486 (1976) and Department of the Army, U.S. Army Electronics Command, Fort Monmouth, New Jersey and Local 476, NFFE, 5 FLRC 579 (1977). Neither decision specifically addressed whether competitive areas were within the duty to bargain where an agency raised issues as to the effect on nonunit employees. The second case stated in a footnote that it was undisputed that establishment of competitive areas was negotiable. However, it was found that an agency had no obligation to bargain with a NFFE local over changes in competitive areas where the group of employees involved in the change were represented by a different labor organization, although NFFE represented certain employees assigned to and remaining in the affected competitive area. In that case, the bargaining obligations were determined by balancing among the respective interests of the agency, the different groups of employees, and the labor organizations which represent them; defining the obligation to bargain in this manner circumvented practical difficulties which would arise if the agency were required to negotiate separately and independently with each labor organization over the same change.

This approach is consistent with earlier Federal sector practice as well as with our considerations in previous Authority precedent and differs from private sector considerations inasmuch as the Authority will look to the effect of the proposal on nonunit employees and will not limit our examination to the interest of bargaining unit members.

C. Previous Bargaining by the Agency on a Similar Proposal

The Authority has never held that negotiating over competitive areas is prohibited. However, it has held that an agency is not obligated to bargain over proposals which directly determine conditions of employment of nonbargaining unit employees even though it can bargain over these matters if it chooses to do so. Therefore, under Authority precedent any agency could properly bargain over the definition of a competitive area which would include nonunit employees, as the Agency here apparently did in the past. Nonetheless, in the Federal as in the private sector, previous bargaining over a permissive matter would not prevent an agency negotiating a new agreement from changing its position and refusing to bargain over an elective subject. Where an agency, as here, raises the asserted issue as a bar to negotiations, the Authority will not order the parties to bargain because of their prior bargaining history.

D. The Authority's Holdings Concerning Competitive Areas in the Local 32 and ACT Cases

For the employees involved in the Local 32 case, as for most Federal employees, a RIF must be carried out in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM) pursuant to 5 U.S.C. §3502. These regulations establish a comprehensive system for determining which employees will be retained in the positions which remain in an agency undergoing a RIF. Within that system "competitive area" constitutes the basic geographic and organizational boundaries within which employees will compete for retention. The OPM regulations do not allow competitive area to be defined in terms of types of positions, as, for example, bargaining unit positions. Consequently, as a practical matter, most competitive areas which are established under OPM regulations will include both bargaining unit and nonunit positions and employees.[5]

In Local 32, the proposal would have defined the competitive area for RIF as the Washington Metropolitan Area. The Agency asserted and the Union did not dispute that the proposed competitive area would include nonbargaining unit employees. The Authority considered whether the nature and degree of the impact of the proposal was so intrinsically related to the working conditions of nonunit employees so as to directly determine and prescribe their conditions of employment. Our result was dictated by the fact that the disputed proposal, by defining the competitive area as the Washington Metropolitan Area, would undoubtedly include unit and nonunit employees. Acceptance of the Union's designation of competitive area would allow it to determine with whom nonunit employees would compete for retention rights in the event of a RIF and further allow it to prescribe the area in which the competition would take place. Since the Authority determined that under the Statute an agency has no duty to bargain with a union to establish the conditions of employment of nonbargaining unit employees, it held the proposed competitive area to be outside the Agency's obligation to bargain.

In its decision in ACT, in contrast, the Authority found the proposed competitive area to be within the Agency's duty to bargain. This finding was based upon circumstances viewed as being materially distinguishable from those present in the Local 32 case. The proposal in ACT essentially defined a competitive area for RIF limited to the bargaining unit. As previously mentioned, such a competitive area would not be consistent with the OPM regulations applicable in the Local 32 case. However, in the ACT case, as distinguished from Local 32, the bargaining unit consists of National Guard Technicians who are not subject to those OPM regulations. See 5 CFR 351.202(c)(5) (1986).

[5] Depending on organizational and geographic circumstances, a given competitive area could include three general categories of "nonunit" employees: (1) those ineligible for inclusion in bargaining units, such as supervisors, management officials, and employees engaged in Federal personnel work in other than a purely clerical capacity; (2) those employees who are eligible but unrepresented and (3) those employees of the same agency who are in other bargaining units represented by the same or different unions.

The proposal in ACT for that reason would have directly determined or defined the competitive area only for bargaining unit positions and employees. It also undeniably would have affected or influenced in a limited, indirect way the potential scope of any competitive area for nonbargaining unit employees by excluding them from the area negotiated for the bargaining unit. However, the proposal would not otherwise limit or prescribe a competitive area for those nonunit employees. Hence, it did not define or directly determine a condition of their employment.

In summary, the proposals in both the ACT and Local 32 cases would have directly determined the conditions of employment of bargaining unit employees. The critical difference between the proposals lies in the nature and degree of the impact they would have on nonunit employees. The competitive area proposed in ACT only affected conditions of employment of nonunit employees indirectly: it excluded them from the negotiated competitive area. The proposed competitive area in Local 32, in contrast, consistent with the requirements of applicable OPM regulations, encompassed nonbargaining unit employees in the negotiated competitive area. It directly determined, that is, prescribed, their competitive area.

Consistent with this analysis, in all cases since Local 32 dealing with competitive areas where an agency has objected to bargaining based upon the fact that a proposed competitive area would directly determine nonunit employees' conditions of employment, the Authority has held the proposals to be outside the mandatory obligation to bargain.

V. Conclusion

Because the proposal in Local 32 would directly determine conditions of employment for employees outside the bargaining unit, it is nonnegotiable.

DECISION AND ORDER ON MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

I. Statement of the Case

This matter is before the Authority based on the Respondent's Motion for Reconsideration in the above-cited case, filed in accordance with section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.*/ The Respondent also requested a stay of the Authority's decision. An opposition to the motion was filed by the General Counsel.

II. Background

On April 21, 1986, the Authority issued its decision in Immigration and Naturalization Service, 21 FLRA No. 47, in which it was determined that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by unilaterally discontinuing the issuance of blackjacks to detention officers without first notifying the Charging Party and affording it an opportunity to bargain over the procedures to be observed in implementing such change as well as on appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change. To remedy the unfair labor practice, the Authority ordered the Respondent, in part, to restore the practice of issuing blackjacks.

---

*/ Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in part, that a "party . . . who can establish . . . extraordinary circumstances . . . may move for reconsideration" of an Authority decision.

III. The Motion for Reconsideration

The Respondent bases its motion for reconsideration on four points: 1) the Authority relied on a fact which was not found by the Administrative Law Judge; 2) the failure of the Charging Party to submit impact and implementation proposals, as so requested by the Respondent following issuance of the Judge's remedial order has caused the Charging Party to forfeit a status quo ante remedy; 3) the Authority acted inconsistently in refusing to consider the propriety of issuing blackjacks to detention officers; and 4) the Authority improperly failed to consider the effect of a subsequently negotiated agreement on the status quo ante remedy.

The General Counsel argues that the Respondent's motion fails to establish extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration. As to the first point because the Authority's findings are well established by the record; as to the second point because it would have been premature for the Charging Party to have submitted proposals; and, as to the remaining points because they raise nothing not already considered by the Authority.

IV. Analysis on Reconsideration

In agreement with the General Counsel, the Authority finds that no extraordinary circumstances have been established which warrant reconsideration of the Authority's decision. More particularly with regard to the Respondent's assertion that the Authority relied on a fact not found by the Judge, the Authority, as a matter of course, relies on the entire record before it in exercising its statutory authority to resolve allegations of unfair labor practices. In this case, there was uncontroverted record testimony that detention officers retained possession of their previously issued blackjacks. It was upon such record evidence that the Authority relied in making its statement; we did not attribute that statement to the Judge, nor did we make any finding with regard to the continued use of blackjacks.

The Respondent next argues that the failure of the Charging Party to submit impact and implementation proposals after the Judge so ordered as a part of his recommended remedial order essentially constituted a waiver or forfeiture of any right to a status quo ante remedy. In its decision, the Authority found that the Respondent had failed to fulfill its statutory obligation of notifying the Charging Party and affording it an opportunity to bargain with respect to the change in the practice of issuing blackjacks. The status quo ante remedy was warranted based on this unlawful conduct. The Authority does not view the Respondent's solicitation of bargaining proposals after the Judge issued his decision, and while the Authority had exceptions to his decision before it, as a basis on which to conclude that a party has forfeited its right to a status quo ante remedy or that such a remedy is not warranted in this case. Rather, the Respondent is obligated to comply with the Authority's decision and its remedial order.

The Respondent in its third point asserts that the Authority's failure to address the propriety of the blackjack practice somehow should preclude it from granting a status quo ante remedy. On the contrary, the Authority was simply making the point that it would not pass judgment on or decide whether blackjacks should have been issued in the first place. However, the Authority did in fact consider the effect of such a remedy on the effectiveness and efficiency of the Respondent's operations. Thus, the Authority found that there was no evidence presented to indicate that reinstatement of the pre-existing practice would be disruptive of such operation. Additionally, the Respondent is now attempting to reintroduce the terms of a settlement agreement rendered in a separate proceeding. This matter, which the Respondent sought to introduce at an earlier stage of this unfair labor practice proceeding was not permitted in evidence by the Judge. Such ruling was not excepted to by the Respondent in accordance with the Authority's Rules and Regulations, and was affirmed by the Authority. The Respondent's present attempt to argue the applicability of the settlement agreement to the facts of this case is therefore not appropriate.

Finally, the Respondent asserts that the Authority should have considered the effect of a subsequently negotiated agreement on the status quo ante remedy. The Judge had rejected the Respondent's attempts to introduce evidence concerning such negotiations subsequent to the hearing in this matter. Again, no exception to that ruling, which was adopted by the Authority, was filed by the Respondent, and its attempt to attack that ruling by this motion is not appropriate.

V. Conclusion

After carefully considering the Respondent's Motion for Reconsideration and accompanying stay request, we find that no extraordinary circumstances have been established under section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations warranting a reconsideraion of the Authority's Decision and Order. Accordingly, we shall order that the motion be denied.

ORDER

IT IS ORDERED that the Motion for Reconsideration, including its accompanying request for a stay, of the Authority's Decision and Order in Immigration and Naturalization Service, 21 FLRA No. 47 (1986) be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

This matter is before the Authority pursuant to the Respondent's request for reconsideration of the Authority's Order of April 24, 1986, adopting, without precedential significance, pursuant to section 2423.29(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended (5 CFR § 2423.29(a) (1985)), the findings, conclusions, and recommendations in the Decision and Order of the Administrative Law Judge. The Authority's Order was based on its finding that no exceptions to the Decision and Order of the Administrative Law Judge in the subject case were filed with the Authority within the time limit for such filings. Exceptions to the Judge's Decision were due on or before April 16, 1986. However, the Respondent's exceptions were not filed until April 17, 1986.

In its request for reconsideration, the Respondent has asked for a waiver of the expired time limit for filing exceptions. In support of its request for waiver, the Respondent contends that one of its secretaries was instructed to call the Authority to determine the last possible date in which exceptions could be postmarked and still be timely. The secretary inadvertently called the Office of the Administrative Law Judges, wherein she was told by an employee in that office that the document could be postmarked April 16, 1986, and still be considered timely. The Authority employee acknowledges such a communication, but states that the Respondent caller described having to file a document with the Administrative Law Judge. It is the practice of the Judges to explain on the record that the due date for briefs means that they must be postmarked by the due date.

Sections 2429.17 and 2429.23(b) of the Rules and Regulations provide that in "extraordinary circumstances" the Authority may grant a request for reconsideration or waive an expired time limit, respectively. However, the reasons given by the Respondent for the Authority to take such actions do not constitute "extraordinary circumstances" within the meaning of the Authority's rules of procedure.

As was noted in the April 24, 1986 Order, the Administrative Law Judge's "Notice of Transmittal of Decision" stated that:

> "Any such exceptions must be filed on or before April 16, 1986, and addressed to:
> Federal Labor Relations Authority
> 500 C Street, SW., Docket Room 213
> Washington, D.C. 20424"

Moreover, the meaning of the Judge's instruction that, "Any such exceptions must be filed on or before April 16, 1986," is explained by section 2429.21 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, which provides in pertinent part:

> When this subchapter requires the filing of any paper, such document must be received by the Authority . . . before the close of business on the last day of the time limit, if any, for such filing . . . .

While the inadvertent communication mix-up is regrettable, based on all the facts and circumstances, noting particularly that the due date for filing the exceptions was clear from the Administrative Law Judge's "Notice of Transmittal of Decision", and from the controlling Rules and Regulations of the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Respondent has failed to establish the existence of "extraordinary circumstances" warranting reconsideration of the Authority's Order dated April 24, 1986. Accordingly, the Respondent's request for reconsideration is hereby denied.

ORDER DENYING MOTION FOR RECONSIDERATION

This case is before the Authority on a motion for reconsideration filed by the American Federation of Government Employees on March 6, 1986, seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Decision and Order of February 24, 1986, in the above-entitled matter. In that case, the Authority held that the Union's petition for review was untimely filed and dismissed the petition. A petition for review must be filed within 15 days from the date of service on the Union of an Agency allegation of nonnegotiability. Under established precedent, the Authority found that the parties' Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) of June 25, 1985, amounted to a written request by the Union for an allegation and a simultaneous written response by the Agency alleging the matter proposed to be nonnegotiable. Thus, under section 7117(c) of the Statute and section 2424.3 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, the Authority determined that the petition for review had to be filed no later than the close of business on July 10, 1985, fifteen days after the June 25, 1985 Memorandum of Understanding. It was not filed until October 28, 1985. Although the Union contended that its letter to the Agency of October 3, 1985, constituted a different request for a negotiability determination on a "modified" proposal which was presented during subsequent negotiations, such a contention, the Authority held, could not be sustained because the record clearly indicated that the proposal set forth in the October 3, 1985, request was merely a restatement of the original proposal which the Agency had declared nonnegotiable in the June 25, 1985, Memorandum of Understanding. In support of its motion for reconsideration, the Union argues that the Authority misinterpreted the parties' Memorandum of Understanding as a simultaneous Union request for an allegation and Agency response alleging the proposed matter nonnegotiable and that the proper course for the Authority was to have the matter submitted by the parties to arbitration for resolution.

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in part, that a party "who can establish . . . extraordinary circumstances . . . may move for reconsideration" of a decision of the Authority. The Authority concludes that the Union has not met this requirement. The arguments made in support of the motion for reconsideration simply state the Union's disagreement with the Authority's determination that the parties' MOU amounted to a written request by the Union for an allegation and a simultaneous written response by the Agency alleging the matter proposed to be nonnegotiable and that the petition was untimely because it was not filed within 15 days of the date of the MOU as required by the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Consequently, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances. Accordingly, IT IS ORDERED that the motion for reconsideration be, and it hereby is, denied.

ORDER DENYING REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION

The case is before the Authority on a request for reconsideration filed by the Union on May 13, 1986, seeking reconsideration of the Authority's Order of April 30, 1986, dismissing the Union's exceptions (21 FLRA No. 75 (1986)). For the reasons set forth below, the Union's request must be denied.

The Authority dismissed the Union's exceptions to the arbitrator's award on the basis that the exceptions were untimely. The Authority found that the arbitrator's award was dated March 18, 1986, and pursuant to section 7122(b) of the Statute, as amended,[1] and section 2425.1 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, as amended,[2] which amendments are applicable to exceptions filed on or after March 2, 1984, and under sections 2429.21 and 2429.22 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, which are also applicable to computation of time limit here involved, the exceptions had to be filed in the National Office of the Authority not later than the close of business on April 21, 1986. However, the exceptions were not filed with the Authority at its National Office until April 22, 1986. The Union had mailed the exceptions on April 14, 1986, to the Authority's San Francisco Regional Office. The San Francisco Regional Office received the exceptions on April 17, 1986, and forwarded them on April 18, 1986. However, they were not received by the Authority's National Office until April 22, 1986. Therefore, the exceptions were untimely filed.

[1] Section 7122(b) of the Statute was amended by the Civil Service Miscellaneous Amendments Act of 1983 (Pub. L. No. 98-224, § 4, 98 Stat. 47, 48 (1984)) to provide that the 30-day period for filing exceptions to an arbitrator's award begins on the date the award is served on the filing party.

In its request for reconsideration, the Union contends that it spoke with two attorneys in the Authority's San Francisco Regional Office concerning the procedures for filing exceptions to an arbitration award and that during these conversations, the attorneys failed to inform the Union that it must file its exceptions with the National Office of the Authority. In addition, the Union argues that it "is totally unfair to dismiss this case on such a minor technicality."

Section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, effective September 10, 1981, provides in pertinent part:

> After a final decision or order of the Authority has been issued, a party to the proceeding before the Authority who can establish in its moving papers extraordinary circumstances for so doing, may move for reconsideration of such final decision or order. The motion shall be filed within 10 days after service of the Authority's decision or order. . . .

The Union's argument does not demonstrate the existence of extraordinary circumstances within the meaning of section 2429.17 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. Under sections 2429.21 and 2429.24 of the Rules and Regulations, when a document is required to be filed with the Authority, the document must be received in the National Office of the Authority before the close of business on the last day of the prescribed time limit. See Bremerton Metal Trades Council, United Association, Local 631 and Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, 9 FLRA 1094 (1982); request for reconsideration denied June 24, 1982. While the Union did mail the exceptions on April 14, 1986, presumably in sufficient time to be timely received if properly addressed, exceptions to an arbitrator's award cannot be filed at a Regional Office. Since the inception of the Authority in 1979, applicable regulations have required that exceptions to arbitration awards filed with the Authority be filed at the National Office. See The Panama Canal Commission and Maritime Metal Trades Council, AFL-CIO, 21 FLRA No. 38, n.5 (1986); request for reconsideration denied April 16, 1986.

Accordingly, since the Union has failed to establish the existence of extraordinary circumstances warranting reconsideration of the Authority's decision, the Union's Request is hereby denied.

For the Authority.

DECISION

This matter is before the Authority on exceptions to the award of Arbitrator Edmund W. Schedler, Jr. filed by the Union under section 7122(a) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute and part 2425 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations.

Upon careful consideration of the entire record before the Authority, the Authority concludes that the Union has failed to establish that the Arbitrator's award is deficient on any of the grounds set forth in section 7122(a) of the Statute; that is, that the award is contrary to any law, rule, or regulation, or that the award is deficient on other grounds similar to those applied by Federal courts in private sector labor-management relations.

Accordingly, the Union's exceptions are denied.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal concerning travel and per diem is nonnegotiable. However, the agency's argument that the proposal does not involve conditions of employment was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986). Nevertheless, as the union specified that this proposal presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to whether certain of the statutory and regulatory requirements for payment, discussed in Customs Service, have been met, the Authority found the proposal to be inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations. (Alternative 1)

A proposal concerning travel and per diem is within the duty to bargain as it is within the agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. The Authority noted the agency did not cite any legal or regulatory provision which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is in the primary interest of the Government. Thus, the Authority does not read the Comptroller General decision in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) as requiring that the primary interest determination can only be made on a case-by-case basis. Rather, an agency may -- in the context of collective bargaining -- determine in advance that certain representational activity is within the primary interest of the Government. (Alternative 2)

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal concerning travel and per diem is nonnegotiable. However, the agency's argument that the proposal does not involve conditions of employment was summarily rejected by the Authority for the reasons set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986) appealed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. Mar. 27, 1986).

Although the union was given the normal opportunity under the Authority's Rules and Regulations to file a response to the contentions in the agency's statement of position, it specifically waived its right to do so. The union thereby failed to rebut the agency's interpretation that the proposal is not intended as a demand to negotiate the agency's determination of whether the payment of travel and per diem is in the primary interest of the government. Therefore, as the proposal thusly interpreted presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to whether the statutory and regulatory requirements for payment discussed in Customs Service have been met -- such as, 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) -- the Authority found the proposal to be inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations.

If the union's intent is different than that established in this case, then it may later revise its proposal to more accurately reflect its intent to make the proposal negotiable.

DIGEST NOTES

A proposal concerning tours of duty is nonnegotiable. The proposal locks-in the established schedules for tours of duties and as a result precludes the agency from making any changes in the tours of duty for whatever reason. The Authority found the proposal to be inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation -- 5 CFR 610.121. (proposal 1)

A proposal concerning overtime is negotiable. The Authority found the proposal concerns only which employee, among those in the bargaining unit to whom management has already assigned certain work, will be selected to peform such work in an overtime status when management determines that overtime is required. Thus, the proposal only concerns when such employees would perform the previously assigned duties of their positions. Moreover, contrary to the agency's argument, the Authority found 5 CFR 610.121 does not apply to this proposal because the proposal concerns the assignment of overtime and not the establishment of an employee's administrative workweek. (proposal 2)

Two proposals concerning the assignment of employees are negotiable. The Authority found the proposals do not mandate certain courses of action by the agency. The proposals only set forth a procedure under § 7106(b)(2) for the agency to consider employee requests for Saturday time off and for volunteering for temporary duty assignments related to the agency's exercise of its management rights under § 7106(a). Because of the discretionary nature of the proposals, the agency's argument that proposal 3 conflicts with 5 CFR Part 610 by establishing an employee's administrative workweek is not supported. (proposals 3 and 4)

The union made a general contention that all the proposals are within the duty to bargain pursuant to § 7106(b)(2) and (3). However, because proposal 1 is violative of 5 CFR 610.121, a Government-wide regulation, and as proposals 2-4 do not concern a violation of management rights, the Authority found it unnecessary to address the union's contention.

Absent the union's written request for the agency's allegation of nonnegotiability, the agency's allegation to the Federal Service Impasses Panel did not control calculating the timeliness of the union's petition for review before the Authority. The petition was timely from the date the agency responded to the union's written request for an allegation of nonnegotiability.

DIGEST NOTES

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority found that the agency did not violate § 7116(a)(1) and (5) by instituting a new facial hair policy without bargaining over the substance of the change. The union clearly and unmistakably waived its right to so bargain by agreeing to the terms of the parties' Master Labor Agreement (MLA).

However, the union did not waive its rights to bargain over the procedures that the agency would observe in exercising its authority with regard to the change in its facial hair policy for employees required to wear respirators in their work, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change. In this regard, the union submitted two negotiable proposals. Proposal 9 would merely require the agency to inform new employees hired into positions requiring the use of a respirator that they should not grow facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface area. Proposal 13 provides that management will not go beyond what it can legally do to require compliance; that is, the proposal simply provides that management cannot "harass" employees. Having found proposals 9 and 13 negotiable, the Authority concluded that the agency violated 7116(a)(1) and (5) by implementing its new facial hair policy while failing and refusing to negotiate with the union over such proposals. (proposals 9 and 13)

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority found that a _status quo ante_ remedy is not warranted after considering the various factors set forth in _Federal Correctional Institution_, 8 FLRA 604 (1982).

The Authority found all the remaining union proposals to be nonnegotiable.

Proposal 1 would delay the agency's implementation of the new facial hair policy until higher level management revised its regulations. However, the union waived its right in this respect when it agreed to the language in the MLA regarding compliance with OSHA standards. Specifically, the MLA requires compliance with Executive Order 12196, which directs agencies to assure prompt abatement of unsafe or unhealthy working conditions under the OSHA standards. Compliance in this regard is not preconditioned upon the promulgation of internal regulations by higher level management. (proposal 1)

Proposal 2, which seeks a National OSHA interpretation of 29 CFR 1910.134(e)(5)(i), and proposal 18, which states that the MLA would prevail if any conflict arose between "this agreement" and the MLA, do not relate to the impact or procedures for implementing the change. Also, proposals 3, 4, 5, and 6 dealing with the elimination of toxic chemicals, the use of other controls for a safe work environment and a limitation on the use of respirators, go beyond the impact or procedures for implementing the change in the facial hair policy. (proposals 2 through 6, and 18)

Proposals 7 and 8 set up a test that would leave to the employee's discretion rather than management's whether an employee could maintain facial hair. The proposals together would infringe on management's right to direct employees, assign work and determine the technology of performing work -- that is, the particular type of respirator which will be used -- and are otherwise inconsistent with the mandatory nature of the new policy that employees be clean shaven in the facepiece-to-face sealing area. (proposals 7 and 8)

Proposal 15 would reserve to the union the right to make additional proposals as more information became available regarding the use and safety of respirators. As the union did not submit a position rebutting the agency's argument, the Authority found the proposal conflicts with the MLA -- as interpreted by the agency without contradiction -- as to when proposals can be submitted with regard to proposed management changes. (proposal 15)

As to the remaining proposals, the Authority found they went to substance of the agency's new facial hair policy and, therefore, are not negotiable as the union waived its right to bargain on such substance by agreeing to the terms of the MLA. (proposals 10 through 12, 14, 16 and 17)

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority rejected the agency's argument that the union's petition for review is moot. It was found that the issue in a particular unfair labor practice case that had been before the Authority is different from the issue in the present case.

Certain agency employees are, in the course of their work, exposed to hazardous substances and must use respirators. These employees are subject to the medical surveillance or examination requirements set forth in the regulations of OSHA. Provision 1 is intended to prevent the agency from requiring that employees participate in such medical examinations and provides that employee participation will be voluntary. Provision 2 seeks to prevent the agency from having access to the results of those medical examinations.

Provision 1 is within the duty to bargain as it does not conflict with the Occupational Safety and Health Act (the Act), OSHA regulations, or an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. Accordingly, the agency head was ordered by the Authority to rescind his disapproval of the provision which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level. (provision 1)

Provision 2 is nonnegotiable. The Authority found that it interferes with the agency's obligation under the Act at 29 U.S.C. § 668 (a Federal law) and OSHA regulations at 29 CFR Part 910 (a Government-wide regulation) to maintain specified records. (provision 2)

As to certain specific regulations cited by the agency in support of its arguments, the Authority relied only on those particular regulations in making its determination. The Authority noting the voluminous standards or regulations that could be relevant to the case, stated that if other regulations are relevant to the circumstances of the case, then it is the responsibility of the parties to bring them to the Authority's attention.

As to new regulations that were in effect neither when the parties' agreement was executed, nor when the provisions were disapproved by the agency head, the Authority concluded that such new regulations could not be controlling in this case. The Authority determined that it would reserve judgment as to what, if any, relevance or impact the new regulations may have in cases arising after they went into effect.

DIGEST NOTES

The Authority adopted the Judge's findings and conclusions that the agency, by the conduct of certain supervisors, violated § 7116 (a)(1) and (5) by unilaterally implementing a quota system for rating employees under the Civilian Potential Appraisal System during the 1983 rating cycle, without giving the union notice of, and an opportunity to bargain over, procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the change.

The agency's limited exceptions concerned the Judge's denial of its motion to revoke two subpoenas, requested by the General Counsel, requiring an employee to appear at the Oklahoma City, Oklahoma and Macon, Georgia sites of the hearing. The Authority affirmed the Judge's finding that the evidence presented at the hearing at the time of the Judge's ruling demonstrates that the employee was a necessary witness, and therefore the Judge did not abuse his discretion as alleged by the agency. The Authority rejected the agency's contention that a "reasonableness" test be applied to the Judge's determination, noting that it has considered but rejected the application of such a standard to a determination, by an appropriate Authority agent, that an employee's participation in a particular Authority proceeding is necessary.

In connection with its exceptions, the agency requested the Authority to take official notice of certain evidence contained in an unfair labor practice case currently pending before the Authority. Noting that the rulings and determination of the Judge were based upon the evidence presented in the proceeding before him, the Authority denied the request.

The Authority denied the agency's motion to consolidate the subject case with another unfair labor practice case currently pending before the Authority. In the Authority's view, there is no basis for concluding that, at this stage of the proceeding, the consolidation of the subject case with the other case, which arose from unfair labor practice charges based upon different circumstances, would result in any savings in time and money to the parties or the Authority, or that such consolidation would result in a quicker disposition of these cases.

Two proposals that would effectively prohibit the agency from considering enrollment statistics as a factor in evaluating an instructor's performance are nonnegotiable as they would require the agency to negotiate concerning the identification of critical elements and content of performance standards in violation of management's rights under § 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to assign work and direct employees. (proposals 2 and 3)

A proposal that would delegate to employees the decision otherwise reserved to management whether a class section would be offered is nonnegotiable as it violates the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to determine the particular duties and work to be assigned. (proposal 4)

A proposal is nonnegotiable that would expressly prohibit the agency from assigning duties to an instructor that are not related to the instructor's position. The proposal violates the agency's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work. (proposal 5)

A proposal is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2) that merely requires the agency to provide a forum for discussing with employees the effect of hiring additional workers. The Authority found that discussions which have already taken place between the parties regarding the proposal have not rendered the proposal moot because the parties have not reached final agreement. (proposal 6)

A proposal is a negotiable procedure under § 7106(b)(2) that would not preclude management from assigning move-related duties to certain employees. The proposal merely would require that the agency provide any "necessary" assistance in the event of a move. The the agency retains the discretion to determine whether to move and what assistance, if any, is "necessary." The agency's contention that the proposal has been satisfied and is, therefore, moot, is not substantiated by the record. (proposal 7)

A proposal is negotiable that would require the agency to take "necessary" steps to protect employees and property within prescribed areas. The Authority found that the proposal leaves to the agency's sole discretion decisions as to what level of security satisfies the contractual standard "necessary." Thus, the proposal does not violate the agency's right under § 7106 (a)(1) to determine its internal security practices. (proposal 8)

Two proposals are nonnegotiable that would constitute an attempt to negotiate concerning the substance of the agency's decision whether and to what extent certain materials should be incorporated into the subject matter of each course and, consequently, into the corresponding position description. The Authority found the proposals would effectively require the agency to negotiate concerning the assignment of duties in violation of management's right under § 7106(a)(2)(B) to assign work. (proposals 9 and 10)

A proposal concerning tours of duty is nonnegotiable as it conflicts with the agency's election under § 7106(b)(1) not to bargain over its determination of the numbers, types, or grades of employees assigned to a tour of duty. While the language of the proposal did not explicitly relate to the numbers, types, and grades of employees, the proposal nevertheless was directly and integrally related to, so as to be determinative of, the numbers, types, or grades of employees assigned to tours of duty. DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of three alternative proposals presented by the Union involving the payment by the Agency of travel and per diem expenses to employees when engaged in representational activities.

II. Union Proposals

Alternative Proposal Number 1

During the term of the Agreements, the Agency will pay the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives participating on the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety Committees and in consultations and negotiations.

Alternative Proposal Number 2

(a) During the term of the Agreements, the participation of the NLRBU in the activities of the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety

Committees will be considered in the primary interest of the government by the Agency and the Agency will the pay the travel and per diem expenses of the NLRBU employee representatives serving on such committees.

(b) During the term of the Agreements, the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of the NLRBU employee representatives when they attend consultations or engage in negotiations will be considered in the primary interest of the government by the Agency and the Agency will pay such expenses.

Alternative Proposal Number 3

(a) During the term of the Agreements, when the Agency determines that the participation of the NLRBU in the scheduled activities of the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety Committees is in the primary interest of the government, the Agency will pay the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives serving on such committees.

(b) During the term of the Agreements, when the Agency determines that the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives participating in consultations or engaged in negotiations is in the primary interest of the government, the Agency will pay such expenses.

III. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, Alternative Number 1 seeks to obligate the Agency to pay the travel and per diem expenses of Union employee representatives located at the Agency's Washington, D.C. headquarters who by law and agreement are entitled to official time for the meetings referred to in the proposal. In presenting this Alternative, the Union states that it presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to the "primary interest test".[1] The Union states further that Alternative Number

[1] The "primary interest test" refers to the Comptroller General's decision, 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966), interpreting the provisions of the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq., that an agency is not precluded from making payment

2 is intended to apply only if Alternative Number 1 is determined to be nonnegotiable because a primary interest test must be made in order for travel and per diem expenses to be paid. Finally, Alternative Number 3 is intended to apply only if Alternative Numbers 1 and 2 are determined to be nonnegotiable because a primary interest test must be made and such a test is in the sole discretion of the Agency to make.

The Agency contends that all of the Alternatives are nonnegotiable because the reimbursement of Federal employees for travel expenses is a matter specifically provided for by statute and thus is not a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The Agency also contends that Alternative Number 1 is nonnegotiable because it disregards the primary interest test and thus conflicts with law and Government-wide rules and regulations, and that Alternative Number 2 is nonnegotiable because the determination of primary interest cannot be made bilaterally or in advance of actual situations.

IV. Analysis

A. "Conditions of Employment"

The Agency makes an essentially identical "conditions of employment" argument to that made by the agency in U.S. Customs Service (see fn. 1). The Authority rejected that argument in U.S. Customs Service and it is rejected here for the same reasons set forth in that case.

B. "Primary Interest Test"

It is well-established that a proposal which concerns a condition of employment is negotiable only where it does not of travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it serves the convenience of the agency or is otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. For a complete discussion of the negotiability of the payment of travel and per diem expenses, see the Authority's lead decision, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986).

otherwise conflict with applicable statutory and regulatory provisions. In terms of the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses, the Authority has determined that conformance with the requirements specified by the Comptroller General in administering and interpreting the Travel Expense Act is a necessary condition for finding that a proposal involving the payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances is negotiable. See U.S. Customs Service. The Comptroller General has stated that an agency is not precluded from making payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it serves the convenience of the agency or is otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). However, insofar as the Union specifies that Alternative Number 1 presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to the "primary interest test," the Authority agrees with the Agency's contention that this formulation of the proposal conflicts with law and Government-wide regulation.

As to the Agency's contention that Alternative Number 2 is nonnegotiable because the determination of primary interest cannot be made bilaterally or in advance of actual situations, the Authority must disagree. In U.S. Customs Service the Authority specifically found that determinations concerning whether to make payments for otherwise proper travel expenses and per diem allowances are within the discretionary administrative authority of an agency. Moreover, it is well-established that insofar as an agency has discretion regarding a matter affecting conditions of employment, it is obligated under the Statute to exercise that discretion through negotiations unless precluded by regulatory or statutory provisions. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747, 759-60 (1980). In this case, the Agency has not cited any legal or regulatory provision which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is in the primary interest of the Government.2/

2/ We do not read the Comptroller General decision in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) as requiring that the primary interest determination can only be made on a case-by-case basis. Rather, an agency may in the context of collective bargaining determine in advance that certain representational activity is within the primary interest of the Government.

While the Authority found in U.S. Customs Service that the determination that such payments are in the primary interest of the Government is a necessary (and itself bargainable) condition for the negotiability of proposals requiring the payment of travel and per diem expenses, a primary interest determination is not the only condition for finding such proposals negotiable. As previously mentioned, such proposals must also be in conformance with all other applicable regulatory and statutory provisions. In this case the Agency does not contend that Alternative Number 2 would conflict with, for example, the requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs) other than those relating to the determination of primary interest, or with any other applicable laws or regulations. The Authority notes that there is nothing in Alternative Number 2 or the submissions of the parties which indicates that its provisions are to be applied in any manner which is inconsistent with applicable legal and regulatory requirements. Alternative Number 2 would not require the Agency to use, for example, specific authorization procedures and practices relating to travel which conflicted with the FTRs. It would not foreclose individual determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of authorizing particular travel and expenses. Finally, to the extent that case-by-case determinations are required under law and regulation, this proposal would not be inconsistent with such procedures. See U.S. Customs Service.

The Union states that Alternative Number 3 is intended to apply only if Alternative Numbers 1 and 2 are determined to be nonnegotiable. Given the results of the foregoing analysis with respect to Alternative Number 2, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address further the negotiability of Alternative Number 3.

V. Conclusion

The Authority finds that all three alternative formulations of the Union proposal concern a condition of employment. Alternative Number 1 conflicts with law and Government-wide regulation, and, therefore, is outside the duty to bargain. Alternative Number 2 is within the Agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation. Therefore, it is within the duty to bargain.[3]

---

[3] In finding Alternative Number 2 within the duty to bargain the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Alternative Proposal Number 2. Furthermore, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Alternative Proposals 1 and 3 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUE

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) and concerns the following Union proposal which arose during the course of negotiations on ground rules for a new collective bargaining agreement between the parties:

> Travel and per diem will be granted only to those bargaining unit employees identified in accordance with this agreement whose official duty station is outside the Washington, D.C. commuting area. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday of the previous week, team members will be granted official time for preparation if he/she would normally be in a duty status. No per diem will be paid for preparation time. (Only the underscored portion is in dispute.)

II. Positions of the Parties

The Agency essentially contends that the proposal is outside the scope of bargaining because it does not concern conditions of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. In support of this contention it argues that the subject of travel expenses is specifically provided for by the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq. In addition, the Agency contends that the disputed part of the proposal is inconsistent with certain Comptroller General decisions interpreting and applying the Travel Expense Act.

The Union states that the intent of the disputed portion of the proposal is to provide its negotiators, who are employed in the bargaining unit throughout the country, travel and per diem expenses when they come to Washington D.C. to negotiate over a new collective bargaining agreement. The Union waived its right to file a response to the Agency's statement of position.

III. Analysis

Subsequent to the filings in this case the Authority issued its decision in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir., March 27, 1986). There the Authority rejected the agency's contention that the proposal in that case, which required the payment of travel and per diem expenses for employees serving as union negotiators, involved a matter specifically provided for by Federal statute so as to be excepted from the definition of conditions of employment. For the reasons and cases cited in U.S. Customs Service at 7-8, the Authority also rejects this same contention with respect to the present case. In addition, as we explained more fully in that decision, the Comptroller General, who administers and interprets the Travel Expense Act, has ruled that an agency is not precluded from making payment of otherwise proper travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it serves the convenience of the agency or is otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. See 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). The Authority found that determinations concerning whether to make such payments are within the discretionary administrative authority of an agency and that existing Authority precedent obligates an agency to exercise that discretion through negotiation unless precluded by regulatory or statutory provisions.

In U.S. Customs Service we relied upon the union's explanation that its proposal sought agreement as to what categories of union activities shall be construed to be in the primary interest of the Government. The union specifically stated that once a determination is made that an activity is in the primary interest of the Government, "of course, all the specific Travel Regulations apply." U.S. Customs Service at 7. This factor was crucial in our decision that the proposal in that case was negotiable because it was clear that the proposal was to be implemented in a manner consistent with governing statutory and regulatory requirements. For example, the proposal was not intended to require the agency to authorize either specific travel or expenses which did not comport with the regulatory requirements and restrictions stated in the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs). The proposal was not intended to, and could not, require the Agency to use specific authorization procedures and practices relating to actual travel which conflicted with the FTRs. It would not foreclose individual determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of authorizing particular travel and expenses. Moreover, to the extent that case-by-case determinations are required under law and regulation, the proposal would not be inconsistent with such procedures. On this basis, the Authority rejected the contention of the agency in that case that the proposal was inconsistent with Federal law and Government-wide regulations.

The language of the proposal in this case is similar to the one held negotiable in U.S. Customs Service. However, for the following reason the Authority must find this proposal outside the duty to bargain. In its statement of position, in addition to its other contentions, the Agency also states that the proposal cannot be read as a demand to negotiate its determination of whether the payment of travel and per diem is in the "primary interest" of the Government, the determination required by the Comptroller General in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). Although the Union was given the opportunities normally afforded parties in accordance with the Authority's Rules and Regulations, it specifically waived its right to file a response to the Agency's contentions. The Union thereby failed to rebut the Agency's interpretation that the proposal is not intended as a demand to negotiate the Agency's determination of whether the payment of travel and per diem is in the primary interest of the Government. Under these particular circumstances, the Authority is constrained to accept the Agency's interpretation as to the meaning of the proposal. If the Union's intent is different than established in the record of this case, then it may, of course, revise its proposal at an appropriate time to more accurately reflect its intent so as to render the proposal negotiable. See, for example, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, 21 FLRA No. 19 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1290 (D.C. Cir. May 19, 1986); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Council of Federal Grain Inspection Locals and U.S. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service, 21 FLRA No. 21 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of Agriculture, Federal Grain Inspection Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1295 (D.C. Cir. May 21, 1986).

IV. Conclusion

Based on the reasons and cases cited in U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), the Authority finds that the Union proposal concerns a condition of employment. However, based on the foregoing analysis, the Authority finds that the proposal is inconsistent with law and Government-wide regulations. Therefore, the proposal is outside the duty to bargain.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute).[1] It raises issues concerning the negotiability of four Union Proposals.[2]

[1] The Agency in its Response raises a question as to the timeliness of the Union's petition for review because it had already provided allegations of nonnegotiability to the Federal Service Impasses Panel prior to the Union's written request. In this case, however, in accordance with established precedent, the Authority finds that the Union's petition for review was timely from the date the Agency responded to the Union's written request for an allegation of nonnegotiability. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL-CIO, Local 121 and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Washington, D.C., 10 FLRA 198 (1982).

[2] With respect to additional Union Proposals 5, 6, and 7, the Union in its opposition withdrew those proposals from its appeal. They will not be considered further here.

II. Union Proposal 1

> Established schedules for tours of duty will remain in effect.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency's position is that the proposal seeking to maintain current tours of duty violates 5 CFR 610.121(b)(1) and (2), which requires the head of the Agency to "schedule an employee's regularly scheduled administrative workweek so that it corresponds with the employee's actual work requirements" and to "reschedule the employee's regularly scheduled administrative workweek" when it is known in advance that the actual work requirements for the ensuing week differ from the specific days and/or hours of the current workweek.

The Union asserts that the regulation quoted by the Agency does not establish a unilateral mandate for the Agency to establish the workweek. It further argues that any interpretation of the regulation giving the Agency the right to establish the workweek without negotiations is contrary to statute i.e., 5 U.S.C. § 6101, which is the statutory basis for the regulation. Moreover, the Union argues that 5 U.S.C. § 6101 provides the Agency discretion to establish workweeks, and a discretionary matter is within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The proposal locks in the established schedules for tours of duties and as a result precludes the Agency from making any changes in the tours of duty for whatever reason. The disputed proposal is to the same effect as Provision 1 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2484 and U.S. Army Garrison, Fort Detrick, Maryland, 17 FLRA 769 (1985), petition for review filed sub nom. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2484 v. FLRA, No. 85-1405 (D.C. Cir. July 3, 1985), which would have prevented a change in tours of duty unless advance notice of such change had been provided, and which the Authority found to be inconsistent with an applicable Government-wide regulation, 5 CFR 610.121. Based on the reasoning in U.S. Army Garrison, Fort Detrick, the Authority concludes that this proposal is likewise outside the duty to bargain.

III. Union Proposal 2

> The grader regularly assigned to service an applicant requiring overtime will have the primary responsibility of performing the necessary service during the week and on weekends.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts that the proposal conflicts with its right to assign employees and work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B), and with 5 CFR 610.121. The Union maintains that the proposal is negotiable because it is essentially the same as Proposal 1 in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Joint Council of Food Inspection Locals and Department of Agriculture, Food Safety and Quality Service, Washington, D.C., 9 FLRA 663 (1980).

B. Analysis and Conclusion

The Authority agrees with the Union's position. The proposal concerns only which employee among those in the bargaining unit to whom management has already assigned certain work will be selected to perform such work in an overtime status when management determines that overtime is required. As such, the proposal is essentially the same as the portion of Proposal 1 found negotiable in Food Safety and Quality Service, 9 FLRA 663 (1980). In that case, the Authority held a proposal that concerned which particular employee, among those in the bargaining unit to whom management in its discretion had already assigned certain work, will be selected to perform such work in an overtime status when management determines that overtime is required was negotiable. It reasoned that the proposal was concerned only with when such employees would perform the previously assigned duties of their positions. Moreover, contrary to the Agency's argument, 5 CFR 610.121 is inapplicable to the proposal in this case because the proposal concerns the assignment of overtime and not the establishment of an employee's administrative workweek. Therefore, for the reasons more fully set forth in Food Safety and Quality Service, 9 FLRA 663 (1980), the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 2 is within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

IV. Union Proposal 3

> Employees may be relieved for four (4) Saturdays per calendar year for any reason by requesting such relief in writing to the Main Station Supervisor at least ten (10) working days prior to the requested Saturday off.

Union Proposal 4

> Temporary duty assignments will be on a rotational basis. A list of the graders' names expected to be assigned to temporary duty assignments will be placed on the rotation schedule. When temporary duty assignments are needed, the assignments may also be exchanged with qualified volunteers. When there are no available volunteers to exchange TDY, the assigned grader will perform the assignment. Each GS-9, GS-7, and GS-5, when qualified must take his turn in relief assignments. A grader may not be relieved of his responsibility to take his turn at a relief assignment, except for compelling reasons of annual leave, medical reasons which preclude travel, or personal hardship and an exchange of assignment. [Only the underlined portion of the proposal is in dispute.]

A. Positions of the Parties

As to Union Proposal 3, the Agency contends that it requires the Agency to relieve employees from Saturday work on four occasions upon the employee's request and therefore conflicts with the right to assign work and employees under the Statute and with 5 CFR Part 610. In response, the Union asserts that the Agency is misreading Union Proposal 3, which does not require that employee requests be granted.

As to Union Proposal 4, the Agency maintains that its intent is to prevent the Agency from assigning any other meat grader to a location if a volunteer exists. The Agency therefore concludes that the proposal conflicts with management's right to assign employees under the Statute. The Agency also asserts that the proposal could result in an individual continually volunteering for the same plant assignment thus frustrating the Agency's rotation policy and resulting in possible conflicts of interests and conflicts in relationships with plant management. Therefore, the Agency asserts that the proposal conflicts with its right to determine its internal security practices pursuant to section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute. The Union, in response, states that the Agency has failed to comprehend the intent of the proposal. The Union asserts that the use of discretionary language, "assignments may be exchanged," does not interfere with and does not mandate the assignment of employees or work in violation of the Agency's rights under the Statute. The Union maintains that the proposal only provides for a procedure for the use of a pool of volunteers if the Agency chooses to use it.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The language of Proposals 3 and 4 and the Union's stated intent establish that the proposals are discretionary and do not mandate certain courses of action by the Agency. Under this interpretation, the Agency could disapprove 1) all employee requests for Saturday time off and 2) all utilization of volunteers for temporary duty assignments. The proposals only provide a procedure under section 7106(b)(2) for the Agency to consider employee requests for Saturday time off and for volunteering for temporary duty assignments related to the Agency's exercise of its management rights under section 7106(a) of the Statute. Also, because of the discretionary nature of the proposals, the Agency's argument that Union Proposal 3 conflicts with 5 CFR Part 610 by establishing an employee's administrative workweek is not supported. Therefore, the Authority concludes that Union Proposals 3 and 4 are within the duty to bargain under the Statute.

V. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request, or as otherwise agreed to by the parties, bargain concerning Union Proposals 2-4.[3] IT IS [4] The Union makes a general contention that the proposals are within the duty to bargain pursuant to section 7106(b)(2) and (3). Since Proposal 1 is violative of 5 CFR 610.121, a Government-wide regulation, and since proposals 2-4 do not concern a violation of management rights, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address the Union's contention regarding section 7106(b)(2) and (3).

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority on exceptions to the attached Administrative Law Judge's Decision filed by the Respondent and by the General Counsel. The complaint alleged that the Respondent, Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio (the Respondent or AFLC), violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by unilaterally implementing a new policy prohibiting those employees required to wear respirators from having facial hair while negotiations concerning the policy were being held and before impasse was reached in the negotiations.

II. Facts

The facts are not in dispute. The Respondent requested an interpretation of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) standard on respirator use and safety (29 C.F.R. 1910.134(e)(5)(i)) from the Dallas Regional Office of OSHA. The question was whether employees who are required to wear respirators in their work may have facial hair at the sealing surface. The OSHA Regional Office advised the Respondent that facial hair at the sealing surface of the respirator would constitute a violation of its standard. The Respondent then notified the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO (Union) by letter dated April 25, 1983, that the following policy would apply throughout the Agency:

> Any observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface will cause a fit-test failure and the employee can be directed to shave in the sealing area. When the employee has shaven, he will be re-fit-tested to determine when a safe seal is achieved.

The old policy permitted employees who were required to use respirators in their work to have facial hair as long as it would not interfere with the respirator sealing surface as determined by the Respondent during a respirator fit test. The letter stated that the change was necessary because the Respondent was anticipating a change in an Air Force Regulation, AFOSH Std. 161-1, Respiratory Protection Program, and because of OSHA's interpretation of 29 CFR 1910.134. The letter announced the Respondent's intention to implement the policy as of May 27, 1983, and invited the Union to negotiate concerning the "impact/implementation" of this policy.

The Union submitted proposals regarding the change on May 10, 1983. (The proposals are set forth in the attached Appendix). On May 26, the Respondent sent the Union a letter which said, "We regret that you have chosen to submit proposals that are, taken as a whole, beyond the realm of reasonableness." It went on to say that due to the overriding exigency of a safe and healthful workplace, the policy would be implemented throughout AFLC on May 27, 1983.

Despite the May 26 letter, the parties met on May 27 to negotiate. After that date the parties did not meet again, and on July 8, 1983, the Respondent informed the Union that the Union's proposals submitted on May 10 were nonnegotiable because they were not "valid impact and implementation proposals," and that they either directly conflicted with the Respondent's new policy or did not relate to it. It is uncontested that the Respondent ordered implementation of the new facial hair policy at seven bases within AFLC on May 27, 1983. Time and method of implementation varied among the bases.

III. Administrative Law Judge's Decision

The Judge found that the Respondent was not obliged to negotiate over the substance of the change in the facial hair policy because the Union had waived its rights by agreeing in the parties' June 28, 1982 Master Labor Agreement (MLA) to language which required the Respondent to comply with Executive Order 12196 as implemented by the Department of Defense (DOD), which required agencies to follow OSHA standards unless the agency secured approval from the Secretary of Labor for the use of an alternative standard. In the instant situation, no alternative standard was sought or approved.

The Judge found further that the Respondent, even where privileged to make a change in working conditions, is still obliged to negotiate concerning the impact and procedures for implementing such change. He concluded that the Respondent here did not fulfill this obligation, finding that certain of the Union's proposals dealt with the impact on employees and the procedures for implementing the change. The Judge therefore concluded that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute and recommended that it be ordered to cease and desist from such conduct and to take certain affirmative action. The Judge did not order a _status quo ante_ remedy as requested by the General Counsel.

IV. Positions of the Parties

The Respondent excepted to the Judge's finding of a violation, asserting that its change in the established facial hair policy did not constitute a unilateral change in conditions of employment because the Union already had negotiated concerning this matter and because the Respondent was merely complying with the collective bargaining agreement. The Respondent contended that, by agreeing to the language in the MLA, the Union had agreed to the application of OSHA standards which included the imposition of the new standard. Further, the Respondent contended that the Union's proposals sought to make implementation of the new policy voluntary or otherwise constituted proposals unrelated to the impact and implementation of the change.

The General Counsel excepted to the Judge's conclusion that the Union had waived its right to bargain concerning the substance of the change in policy, and also excepted to the Judge's denial of a _status quo ante_ remedy for the impact and implementation violation.

V. Analysis

In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that the Respondent did not violate section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by instituting the new facial hair policy without bargaining over the substance of the change. Thus, as the Judge found, the Union clearly and unmistakably waived its right to do so by agreeing to the terms of the MLA. The Authority further finds, however, that there was no clear and unmistakable waiver of the Union's right to bargain over the procedures which the Respondent would observe in exercising its authority with regard to the change in its facial hair policy for employees required to wear respirators in their work and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change. See U.S. Department of Labor, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Chicago, Illinois, 19 FLRA No. 60 (1985). In this regard, the Authority finds that certain proposals submitted by the Union concerned the procedures which the Respondent would observe in exercising its authority with regard to changing its facial hair policy, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change. Thus, we conclude that the Respondent violated the Statute when it implemented the change in its facial hair policy without negotiating with the Union concerning such procedures and appropriate arrangements.

Turning to the specific Union proposals, the Authority finds that proposals 9 and 13 are negotiable. Proposal 9 would merely require the Respondent to inform new employees hired into positions requiring the use of a respirator that they should not grow facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface area. The Respondent admitted that this is not in conflict with the MLA which already obligates it to train and advise new employees on the proper use of respirators. Proposal 13 states that "supervisors will not harass employees in any way in connection with facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface." The proposal does not infringe on management's right to direct or require employees to comply with the new facial hair policy. Nor does it prevent management from acting to enforce such policy. The proposal simply provides that management will not go beyond what it can legally do to require compliance, that is, the proposal simply provides that management cannot "harass" employees.

The Authority finds that Union proposal 1, which would delay the Respondent's implementation of the new facial hair policy until higher level management (the Air Force) revised its regulations, is not negotiable. On its face, such proposal appears to be a negotiable procedure. However, when it agreed to the language in the MLA regarding compliance with OSHA standards, the Union waived its right in this respect. Specifically, the MLA requires compliance with Executive Order 12196 which directs agencies to assure prompt abatement of unsafe or unhealthy working conditions under the OSHA standards. Compliance in this regard is not preconditioned upon the promulgation of internal regulations by the Air Force. Accordingly, there was no duty to bargain over this proposal.

The Authority finds Union proposal 2 which seeks a National OSHA interpretation of 29 CFR 1910.134(e)(5)(i) and Union proposal 18 which states that the MLA would prevail if any conflict arose between this agreement and the MLA, are nonnegotiable because the intent of these proposals, as they relate to the change, is not evident on their face. Standing alone, they do not relate to the impact or procedures for implementing the change. The Authority finds also that Union proposals 3, 4, 5 and 6 dealing with the elimination of toxic chemicals, the use of other controls for a safe work environment and a limitation on the use of respirators, are nonnegotiable as they go beyond the impact or procedures for implementing the change in the facial hair policy.

The Authority finds that Union proposals 7 and 8 also are nonnegotiable. Union proposals 7 and 8 provide:

> 7. AFLC agrees to provide employees with facial hair an appropriate respirator which allows them to maintain facial hair of their preference.
> 8. AFLC agrees that if an employee with facial hair of his preference cannot be test-fitted with an appropriate respirator (including full mask, helmet, etc.), he will be reassigned to another suitable position of like pay, grade, and benefits so as not to discriminate against employees who elect to have facial hair.

It is concluded that they are nonnegotiable because they set up a test which would leave to the employee's discretion rather than management's whether an employee could maintain facial hair. If the employee decides to keep his facial hair, these proposals would require management to find an appropriate respirator so the employee could continue to work on his assigned job, or if an appropriate respirator cannot be found, the employee would be reassigned to another suitable position without the loss of any benefits or pay. Taken together, these proposals would infringe on management's right to direct employees, assign work and determine the technology of performing work, that is, the particular type of respirator which will be used, and are otherwise inconsistent with the mandatory nature of the new policy that employees be clean shaven in the facepiece-to-face sealing area. See National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1624 and Air Force Contract Management Division, Hagerstown, Maryland, 3 FLRA 142 (1980) and National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 943 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters Keesler Technical Training Center, Keesler Air Force Base, Mississippi, 19 FLRA No. 113 (1985) (Union Proposal 2).

Union proposal 15 would reserve to the Union the right to make additional proposals as more information became available regarding the use and safety of respirators. The Respondent argued that the proposal conflicts with the MLA as to when proposals can be submitted with regard to proposed management changes. The Union did not submit a position as to whether the Respondent's stated position was correct. Therefore, the Authority will find this proposal is nonnegotiable because it conflicts with the parties' MLA as interpreted by the Respondent without contradiction.

As to the remaining Union proposals, 10 through 12, 14, 16 and 17, the Authority finds these proposals, the collective intent of which clearly was to make the implementation of the new facial hair policy voluntary, are nonnegotiable as they are directed toward changing the policy. The Authority finds that these proposals go to the substance of the policy and, as previously noted, are not negotiable as the Union waived its right in this respect.

VI. Remedy

The Judge did not grant a status quo ante remedy as requested by the General Counsel. In agreement with the Judge, the Authority finds that such a remedy is not warranted. Thus, balancing the nature and circumstances of the bargaining violation against the degree of disruption in the efficiency and effectiveness of the Respondent's operations that would be caused by such a remedy, and taking into consideration the various factors set forth in Federal Correctional Institution, 8 FLRA 604 (1982), the Authority concludes that such a remedy would not effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute. Thus, the Authority notes that the Respondent gave the Union prior notice of its intent to implement the new facial hair policy and invited the Union to bargain concerning its impact and implementation; that the parties met to discuss the Union's proposals; that the Respondent's conduct does not appear willful; and that the General Counsel has not demonstrated the nature and extent of the impact of the new policy on unit employees. Also, it appears that a return to the old policy would be disruptive to the efficiency and effectiveness of the Respondent's operation, as the Respondent implemented the new policy to conform with OSHA standards relating to the protection, safety and health of employees required to use respirators in their work. Under these circumstances, and where the Respondent acted to abate what it perceived as an unsafe and unhealthy situation for employees, the Authority finds that a return to the pre-existing policy would not promote an efficient and effective government.

VII. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. The Authority has considered the Judge's Decision, the positions of the parties and the entire record, and adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions, and recommended Order as modified by this decision.

Therefore, having found Union proposals 9 and 13 negotiable, the Authority concludes that the Respondent violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Statute by implementing its new facial hair policy while failing and refusing to negotiate over such proposals with the Union.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority hereby orders that the Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Failing and refusing to meet and negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, over negotiable proposals with respect to the procedures which it will observe in exercising its authority with regard to changes in its facial hair policy for employees required to wear respirators in their work and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such change.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Upon request, meet and negotiate with the American Federation of Government Employees, Council 214, AFL-CIO, the employees' exclusive representative, concerning any proposal found negotiable herein, submitted in connection with the Respondent's change in its facial hair policy for employees required to wear respirators in their work.

(b) Post at all of its facilities where bargaining unit employees are located copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms they shall be signed by the Commanding Officer, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter, in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to ensure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(c) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with the Order.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the allegation of the complaint in Case No. 5-CA-30334 relating to the Respondent's refusal to negotiate over those proposals found nonnegotiable be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 10, 1986.

APPENDIX

Memorandum of Agreement on Facial Hair in the Facepiece-to-Face Sealing Surface

1. AFLC agrees to delay its proposal of 25 April 1983 concerning the above until after HQ USAF, AFMSC/SGPA has changed AFOSH Std 161-1 Respiratory Protection Program in accordance with the Statute.

2. AFLC agrees to jointly request with AFGE Council 214 the National OSHA position in regard to their interpretation of Title 29, Section 1910.134(e)(5)(i).

3. AFLC agrees to provide AFGE Council 214 a target date when it expects to eliminate, exhaust or enclose all toxic chemicals; thereby eliminating the need or requirement for respirators.

4. AFLC agrees that respirators will be used only when engineering, work practice, or administrative controls are not feasible and as a temporary control for the time it takes to put any other control(s) into use.

5. AFLC agrees to provide AFGE Council 214 with a copy of the report(s) derived from item 4 above as required under Section 1910.1000, Subsection e, page 632 of Title 29.

6. AFLC agrees that respirators will be used only for Respiratory Hazard Task/Area(s), and their use will be in accordance with appropriate directives.

7. AFLC agrees to provide employees with facial hair an appropriate respirator which allows them to maintain facial hair of their preference.

8. AFLC agrees that if an employee with facial hair of his preference cannot be test-fitted with an appropriate respirator (including full mask, helmet, etc.), he will be reassigned to another suitable position of like pay, grade, and benefits so as not to discriminate against employees who elect to have facial hair.

9. AFLC agrees that new employees hired into a position requiring the use of a respirator will be informed that if they decide to grow facial hair, it should not be in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface.

10. AFLC agrees that no employee will be directed to shave any observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface.

11. AFLC agrees that employees with observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface and voluntarily agree to shave will be allowed to do so on official time.

12. AFLC agrees to provide employees razor blades, shaving kits, soaps, water, etc. of their choice so they may voluntarily shave any observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface on official time.

13. AFLC agrees that supervisors will not harass employees in any way in connection with facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface.

14. AFLC agrees to provide adequate training and guidance to all employees required to wear respirators with observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing surface including the hazards of a fit-test failure.

15. AFGE Council 214 reserves the right to make additional proposals as more information becomes available and deemed appropriate.

16. AFLC agrees that in those areas where the report(s), item 5 above, indicate feasibility, limiting the exposure period to safe levels will be allowed to all employees with observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing area.

17. AFLC agrees that in those areas where the report(s), item 5 above, indicate feasibility, facial grease or vaseline will be allowed to all employees with observable facial hair in the facepiece-to-face sealing area.

18. It is understood and agreed that no rights the employees, Union, or Employer have under the Master Labor Agreement (MLA) or Statute are waived by this agreement. If any conflicts arise between the MLA and this agreement, the MLA will prevail and is enforceable.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case is before the Authority because of an appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(D) and (E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It presents issues concerning the negotiability of two provisions of a negotiated agreement which were disapproved by the Agency head pursuant to section 7114(c) of the Statute.

These provisions had been negotiated as a substitute for language which the parties had been ordered to adopt pursuant to a Decision and Order issued by the Federal Service Impasses Panel. Department of the Army, Kansas City District Corps of Engineers, Kansas City, Missouri and Local 29, National Federation of Federal Employees, 82 FSIP 145 (1983).

The provisions which were disapproved and are in dispute are as follows:

> Employees must be provided with the following notification when participating in the Occupational Health Program:

(Provision 1)

(1) Participation is strictly voluntary, (no official request to participate will be made);

(2) Completion of any questionnaire or of any particular question is entirely optional on the part of each individual employee;

(Provision 2)

(3) The collecting, processing and final disposition of medical specimens and information will be safeguarded to insure that only the employee and the employee's physician are apprised of the results via professional medical channels, and that no individual employee medical findings resulting from such services will be made available to agency personnel, management or supervisory officials.

[Only the underlined portions were disapproved and, hence, are in dispute.]

II. Background

The dispute in this case relates to medical examinations which agencies must make available to employees in health hazardous occupations under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 (the Act), Executive Order No. 12196 (1980)1/ as amended by E.O. 1223 (1980) and Occupational Safety and Health Administration (OSHA) regulations. The Act essentially authorizes the Secretary of Labor to issue occupational safety and health standards which, among other things, prescribe the type and frequency of medical examinations which employers are to make available to employees occupationally exposed to health hazards. 29 U.S.C. § 655. Those standards are set forth at 29 CFR Part 1910 (1985). Certain Agency employees are, in the course of

---

1/ Executive Order No. 12196, Occupational Safety and Health Programs for Federal Employees, implements many of the provisions of 29 U.S.C. § 668, a portion of the Act which specifically applies to the Federal sector. As to how the provisions of the Act and the OSHA regulations apply to the Federal sector, see 29 U.S.C. § 668, Executive Order No. 12196 and 29 CFR Part 1960 (1985).

their work, exposed to hazardous substances and must use respirators. These employees are subject to the medical surveillance or examination requirements set forth in the OSHA standards.

Provision 1 is intended to prevent the Agency from requiring that employees participate in such medical examinations and provides that employee participation will be voluntary. Provision 2 seeks to prevent the Agency from having access to the results of those medical examinations. In resolving issues raised as to the negotiability of these provisions, the Authority sought an advisory opinion from the Department of Labor on its interpretation of OSHA regulations relevant to the parties' dispute. The Authority's decision here is consistent with that opinion which is attached to this decision as an Appendix. The parties were given an opportunity to present comments on the Department of Labor response; however neither did so.

III. Positions of the Parties

The Agency makes the same arguments regarding both provisions. Briefly, they are as follows:

1) The petition is moot;

2) the provisions conflict with Federal statute, specifically, the Act;

3) the provisions conflict with Government-wide rule or regulations, specifically, the OSHA Standards issued by the Secretary of Labor; and

4) the provisions conflict with agency regulations for which a compelling need exists, specifically, Department of Defense Instruction 6055.5 and Army Regulation 40-5.

The Union contends that its petition is not moot. As to the provisions themselves, the Union contends that they are consistent with law and regulations. In response to the Agency's compelling need argument, the Union asserts that the regulations cited by the Agency do not meet the Authority's compelling need criteria.

IV. Analysis

A. Question of Mootness

The Agency contends that the Union's petition for review in this case is moot because the issues involved have also been raised in an unfair labor practice (ULP) charge. A decision has been issued in that case. U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Kansas City District, Kansas City, Missouri, 16 FLRA 456 (1984). The Authority finds that the issue addressed in that decision is different from the issue presented in this case. In the ULP case, the issue was limited to the availability of medical examinations to all employees except for those engaged in health hazardous occupations. In this case the parties have made clear that the dispute about the negotiability of these two provisions is limited to medical examinations provided to employees in health hazardous occupations. In view of the fact that Corps of Engineers, Kansas City did not address the issue presented in this case, the Agency's argument that the petition in this case is moot is rejected.

B. Conflict with Government-wide Rule or Regulation

The Agency contends that OSHA regulations require that employees participate in the medical examinations provided and that under the regulations the Agency is entitled to access to the results of the examinations.

As the Agency has noted, the standards or regulations which OSHA has promulgated are voluminous. In making its determination as to this Agency contention, the Authority has relied on only those portions of the OSHA regulations which relate to those hazards and matters which the Agency has specifically cited as relevant to its circumstances; that is, exposure to lead and asbestos and use of respirators. If other portions of the OSHA regulations are relevant to the circumstances present in the Agency, it is the responsibility of the parties to bring them to the Authority's attention. National Federation of Federal Employees Local 1167 v. FLRA, 681 F.2d 886 at 891 (D.C. Cir. 1982), affirming National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574 (1981).

Where employees are exposed to specified levels of asbestos and lead in the course of their duties, all that is required by the OSHA regulations is that the Agency provide or make available at its cost medical examinations to those employees. 29 CFR 1910.1001(j) (asbestos) and 29 CFR 1910.1025(j) (lead). In issuing the lead standard,[2] OSHA specifically rejected making participation in the medical surveillance program mandatory for employees.[3] OSHA cited, among other things, "substantial personal privacy and religious concerns involved in health care matters" as a consideration in rejecting mandatory employee participation in medical surveillance. 43 Fed. Reg. 52952, 52973-4 (1978). See United Steelworkers of America v. Marshall, 647 F.2d 1189, 1237-8 (D.C. Cir. 1980), cert. denied sub nom. Lead Industries Assn., Inc. v. Donovan, Secretary of Labor, 453 U.S. 913 (1981). The Authority, therefore, concludes that OSHA regulations involving exposure to lead and asbestos which require an employer (or agency) to provide or make available medical examinations do not mandate that employees be compelled to participate in these examinations. See Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO v. Hodgson, 499 F.2d 467, 485 n.45 (D.C. Cir. 1974) where the court, in addressing the legality of an OSHA asbestos standard, noted that employee participation in medical examinations is entirely voluntary.

Moreover, neither do the OSHA regulations which govern respirator use mandate employee participation in medical examinations. The OSHA regulations which generally deal with respirator use do not specifically require employees to participate in medical examinations. 29 CFR 1910.134. The standards relating to exposure to specific hazardous substances also contain provisions regarding the use of respirators. The language in both the asbestos and lead standards which address respirator use reflects the overall approach in those standards that participation in medical surveillance programs is voluntary on the part of the employees. 29 CFR 1910.1001(d) and 1910.1025(f). See Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO v. Hodgson, 499 F.2d 467, 485 (D.C. Cir. 1974) where the court noted that results of employee physical examinations were a consideration in assigning employees to jobs requiring the use of respirators but that the examinations were entirely voluntary insofar as employees were concerned.

[3] The explanatory material accompanying the issuance of that standard states:

> Upon completion of initial air monitoring, the employer must begin the medical surveillance program for all covered employees. The standard does not make participation in the medical surveillance program mandatory for the employee. The employer's obligation is to "provide" and "make available" the medical tests and procedures as required. Where employee confidence in the medical program exists, refusal to participate should be minimal. (See discussion of mandatory medical examinations in the M[edical] R[emoval] P[rotection] Attachment.)

43 Fed. Reg. 52952, 52996 (1978).

Based on the foregoing, the Agency's argument that Provision 1 conflicts with OSHA regulations cannot be sustained.

As to Provision 2, a different conclusion is in order. In agreement with the Agency, the Authority finds that Provision 2 does conflict with the OSHA standards or regulations. Those regulations are set forth in 29 CFR Part 1910.4/ They apply to Federal employees and agencies in general and, therefore, are Government-wide regulations. See National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 748 (1980). Those regulations generally require employers (or agencies in the case of the Federal government) to maintain records for employees subject to medical surveillance for a specified period of time. See, for example, 29 CFR 1910.1001(j)(6) and 29 CFR 1910.1025(n)(2). By denying the Agency access to medical records flowing from the medical surveillance program, Provision 2 would prevent the Agency from fulfilling its obligations under those regulations to maintain the required records.5/

C. Conflict with Federal Statute

By allowing employees to decline to undergo medical examinations, the Agency argues that Provision 1 would prevent it from fulfilling its obligation under the Act to

4/ Although 29 CFR 1960.17 permits adoption by agencies of alternate standards, this adoption is subject to the approval of the Secretary of Labor. There is no indication here that any alternate standards have been adopted.

5/ In ruling on the validity of the OSHA standard for exposure to asbestos, the court in Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO v. Hodgson, supra, has upheld the requirement in that standard that employers have access to the records of medical examinations conducted on employees.

keep adequate records of occupational accidents and illnesses. Consequently, it asserts that Provision 1 conflicts with the Act itself. No provision of the Act requires employees to undergo medical examinations. Moreover, as discussed earlier, the Secretary of Labor, who is responsible for setting the OSHA standards and for overseeing the administration of the Act in the Federal sector, has not construed the Act to require employees to participate in medical examinations. Therefore, the Agency's contention that Provision 1 conflicts with the Act is rejected.[6/]

However, as to Provision 2, we have concluded above that preventing Agency access to the records of medical examinations effectively interferes with the Agency's ability to maintain records of its required medical surveillance program. These record keeping requirements flow from the Act itself as well as the regulations. 29 U.S.C. § 668. Because of this, the Authority concludes that Provision 2 conflicts with 29 U.S.C. § 668 -- a Federal statute.

6/ We note that subsequent to the Agency head's disapproval of provision 1 in this case, the Office of Personnel Management amended the medical examination provision at 5 C.F.R. Chapter 1, Part 329, by promulgating 5 C.F.R. Chapter I, Part 339, Subpart B - Medical Examinations. Section 339.301(a) provides that:

> An agency may require an individual who has applied for or occupies a position which has physical/medical standards for selection or retention, or which is part of an established program of medical surveillance related to occupations or environmental exposure or demands, to report for a medical evaluation.

Since these regulations were not in effect when the agreement in question was executed, nor when the provision at issue was disapproved, they could not be controlling in this case. We therefore expressly reserve judgment as to what, if any, relevance or impact these regulations may have in cases arising after they went into effect.

D. Conflict with an Agency Regulation for which a Compelling Need Exists

As to Provision 1, the Agency asserts that the requirement in its Agency regulations for mandatory participation by employees in medical examinations is necessary to its achievement of a safe and healthful work environment. It concludes that this objective is essential to the accomplishment of its mission, and therefore its regulations meet the illustrative standard for determining compelling need set forth at section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules.

In the Authority's view, however, the Agency has not demonstrated that mandatory (as opposed to voluntary) employee participation in medical examinations is essential (as opposed to helpful or desirable) to the accomplishment of its responsibility to provide employees with a safe and healthful working environment. The Agency has not shown that voluntary participation by employees in medical examinations coupled with the implementation of the various other monitoring, control, and protective requirements set forth in the OSHA standards is not sufficient to allow it to fulfill its obligations with respect to assuring a safe and healthful work environment. See 29 CFR 1910.1001 and 1910.1025. Thus, the Agency has not shown that its regulations meet the "essential" standard set forth in section 2424.11(a) of the Authority's Rules and Regulations. See, for example, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2875 and Department of Commerce, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, National Marine Fisheries Service, Southeast Fisheries Center, Miami Laboratory, Florida, 5 FLRA 441 (1981) (Union Proposal 4).

With respect to the criterion found at section 2424.11(c), the Agency asserts that the DoD and Army regulations constitute a nondiscretionary implementation of a mandate of binding Government-wide regulations, that is, the OSHA regulations. However, the OSHA regulations do not require employees to participate in medical examinations. Therefore, the Agency's contention that Provision 1 conflicts with regulations which meet the compelling need standard set forth in section 2424.11(c) is rejected.

The Agency makes the same arguments as to its need for its regulatory provisions which allow it access to the results of the medical examinations conducted on employees. Because the OSHA regulations and the Act do require Agency access, it follows that the Agency's regulations reflecting this requirement are essential to the accomplishment of its mission and function and also implement, in a nondiscretionary manner, a mandate to the Agency under law. Therefore, we conclude that Provision 2 conflicts with an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists.

V. Conclusion

The Authority finds that the petition is not moot. We further find that Provision 1 does not conflict with the Occupational Safety and Health Act, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations, or an agency regulation for which a compelling need exists. It is within the duty to bargain. Provision 2 interferes with the Agency's obligation under the Occupational Safety and Health Act and the Occupational Safety and Health Administration regulations to maintain specified records. It, therefore, conflicts with a Federal law and a Government-wide rule or regulation. Additionally, it conflicts with agency regulations for which a compelling need exists. It is not within the duty to bargain.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency head shall rescind his disapproval of Provision 1 which was bargained on and agreed to by the parties at the local level.[7] IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the Union's petition for review insofar as it relates to Provision 2 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

The petition for review in this case comes before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). It raises issues concerning the negotiability of three alternative proposals presented by the Union involving the payment by the Agency of travel and per diem expenses to employees when engaged in representational activities.

II. Union Proposals

Alternative Proposal Number 1

> During the term of the Agreements, the Agency will pay the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives participating: (1) on the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety Committees; (2) in consultations at the National Level; (3) in negotiations at the Local level; and (4) in mutually agreed upon meetings and visits to resolve disputes under Article 28, Section 3(a), paragraphs 1 and 2.

Alternative Proposal Number 2

> (a) During the term of the Agreements, the participation of the NLRBU in the activities of the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety

Committees will be considered to be in the primary interest of the government by the Agency and the Agency will pay the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives serving on such committees.

(b) During the term of the Agreements, the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of the NLRBU employee representatives when they attend consultations (at the National level), engage in negotiations at the Local level, or in mutually agreed upon meetings and visits to resolve disputes under Article 28, Section 3(a), paragraphs 1 and 2, will be considered to be in the primary interest of the government by the Agency and the Agency will pay such expenses.

Alternative Proposal Number 3

(a) During the term of the Agreements, when the Agency determines that the participation of the NLRBU in the scheduled activities of the Incentive Awards, EEO and Health and Safety Committees is in the primary interest of the government, the Agency will pay the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives serving on such committees.

(b) During the term of the Agreements, when the Agency determines that the payment of the travel and per diem expenses of NLRBU employee representatives participating in consultations (at the National level), engaged in negotiations at the Local level, or in mutually agreed upon meetings and visits to resolve disputes under Article 28, Section 3(a), paragraphs 1 and 2, is in the primary interest of the government, the Agency will pay such expenses.

III. Positions of the Parties

As explained by the Union, Alternative Number 1 seeks to obligate the Agency to pay the travel and per diem expenses of field office Union employee representatives who by law and agreement are entitled to official time under the circumstances described in the proposal. In presenting this Alternative, the Union states that it presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to the "primary interest test."[1/] The Union states further that Alternative Number 2 is intended to apply only if Alternative Number 1 is determined to be nonnegotiable because a "primary interest test" must be made in order for travel and per diem expenses to be paid. Finally, Alternative Number 3 is intended to apply only if Alternative Numbers 1 and 2 are determined to be nonnegotiable because a primary interest test must be made and such a test is in the sole discretion of the Agency to make.

The Agency contends that all of the Alternatives are nonnegotiable because the reimbursement of Federal employees for travel expenses is a matter specifically provided for by statute and thus is not a condition of employment within the meaning of section 7103(a)(14) of the Statute. The Agency also contends that Alternative Number 1 is nonnegotiable because it disregards the primary interest test and thus conflicts with law and Government-wide rules and regulations, and that Alternative Number 2 is nonnegotiable because the determination of primary interest cannot be made bilaterally or in advance of actual situations.

IV. Analysis

The Union's Alternative Proposals and the positions of the parties in this case are identical in effect to those at issue in National Labor Relations Board Union and National Labor Relations Board, The Board and Office of the General Counsel, 22 FLRA No. 50 (1986), also issued this day. There the Authority determined that all three Alternative Proposals concern a condition of employment based on the reasons set forth in U.S. Customs Service (see fn. 1).

[1/] The "primary interest test" refers to the Comptroller General's decision, 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966), interpreting the provisions of the Travel Expense Act, 5 U.S.C. §§ 5701, et seq., that an agency is not precluded from making payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it serves the convenience of the agency or is otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. For a complete discussion of the issue of the negotiability of the payment of travel and per diem expenses, see the Authority's lead decision, National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service, 21 FLRA No. 2 (1986), petition for review filed sub nom. Department of the Treasury, U.S. Customs Service v. FLRA, No. 86-1198 (D.C. Cir. March 27, 1986).

We also found that conformance with the requirements specified by the Comptroller General in administering and interpreting the Travel Expense Act is a necessary condition for finding that a proposal involving the payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances is negotiable. See U.S. Customs Service. The Comptroller General has stated that an agency is not precluded from making payment of travel expenses and per diem allowances to union representatives upon a determination that it serves the convenience of the agency or is otherwise in the primary interest of the Government. 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966). However, insofar as the Union specifies that Alternative Number 1 presupposes the negotiability of travel and per diem expenses without regard to the "primary interest test," the Authority agrees with the Agency's contention that this formulation of the proposal conflicts with law and Government-wide regulation.

As to the Agency's contention that Alternative Number 2 is nonnegotiable because the determination of primary interest cannot be made bilaterally or in advance of actual situations, the Authority must disagree. In U.S. Customs Service the Authority specifically found that determinations concerning whether to make payments for otherwise proper travel expenses and per diem allowances are within the discretionary administrative authority of an agency. Moreover, it is well-established that insofar as an agency has discretion regarding a matter affecting conditions of employment, it is obligated under the Statute to exercise that discretion through negotiations unless precluded by regulatory or statutory provisions. National Treasury Employees Union, Chapter 6 and Internal Revenue Service, New Orleans District, 3 FLRA 747, 759-60 (1980). In this case, the Agency has not cited any legal or regulatory provision which would absolutely prohibit it from exercising through negotiations the discretion which it possesses to determine whether, and under what circumstances, travel attendant to labor-management relations activities is in the primary interest of the Government.[2]

[2] We do not read the Comptroller General decision in 46 Comp. Gen. 21 (1966) as requiring that the primary interest determination can only be made on a case-by-case basis. Rather, an agency may in the context of collective bargaining determine in advance that certain representational activity is within the primary interest of the Government.

While the Authority found in U.S. Customs Service that the determination that such payments are in the primary interest of the Government is a necessary (and itself bargainable) condition for the negotiability of proposals requiring the payment of travel and per diem expenses, a primary interest determination is not the only condition for finding such proposals negotiable. As previously mentioned, such proposals must also be in conformance with all other applicable regulatory and statutory provisions. In this case the Agency does not contend that Alternative Number 2 would conflict with, for example, the requirements of the Federal Travel Regulations (FTRs) other than those relating to the determination of primary interest, or with any other applicable laws or regulations. The Authority notes that there is nothing in Alternative Number 2 or the submissions of the parties which indicates that its provisions are to be applied in any manner which is inconsistent with applicable legal and regulatory requirements. Alternative Number 2 would not require the Agency to use, for example, specific authorization procedures and practices relating to travel which conflicted with the FTRs. It would not foreclose individual determinations regarding the propriety under the FTRs of authorizing particular travel and expenses. Finally, to the extent that case-by-case determinations are required under law and regulation, this proposal would not be inconsistent with such procedures. See U.S. Customs Service.

V. Conclusion

The Authority finds that all three alternative formulations of the Union proposal concern a condition of employment. Alternative Number 1 conflicts with law and Government-wide regulation, and, therefore, is outside the duty to bargain. Alternative Number 2 is within the Agency's administrative discretion, and is not inconsistent with law or Government-wide regulation.3/ Therefore, it is within the duty to bargain.4/

3/ Here, as in National Labor Relations Board, The Board and Office of the General Counsel, the Authority finds it unnecessary to address further the negotiability of Alternative Number 3 given the result that Alternative Number 2 is negotiable.

4/ In finding Alternative Number 2 within the duty to bargain the Authority makes no judgment as to its merits.

VI. Order

Accordingly, pursuant to section 2424.10 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, IT IS ORDERED that the Agency shall upon request (or as otherwise agreed to by the parties) bargain concerning Union Alternative Proposal Number 2. Furthermore, IT IS ORDERED that the Union's petition for review as to Union Alternative Proposals 1 and 3 be, and it hereby is, dismissed.

DECISION AND ORDER

I. Statement of the Case

This unfair labor practice case is before the Authority because of limited exceptions filed by the Respondent to the attached Decision of the Administrative Law Judge. No exceptions were filed to the Decision and recommended Order of the Judge and they are not in dispute. The sole issue raised is whether the Judge's denial of the Respondent's motion to revoke two subpoenas, requested by the General Counsel, requiring the appearance of an employee at certain phases of the hearing in this case should be affirmed. The Respondent also filed a motion to consolidate this case with another which is currently pending before the Authority.

II. Background and Judge's Conclusion

Due to the geographical location of a large number of witnesses, the hearing in this case was held at three sites: Dayton, Ohio; Oklahoma City, Oklahoma; and Macon, Georgia, respectively. An employee, Paul Palacio, was subpoenaed, at the request of the General Counsel, to appear at each site. At all relevant times, Palacio was President of the Charging Party and assigned to the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Dayton, Ohio. At the opening of the Dayton phase of the hearing, the Respondent moved that the Judge revoke Palacio's subpoenas for the Oklahoma City and Macon phases of the hearing on the ground that the employee's testimony was not relevant to the proceeding at these locations. The Judge questioned the General Counsel and Palacio concerning the necessity for the employee's testimony at these sites and considered the Respondent's response. After hearing the arguments, the Judge denied the Respondent's motion to revoke, stating:

> I recognize . . . that in deciding whether a witness is necessary, I am not to superimpose my judgment for that of counsel trying a case. That counsel may have another witness that may or may not serve the same purpose. I don't think if the witness requested is reasonably related that I can say, no, I'm going to make you use someone else. I don't think my authority goes that far. I am not going to revoke the subpoena, but I will permit the subpoena to stand, because I think that Mr. Palacio is -- may reasonably be expected to have relevant information that can be admissible with respect to what happened at these other bases (Dayton Tr. 20-21).

With respect to the allegations of the complaint, the Judge concluded that the Respondent, by the conduct of certain supervisors, violated section 7116(a)(1) and (5) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute) by unilaterally implementing a quota system for rating employees under the Civilian Potential Appraisal System (CPAS) during the 1983 rating cycle, without giving the Charging Party notice of, and an opportunity to bargain over, procedures and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by the change.

III. Positions of the Parties

In its exceptions, the Respondent only takes issue with the Judge's denial of its motion to revoke two subpoenas, requested by the General Counsel, requiring Paul Palacio, an employee, to appear at the Oklahoma City, Oklahoma and Macon, Georgia sites of the hearing. More particularly, the Respondent argues that the Judge's determination that Palacio was a necessary witness constituted an abuse of his discretion. In support of such contention the Respondent essentially asserts that: (1) the General Counsel's basis for subpoenaing Palacio was vague; (2) the employee possessed only hearsay knowledge of the allegations litigated at the two sites; (3) local union officers were available and suitable as witnesses for the General Counsel; and (4) Palacio testified concerning his first-hand knowledge of the case during the Dayton phase of the hearing. Furthermore, the Respondent argues that the Judge's determination that Palacio was a necessary witness should have been subjected to a "reasonableness" test. The Respondent also moved to consolidate this case with Case No. 5-CA-40259.

In opposing the Respondent's exceptions, the General Counsel contends that the Respondent's brief misrepresented certain facts, and that the Judge's ruling must be affirmed because it is clearly supported by the Authority's Rules and Regulations as well as Authority precedent. The General Counsel also opposed the Respondent's motion to consolidate.

IV. Analysis

A. Motion to Consolidate

In its motion to consolidate this case with Case No. 5-CA-40259, which is currently pending before the Authority, the Respondent essentially contends that: consolidation would save time and money; the cases involve the same parties; and the exceptions in each case are based upon the same set of circumstances. The General Counsel, in opposing the consolidation of cases, argues there is no evidence or reasonable expectation that the consolidation of these cases, at this stage of the proceeding, would result in a "cheaper and quicker" disposition of the cases, especially when separate hearings have already been held, different Judges' decisions rendered, and exceptions filed with the Authority. Further, the General Counsel asserts that the unfair labor practice charges in the two cases are based on different circumstances which involve different and unrelated violations of the Statute.

The Authority denies the Respondent's motion to consolidate. In the Authority's view, there is no basis for concluding that, at this stage of the proceeding, the consolidation of Case No. 5-CA-30322 and Case No. 5-CA-40259, which arose from unfair labor practice charges based upon different circumstances, would result in any savings in time and money to the parties or the Authority, or that such consolidation would result in a quicker disposition of these cases.

B. Exceptions[1]

With respect to the Judge's ruling at issue, in Norfolk Naval Shipyard, Portsmouth, Virginia, 5 FLRA 788 (1981), the Authority held that "once an unfair labor practice hearing has convened and before the close of the hearing, . . . the [Judge] has the power under the Authority's Rules and Regulations to determine, subject to review by the Authority, whether the participation of any employee in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority is necessary . . . . "[2] Upon reviewing the record, the Authority notes, among other things, that a large number of individuals were tentatively scheduled to be called as witnesses by the Respondent; that the Judge ascertained from the General Counsel that given the large number of witnesses and the uncertainty of their testimony, Palacio was needed as someone who "might be able to rebut their testimony;" and

---

[1] In connection with its exceptions, the Respondent requests the Authority to take official notice of certain evidence contained in Case No. 5-CA-40259 mentioned above. The Authority, noting that the rulings and determination of the Judge were based upon the evidence presented in the proceeding before him, denies such request.

[2] Section 2429.13 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

> § 2429.13 Official time
> If the participation of any employee in any phase of any proceeding before the Authority, including the investigation of unfair labor practice charges and representation petitions and the participation in hearings and representation elections, is deemed necessary by the Authority, the General Counsel, any Administrative Law Judge, Regional Director, Hearing Officer, or other agent of the Authority designated by the Authority, such employee shall be granted official time for such participation. . . .

See also section 2429.7 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations which provides, in pertinent part, as follows:

that the Judge further ascertained from Palacio that he had been the individual who had dealt with management generally on the CPAS problem and was the individual who received complaints from the Charging Party's various regional and field representatives.[3] In view of these facts, the Authority finds that the evidence presented at the hearing, at the time of the Judge's ruling, demonstrates that the employee, as deemed by the Judge, was a necessary witness, and therefore the Judge did not abuse his discretion as alleged by the Respondent. Accordingly, the Judge's ruling in this regard is affirmed.

In rejecting the Respondent's contention that a "reasonableness" test be applied to the Judge's determination, the Authority notes that it has previously considered but rejected the application of a "reasonableness" standard to a determination, by an appropriate Authority agent, that an employee's participation in a particular Authority proceeding is necessary. See Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Department of the Treasury, Internal Revenue Service, Jacksonville District, 15 FLRA 506 (1984); Department of the Treasury, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, 13 FLRA 558 (1983); and Department of Health and Human Services, Social Security Administration, Great Lakes Program Service Center, 10 FLRA 510 (1982).

> § 2429.7 Subpenas.
> (d) [T]he . . . Administrative Law Judge . . . shall grant the request upon the determination that the testimony or documents appear to be necessary to the matters under investigation[.]
> (e) [T]he . . . Administrative Law Judge . . . shall revoke the subpena if the evidence the production of which is required does not relate to any matter under investigation or in question in the proceedings[.]

[3] The record reveals that the General Counsel later informed the Judge that Palacio would not appear at the Macon phase of the hearing.

V. Conclusion

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Statute, the Authority has reviewed the rulings of the Judge made at the hearing, finds that no prejudicial error was committed, and thus affirms those rulings. Specifically, the Authority affirms the Judge's ruling denying the Respondent's motion to revoke two subpoenas requiring the appearance of employee Paul Palacio at the Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, and Macon, Georgia phases of the hearing as the record supports the Judge's conclusion that the employee was a necessary witness. Further, upon consideration of the Judge's Decision and the entire record, and noting particularly that no exceptions were filed to the Judge's Decision or his recommended remedy, the Authority adopts the Judge's findings, conclusions and recommended Order.

ORDER

Pursuant to section 2423.29 of the Federal Labor Relations Authority's Rules and Regulations and section 7118 of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute, the Authority orders that the Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio shall:

1. Cease and desist from:

(a) Changing the working conditions of employees exclusively represented by Council 214, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, by using a numeric quota system for rating bargaining unit employees under the Civilian Potential Appraisal System, without first notifying the exclusive collective bargaining representative and bargaining, upon request, concerning procedures to be observed in implementing the system and appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected.

(b) In any like or related manner interfering with, restraining, or coercing its employees in the exercise of their rights assured by the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute.

2. Take the following affirmative action in order to effectuate the purposes and policies of the Statute:

(a) Bargain in good faith, upon request, with Council 214, American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, concerning procedures to be observed in implementing any system for the use of quotas in appraising employees in competitive action appraisal programs, and concerning appropriate arrangements for employees adversely affected by such a system.

(b) Require that the following supervisors reaccomplish any 1983 CPAS ratings for all employees who were adversely affected by the use of a quota system, and certify that the CPAS no longer reflects any such adverse effect:

> At Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, Col. James Havey, Jr., Lt. Col. Reginald P. Gibson, Captain Helen Brinerd, Joanne Wells, and Captain Joseph Zelasco; at Hill AFB, Utah, Allen W. Meyer, Secundino Martinez, Neil Peterson, Russell Lawrence, Robert Parks, M.C. Hurd and James P. Kretzmann; at Warner Robins AFB, Georgia, Gordon H. Brantley; at McClellan AFB, California, Bernard T. Sakamoto, Jackson W. Lytal, Richard Steele, Lt. Col. John Peterson, John W. Huston, Beverly Woodward, Charles Richins, Gary C. Crowder, LaVelle Hopper, Horace Holmes and Robert Calvert; and at Tinker AFB, Oklahoma, Clayton Branton, Billie Coughran, James Dyer, and Donald Basinger.

(c) Post at its facilities at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, Hill AFB, Utah, Warner Robins AFB, Georgia, McClellan AFB, California, and Tinker AFB, Oklahoma, copies of the attached Notice on forms to be furnished by the Federal Labor Relations Authority. Upon receipt of such forms, they shall be signed by the Commander, Air Force Logistics Command, or a designee, and shall be posted and maintained for 60 consecutive days thereafter in conspicuous places, including all bulletin boards and other places where notices to employees are customarily posted. Reasonable steps shall be taken to insure that such Notices are not altered, defaced, or covered by any other material.

(d) Pursuant to section 2423.30 of the Authority's Rules and Regulations, notify the Regional Director, Region V, Federal Labor Relations Authority, in writing, within 30 days from the date of this Order, as to what steps have been taken to comply with the Order.

Issued, Washington, D.C., July 11, 1986.

DECISION AND ORDER ON NEGOTIABILITY ISSUES

I. Statement of the Case

This case is before the Authority because of a negotiability appeal filed under section 7105(a)(2)(E) of the Federal Service Labor-Management Relations Statute (the Statute). The appeal concerns the negotiability of eleven Union proposals.[1] The proposals cover the impact of the Agency's institution of a pre-college program, assignment of work space, introduction of Indian-related materials into class instruction, and changing of work schedules.

II. Union Proposal 1

> ACT scores as well as placement tests shall be used to initially place students in the pre-college program.

---

[1] The Agency agreed to negotiate concerning one additional Union proposal. After filing its appeal, the Union agreed that another proposal was nonnegotiable. Consequently, these two proposals are no longer before the Authority.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 1 would require it to negotiate concerning the educational policy of Haskell Indian Junior College in violation of its right under section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute to determine the means and manner by which its mission will be carried out. The Agency also contends that the proposal exceeds the scope of its obligation to negotiate over the impact and implementation of a change in conditions of employment and does not concern a condition of employment of unit employees.

The Union states that the intent of the proposal is to more accurately place students in the appropriate level of course work. Since, according to the Union, the improper placement of students increases an instructor's workload, the Union contends that the Agency's placement policy has an adverse impact on bargaining unit employees and that the Agency is therefore required to negotiate concerning the impact of its policy.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

Section 7106(b)(1) of the Statute provides that, unless the agency elects to do so, an agency's duty to bargain with a labor organization over conditions of employment does not extend to those matters which involve the technology, methods, and means of performing work. National Treasury Employees Union and U.S. Customs Service, Region VIII, San Francisco, California, 2 FLRA 254, 258-59 (1979). The Authority has consistently held that those matters which directly and integrally relate to the accomplishment of the mission of the agency fall within the meaning of performing work under section 7106(b)(1). Panama Canal Federation of Teachers, Local 29 and Department of Defense Dependents Schools, Panama Region, 19 FLRA No. 99, slip op. at 2-3 (1985); American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO and Air Force Logistics Command, Wright-Patterson Air Force Base, Ohio, 2 FLRA 603 (1980) (Union Proposals VIII and IX), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945(1982).

The Union's proposal would require the Agency to use ACT scores in addition to the current method of using placement tests to place students in the pre-college program. The record in this case indicates that the mission of Haskell Indian Junior College is the education of its students. This mission necessarily requires the Agency to determine the appropriate level of course work in which to place students in order to best educate them. The Agency has determined that the establishment of a pre-college program to address the deficiencies of developmental students would help it to better accomplish its mission. Agency's Statement of Position at 1-5. The criteria used to place students in the pre-college program thus directly and integrally relate to the accomplishment of the Agency's mission, and, therefore, constitute methods and means of performing the Agency's work under section 7106(b)(1). Since the Union's proposal would require the Agency to negotiate concerning its placement policy, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 1 is contrary to the Agency's right under section 7106(b)(1) to determine the methods and means of performing work.

The Union contends that the proposal is intended to place students more accurately. The Union has not presented any evidence that the Agency's current placement policy results in students being improperly placed; therefore, it has not demonstrated that the policy adversely impacts upon bargaining unit employees. Accordingly, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 1 is outside the duty to bargain. In view of our decision that the proposal violates management's rights, it is unnecessary to determine whether the proposal is also outside the duty to bargain because it does not concern a condition of employment.

III. Union Proposals 2 and 3

Proposal 2

Enrollment statistics should not be used to evaluate instructional positions.

Proposal 3

Enrollment statistics should not be used negatively against employees in the performance appraisal process.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency treats these proposals separately. It argues that Proposal 2 addresses the assignment of instructors to courses and design of curriculum. It maintains that such a proposal preempts its right to determine the means and methods by which the mission will be accomplished. The Agency also states that the proposal would affect the number of employees assigned to a shift or tour of duty or a project.

The Agency contends that Proposal 3 requires negotiation over performance elements and standards in violation of management's rights.

The Union's contentions on both proposals concentrate on the use of statistics in the performance context. The Union maintains that course enrollment tends to be a matter beyond an instructor's control. It states declines in enrollment should not be used against employees in the appraisal process. It argues that the proposals do not violate management's rights.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The Authority has held that proposals which would have prohibited an agency from considering backlogs as a factor in rating and evaluating employee performance were outside the duty to bargain since they would eliminate a specific element from the performance appraisal process in violation of management's rights to direct employees and assign work under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, National Council of Social Security Payment Center Locals and Social Security Administration, Office of Program Service Centers, Baltimore, Maryland, 7 FLRA 818, 820-21 (1982) (Union Proposals 6 and 7), citing the reasoning set forth in National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 768 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982). Proposals 2 and 3 would effectively prohibit the Agency from considering enrollment statistics as a factor in evaluating an instructor's performance.

The Union contends that the proposal can be distinguished from the proposals in SSA, Office of Program Service Centers because the word "should" in the present proposals vests the Agency with discretion on whether and how the provisions should be applied. However, the proposals would still violate management's rights under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) to identify critical elements and establish performance standards by imposing a substantive limitation on the Agency's exercise of those rights. In American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3483 and Federal Home Loan Bank Board, New York District Office, 13 FLRA 446, 450-52 (1983), the Authority rejected the union's contention that the phrase "to the extent practicable" removes the substantive limitation that the proposal would have placed on agency's right to identify critical elements. Similarly, the Authority rejected a union contention that the phrase "to the maximum extent possible" leaves the agency with discretion to exercise its right to assign work "without inhibition." American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, National Border Patrol Council and Department of Justice, Immigration and Naturalization Service, 16 FLRA 251, 252 (1984).

The Union also contends that the duty to bargain extends to the proposals because course enrollment tends to be a matter beyond the control of the individual instructor and should, therefore, not be used to evaluate performance. The Authority has held in American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2849 and Office of Personnel Management, New York Regional Office, 7 FLRA 571, 575-76 (1982) (Union Proposal 3) and American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 3804 and Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, Chicago Region, Illinois, 7 FLRA 217, 223-25 (1981) (Union Proposal 2) that proposals requiring performance standards to make allowances for factors beyond the control of employees are within the duty to bargain. However, the Authority also found that the language of the proposals in those cases would have provided a general, nonquantitative standard by which the application of performance standards established by management could be evaluated in a subsequent grievance. OPM, New York Regional Office, 7 FLRA at 576; FDIC, Chicago Region, 7 FLRA at 224. In terms of this case, rather than establishing such a "general nonquantitative standard," Union Proposals 2 and 3 would require the Agency to negotiate concerning a specific element of its performance standards--whether enrollment statistics should be a factor. Since the proposal would prohibit the Agency from considering course enrollment statistics in appraising an instructor's performance whether or not enrollment is a relevant factor, the Union's proposals are materially different from the proposals found negotiable in OPM, New York Regional Office and FDIC, Chicago Region.

Union Proposals 2 and 3 are outside the duty to bargain in that they would require the Agency to negotiate concerning the identification of critical elements and content of performance standards in violation of management's rights to assign work and direct employees under section 7106(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the Statute. Again, because of our findings, it is unnecessary to address the Agency's remaining arguments.

IV. Union Proposals 4 and 5

Proposal 4

If a class has five students or less in enrollment, then the instructor shall have the option of closing that section of the course with the approval of their supervisor.

Proposal 5

If instructors end up with lower than their normal teaching assignment due to low enrollment, then any assignment or additional duties shall be related to their position and shall be made as fairly as possible.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency contends that proposals 4 and 5 interfere with management's right to assign work and determine the means and methods by which its mission will be carried out.

The Union maintains that the proposals assure equitable assignments. It also states that the "fairly as possible" language mirrors language in the furlough section of the Master Agreement.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

In National Treasury Employees Union and Department of the Treasury, Bureau of the Public Debt, 3 FLRA 768, 775 (1980), aff'd sub nom. National Treasury Employees Union v. FLRA, 691 F.2d 553 (D.C. Cir. 1982), the Authority stated that management's right under section 7106(a) of the Statute to assign work encompasses duties and work to be assigned as well as the particular employees to whom or positions to which the work will be assigned. Union Proposal 4 would delegate to the instructor the discretion otherwise vested in the Agency to initiate the process of deciding whether a particular class should be offered and, consequently, what duties and work will be assigned to that employee. The Authority has held that proposals which would involve an exclusive representative in the deliberative process by which management makes decisions on matters within the discretion of the agency themselves violates management's rights. A proposal involving the exclusive representative in the deliberative process on contracting out determinations was rejected in National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 and Department of the Air Force, Headquarters, 31st Combat Support Group (TAC), Homestead Air Force Base, Florida, 6 FLRA 574, 579-80 (1981), aff'd sub nom. National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1167 v. FLRA, 681 F.2d 886 (D.C. Cir. 1982). In National Association of Government Employees, Local R14-89 and Department of the Army, Headquarters, U.S. Army Defense Center and Fort Bliss, Texas, 15 FLRA 14, 15 (1984), the Authority rejected a proposal permitting union participation in the process of determining when additional work will be assigned as a violation of the agency's rights to direct employees and assign work. Proposal 4 would delegate to employees the decisions otherwise reserved to management on whether a class section would be offered. This violates the Agency's right under section 7106(a) to determine the particular duties and work to be assigned and is outside the duty to bargain.

Union Proposal 5 would require the Agency to ensure that duties beyond an instructor's normal teaching assignment be related to the instructor's position. In National Federation of Federal Employees, Local 1622 and Department of the Army, Headquarters, Vint Hill Farms Station, Warrenton, Virginia, 16 FLRA 578, 580-81 (1984), the Authority held that a proposal which would have prevented the agency from assigning "additional or incidental duties to employees which are inappropriate to their positions or qualifications" violated management's right to assign work in that the agency would be prohibited from requiring employees to perform certain duties.

The addition of the "as fairly as possible" language to Proposal 5 does not alter the conclusion that the proposal is outside the duty to bargain. A proposal requiring that the assignment of additional duties be made "fairly" would include a general, nonquantitative standard by which an agency's exercise of its reserved authority to assign work could be evaluated in a subsequent grievance. See National Association of Air Traffic Specialists and Department of Transportation, Federal Aviation Administration, 6 FLRA 588, 597-99 (1981) (Union Proposal VII). Union Proposal 5, however, is not limited to such a "general nonquantitative standard," but would also expressly prohibit the Agency from assigning duties to an instructor which are not related to the instructor's position in violation of the Agency's right under section 7106(a) of the Statute to assign work.

V. Union Proposal 6

The addition of staff in the Skills Center has resulted in a lack of adequate working space for those employees involved. These Skills Center employees should be involved in discussions regarding options on how to alleviate their problems.

A. Positions of the Parties

The Agency asserts it has no obligation to negotiate over this matter because it does not agree that space is inadequate. Even so, the Agency maintains the issue is moot since ongoing discussions have taken place with the union and employees.

The Union argues that the addition of staff has resulted in a change in a condition of employment which is negotiable.

B. Analysis and Conclusion

Union Proposal 6 neither obligates the Agency to agree that a workspace problem exists nor requires it to remedy any problem should there be one. Instead, the Union's proposal merely requires the Agency to provide a forum for discussing with employees the effect of the hiring of additional workers. See, e.g., American Federation of Government Employees, Local 12, AFL-CIO and Department of Labor, 17 FLRA 674, 676-77 (1985) (Union Proposal 3), petition for review filed sub nom. Local 12, American Federation of Government Employees v. FLRA, No. 85-1371 (D.C. Cir. June 19, 1985).

In an analogous situation, the Authority held that a union proposal to establish a joint labor-management committee to develop the agency's training program was a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 2761 and U.S. Department of the Army, U.S. Army Adjutant General, Publication Center, St. Louis, Missouri, 14 FLRA 438 (1984). The Authority found that the committee would serve as a forum through which the union could express its views regarding the agency's training programs but would not require the agency to negotiate concerning the content of those programs.

The discussions which have already taken place with respect to conditions at the Skills Center do not render the proposal moot. The Union contends and the Agency does not dispute that the parties have not reached agreement with respect to continuing discussions concerning the Skills Center. Thus, the Authority concludes that Union Proposal 6 constitutes a negotiable procedure under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute and falls within the Agency's duty to bargain.

VI. Union Proposal 7

> If physical moves are necessary with regard to the Skills Center as determined by management, then management will provide the necessary manpower to assist in moving heavier items.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency contends that Union Proposal 7 would prohibit the Agency from assigning employees at the Skills Center to any duties in connection with potential moves in violation of management's right under section 7106(a)(2)(B) of the Statute to assign employees and assign work. It also contends that the proposal is moot since the Agency is committed to helping affected employees.

The Union states that the proposal would secure assistance for employees on moving bulky items.

B. Analysis and Conclusions

The language of the proposal as well as the Union's statement of intent with regard to Union Proposal 7[2] indicate that the proposal does not preclude management from assigning move-related duties to Skills Center employees, but merely would require that the Agency provide any necessary assistance in the event of such a move. Therefore, the proposal does not interfere with the Agency's exercise of its discretion with respect to its rights under section 7106 of the Statute. Rather, the Agency has the discretion to determine whether to move and, if so, what assistance, if any, is "necessary." Union Proposal 7 constitutes a procedure to be observed by Agency officials in exercising the aforementioned rights, and is, therefore, negotiable under section 7106(b)(2) of the Statute. See American Federation of Government Employees, AFL-CIO, Local 1999 and Army-Air Force Exchange Service, Dix-McGuire Exchange, Fort Dix, New Jersey, 2 FLRA 152, 154 (1979), enforced sub nom. Department of Defense v. FLRA, 659 F.2d 1140 (D.C. Cir. 1981), cert. denied sub nom. AFGE v. FLRA, 455 U.S. 945 (1982).

[2] Attachment 5 to Union's Petition for Review at 2.

The Agency's contention that the proposal has been satisfied and is, therefore, moot, is not substantiated by the record. There is no evidence of agreement between the parties on the proposal or of assistance having been rendered in any moves which may have taken place.

VII. Union Proposal 8

> If management determines that the Skills Center or other areas of campus are to remain open for extended periods of time, then management should take necessary steps to provide for protection of employees and for property located within these areas.

A. Position of the Parties

The Agency asserts that the proposal concerns internal security practices which are the sole concern of the Agency under section 7106(a)(1) of the Statute.

The Union maintains that better steps should be developed to avoid loss of Government property and employee belongings although management would retain the final decision on what the steps would be.

B. Analysis and Conclusion
